PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 78th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 14, 1943

(Legislative day of Wednesday, May 12, 1943)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, whose truest words to us are heard in the silences of the soul, give Thy servants quiet hearts and open minds lest while we are busy here and there we miss the vision splendid. May the fret and fever of our own spirits not add to the confusion of a confused age instead of helping and healing.

Lift us, we pray Thee, above the foggy valley of narrow loyalties and partisan interests to vaster vistas where small things are seen as small, and great things as great. In all our attitudes and decisions give us perspective and horizon. Remove far from us even unconscious bigotries and antipathies. Help us to recognize truth and to welcome revelation, from whatever quarter they arise. Disappointed with ourselves, shamed by our sins, defeated by life, haunted by fears, wounded by the world, we would find strength in Thy presence, forgiveness in Thy grace, cleansing in Thy mercy, and victory in Thy love. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, May 13, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT OF NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD—STABILIZATION OF WAGES, ETC.

A letter from the Chairman of the National War Labor Board, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 130 (submitted by Mr. BYRD; agreed to April 9, 1943), a report on wage increases and adjustments covering the period from January 12, 1942, to March 31, 1943, not including any analysis of the effects of Executive Order 9238, of April 8, 1943 (with accompanying papers); ordered to lie on the table.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

A letter from the Administrator of the War Food Administration, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to continue Commodity Credit Corporation as an agency of the United States, increase its borrowing power, revise the basis of the annual appraisal of its assets, and to provide for an audit by the General Accounting Office of the financial transactions of the Corporation, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 40

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to enact legislation to establish a military and a naval academy on the Pacific coast

"Whereas the United States is to have a great Army and Navy and will need twice and three times the number of officers that West Point Military Academy and Annapolis Naval Academy can produce because these institutions have reached the limit of expansion at their present sites, cannot provide needed room for airplanes to fly and tanks to maneuver and cannot teach adequately more students than they have taught in the past; and

"Whereas there are many miles of coast along the Pacific which would afford the country ideal locations for both a military and a naval academy; and

"Whereas world conditions and the war have made it advisable that cadets and midshipmen can be made familiar with the Pacific coast as well as with the Atlantic coast; and

"Whereas Army and Navy traditions could be maintained by having cadets and midshipmen receive their first 2 years of training on the Pacific coast and complete their training at West Point or Annapolis and in so doing become familiar with the west coast and the Pacific as well as with the east coast and the Atlantic: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized immediately to enact legislation to establish a military and a naval academy on the Pacific coast; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully requested to urge such action."

Two joint resolutions of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution relative to old-age assistance

"Whereas it is the desire of the Legislature of California to make sufficient provision for the needy aged of this State; and

"Whereas prior to July 1, 1941, the old-age-security law of California permitted a recipient of aid to receive up to $15 per month from certain specified sources, including the earnings of the recipient, without deduction thereof from the amount of his aid, and it was with the greatest reluctance that the Legislature of California in 1941 amended the California law to deny the aged this privilege, which amendment was made solely to enable the State to comply with the Federal Social Security Act as that act was construed by the Federal Social Security Board, and so to continue to receive Federal old-age assistance; and the Legislature of California believes that this privilege should be afforded to the aged, and that the withdrawal of the privilege was hasty and ill-advised; and

"Whereas at the present time a recipient of aid in California may receive income in addition to the aid only by showing excess need therefor, and submitting to the most detailed and onerous supervision of his personal budget, and so is discouraged from engaging in gainful employment despite the well-recognized need for the maximum utilization of the services of every American in the furtherance of the war effort; and

"Whereas the maximum amount of old-age assistance granted to an eligible aged person which the Government of the United States will recognize for the purpose of reimbursing the State to the extent of one-half of the assistance granted is $40, which sum is entirely inadequate under present conditions to provide an aged person with the necessities of life or permit him to maintain a proper standard of living: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized to amend the Federal Social Security Act to provide for Federal participation at the present rate in the payment of aid in the amount of $60 to any eligible individual in any month, or, if this is not possible, to amend the Federal Social Security Act to permit the State agency, in determining need, not to take into consideration other income and resources of an individual claiming old-age assistance to the extent of $20, or such greater sum as the President and Congress may determine to be proper and just; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"Assembly Joint Resolution 32

"Joint resolution relative to auditing the accounts of the department of employment

"Whereas the receipts and disbursements of the benefit fund of the State department of employment receiving vast sums of money from employers and employees of California have never been audited by any State or Federal agency; and

"Whereas the employers of this State, subject to the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, normally pay 2.7 percent of the wages paid by them, into the Treasury of the United States; and employees pay 1 percent of their wages to that source; and

"Whereas it is desirable and necessary that every agency of Government expending money have a periodical audit of its books and accounts; and

"Whereas the Federal Social Security Board has made no allowance to the State of California for auditing the accounts of the department of employment, and has declined, itself, to make such audits for the California department of employment or a similar department in any other State: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to pass such legislation as will make it mandatory upon the Social Security Board to allocate funds to the various States of the Union, and particularly to this State, for a proper audit under the supervision of the State department of finance, of the funds and accounts of the State department of employment; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk is hereby directed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, every Member of the Senate and House of Representatives from California, the Social Security Board, and every Governor and State legislature."

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

S. 1109. A bill to increase by $400,000,000 the amount authorized to be appropriated for defense housing under the act of October 14, 1940, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce and have appropriately referred a bill dealing with matters in relation to the Commodity Credit Corporation. I also request that the bill together with a letter written by the War Food Administrator, Department of Agriculture, to the Vice President, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and properly referred, and together with the letter referred to by the Senator from New York, printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1108) to continue Commodity Credit Corporation as an agency of the United States, increase its borrowing power, revise the basis of the annual appraisal of its assets, and to provide for an audit by the General Accounting Office of the financial transactions of the Corporation, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 107), as amended, is hereby amended by deleting from the first sentence thereof the term "31st of March" where that term first appears therein and substituting in lieu thereof the term "30th of June," and by deleting from the second sentence thereof "on the basis of the cost, including not more than 1 year of carrying charges, of such assets to the Corporation, or the average market prices of such assets for a period of 12 months ending with March 31 of each year, whichever is less," and inserting in lieu thereof "on the basis of the cost, or insofar as practicable, the average market price of such assets during the last month of the fiscal year covered by the appraisal, whichever is the lower." Only one appraisal of the assets and liabilities of the Corporation shall be made during the calendar year 1943 which shall be on the basis established by this amendment.

SEC. 2. Section 4 of the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 108), as amended, is hereby amended by deleting the term "$2,650,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the term "$3,650,000,000."

SEC. 3. Section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby amended by changing the designation thereof to section 7 (a) and by deleting from the first sentence thereof the term "June 30, 1943" and by inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1947, or the end of the second year following the 1st day of January immediately following the date upon which the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution declares that hostilities in the present war have terminated, whichever is the later"; and is further hereby amended by striking out the period at the end of the section and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "without regard to provisions of any other existing law relating to public funds: Provided, however, That the Corporation shall at all times maintain complete and accurate books of account and shall determine the procedures to be followed in the transaction of the corporate business.

"(b) The financial transactions of the Corporation beginning with the period from July 1, 1943, shall be audited by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles applicable to commercial corporate transactions and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That the Corporation shall continue to have the authority to make final and conclusive settlement and adjustment of any claims by or against the Corporation or the accounts of its fiscal officers: Provided further, That a report of such audit shall be made to the Congress, together with such recommendations as the Comptroller General may deem advisable, and that each such report shall cover a period of 1 fiscal year and shall not be made until the Corporation and the Secretary of Agriculture shall have had a reasonable opportunity, not to exceed 90 days, to examine the report, point out errors therein, explain or answer the same, and file a statement which shall be submitted by the Comptroller General with his report: Provided further, That a copy of each such report shall be furnished the Secretary of the Treasury and that the findings contained therein shall be considered by the Secretary in appraising the assets and liabilities and determining the net worth of the Corporation under sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 107), as amended: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying legislation authorizing the use of funds of the Corporation for administrative expenses and requiring accountability therefor.

"(c) The expenses of the audit as provided in this section may be paid up to and including June 30, 1945, from moneys advanced therefor by the Corporation, or from any appropriation or appropriations for the General Accounting Office, and appropriations so used shall be reimbursed promptly by the Corporation as billed by the Comptroller General: Provided, That any such advances or reimbursements shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses of the Corporation. For the purpose of such audit, the representatives of the General Accounting Office shall have access to all papers, books, files, accounts, financial records, warehouses, and all other things, property and places belonging to or under the control of or used or employed by the Corporation, and shall be afforded full facilities for verifying transactions with and balances in depositaries and with fiscal agents: Provided, That the certified financial reports and schedules of the fiscal agents of the Corporation based on commercial audits in the usual course of business may be accepted by the General Accounting Office in its audit of the financial transactions of the Corporation as final and not subject to further audit verification.

"(d) Any examination of the corporate records shall be made at the place or places where such records are normally kept in the transaction of the corporate business, and the Corporation shall retain custody of contracts, vouchers, schedules, or other financial or accounting documents, either original or duplicate, relating to its nonadministrative transactions."

SEC. 4. The Federal Reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The letter addressed by the War Food Administrator to the Vice President in relation to the bill is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, May 10, 1943.

The Honorable the VICE PRESIDENT.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: There is transmitted herewith, for the consideration of the Senate, a draft of a proposed bill relating to Commodity Credit Corporation, entitled, "A bill to continue Commodity Credit Corporation as an agency of the United States, increase its borrowing power, revise the basis of the annual appraisal of its assets, and to provide for an audit by the General Accounting Office of the financial transactions of the Corporation, and for other purposes."

The proposed legislation combines in one bill several matters of importance to Commodity Credit Corporation in order to bring them to the attention of Congress at one time.

The proposed bill provides for an increase of $1,000,000,000 in the authorized borrowing power of the Corporation. This additional borrowing power is needed in order to finance the activities of the Corporation as a war agency and to enable the Corporation to carry out loan, purchase and other operations relating to cotton, corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, peanuts, potatoes, butter, cheese, hemp, flax, naval stores, soybeans, vegetable seeds, sugar, vegetables for canning, wool, and other commodities and production facilities. These operations are designed to bring about the necessary production of commodities now vital to the war effort and to afford price support to the producers of such commodities.

By the act of May 26, 1941 (Public, No. 74, 77th Cong.), as amended, the Commodity Credit Corporation was required to make available loans at the rate of 85 percent of parity on the 1941 through 1946 crops of the basic commodities, corn, cotton, wheat, rice, tobacco, and peanuts. The act of October 2, 1942 (Public, No. 729, 77th Cong.), requires the Corporation to make available loans at the rate of 90 percent of parity upon any crop of the basic commodities harvested after December 31, 1941, and before the expiration of the 2-year period beginning with the 1st day of January immediately following the date upon which the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution declares that hostilities in the present war have terminated. Section 4 of the act of July 1, 1941 (Public, No. 147, 77th Cong.), the Steagall amendment, directs the use of funds available to Commodity Credit Corporation, if found necessary to encourage the expansion of production of any nonbase agricultural commodity, through a loan, purchase, or other operation, so as to support a price to the producers of such nonbasic agricultural commodity of not less than 85 percent of the parity or comparable price. The act of October 2, 1942, amended the Steagall amendment by increasing the minimum support price level to 90 percent of the parity or comparable price, and by requiring, as in the case of mandatory loans on the basic agricultural commodities, that the price supporting operation with respect to any commodity be continued for at least 2 full years after the termination of the war.

Since under the terms of the latest amendment of the act initially extending the life of the Corporation as an agency of the Federal Government, the status of the Corporation as an agency of the United States will expire on June 30, 1943, it seems necessary and appropriate to formally authorize the Corporation to continue as an agency of the United States during the period it is required to carry out loan, purchase, and other operations under the acts of Congress referred to above. Accordingly, the proposed bill provides that its status as an agency of the United States be continued until "June 30, 1947, or the end of the second year following the 1st day of January immediately following the date upon which the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution declares that hostilities in the present war have terminated, whichever is the later."

A revision of the basis of the annual Treasury appraisal of the Corporation is considered desirable in order to make the date of appraisal coincident with the end of the fiscal year, whichever is lower, rather than of the appraisal without sacrifice of sound accounting principles. The proposed basis is cost at the time of appraisal, or the average market values during the last month of the fiscal year, whichever is lower, rather than cost plus a year's carrying charges or the average market for 12 months, whichever is the lower. The Treasury Department has given informal assurance that it has no objection to these changes.

Further provisions of the bill relate to a proposal for an audit of the financial transactions of the Corporation by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles applicable to commercial corporate transactions. As a corporate agency of the United States, the transactions of Commodity Credit Corporation, other than administrative expense items, are not now audited and controlled by the General Accounting Office. Corporate capital fund transactions have been subject, however, to certain types of audit review, i. e., by examinations of the Federal Reserve banks and by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In addition, the United States Treasury has made annual appraisals of the net worth of the Corporation which are regularly reported to Congress. As the officers of the Corporation desire to secure an audit according to principles mutually satisfactory to the Comptroller General and the Corporation, the Secretary of Agriculture on November 28, 1942, wrote to the Comptroller General suggesting that a joint committee representative of both agencies be appointed to study and work out a recommended course of action to attain this objective. The Comptroller General agreed and a joint committee was appointed composed of three representatives of the Department of Agriculture and three representatives of the General Accounting Office. New legislation was deemed necessary since the General Accounting Office indicated that it does not have present legislative authority to make an audit of the type proposed. The committee held numerous meetings and after careful deliberations agreed that the legislation here proposed would be appropriate to suggest to the Congress. Both the General Accounting Office and the Corporation believe that the proposed legislation would provide an adequate type of audit for the financial transactions of the Corporation. Such an audit would serve to give to Congress a regular and official report of the fiscal affairs of the Corporation on which to appraise the discharge by the Corporation of its responsibilities.

The Comptroller General concurs in and approves that part of the proposed legislation relating to the audit. A copy of his letter of April 2, 1943, to the Secretary of Agriculture is attached.

Section 4 provides authority for the Federal Reserve banks to act as fiscal agents for the Corporation. At present, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation acts as fiscal agent for the Corporation, and the Federal Reserve banks, in turn, are employed as fiscal agents and depositories by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The proposed authorization would permit the direct use of the Federal Reserve banks by the Commodity Credit Corporation if that should become desirable. The Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System concurs in the recommendation of this section.

The passage of the proposed legislation is recommended.

The Bureau of the Budget advises that the proposed legislation is in harmony with the program of the President and it has no objection to the submission of the proposed bill and explanatory letter to the Congress for its consideration.

A similar letter is being sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sincerely,

CHESTER C. DAVIS, Administrator.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WAGNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place insert the following:

"EXPORTATION AND DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, there is hereby reappropriated for the fiscal year 1944 the unobligated balances of the funds made available for the purposes of such section 32 for the fiscal years 1942 and 1943. Such sums shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, other appropriations made by such section or for the purposes of such section: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, funds appropriated by or for the purposes of section 32 of said act shall be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the maintenance, expansion, and operation of a school milk and lunch program under clause (2) of said section 32, without regard to the requirement therein relating to the encouragement of domestic consumption."

MARBLE PEDESTAL FOR BUST OF FORMER VICE PRESIDENT GARNER

Mr. CONNALLY submitted the following Resolution 150, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol hereby is authorized to procure a marble pedestal for the bust in the Senate wing of the Capitol of former Vice President John N. Garner, the expense thereof, not exceeding $300, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library.

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a brief relating to the Chinese exclusion laws, prepared by James R. Wilmeth, national secretary of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, which appears in the Appendix.]

CURRENT PAYMENT OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 2570) to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to strike out section 6, beginning on page 97, line 12, and to incert in lieu thereof certain other words. Under the unanimous-consent order no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana or on any amendment proposed thereto.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, yesterday I had occasion to discuss the pending amendment to some extent, and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate a little while longer so that I may explain my proposal for the benefit of those who may not have been present yesterday.

As I stated on yesterday the effect of my amendment would be to strike from section 6 of the pending bill that portion of the section which would cancel taxes, and substitute therefor a method by which the taxes ior 1942 could be discharged by the taxpayer.

If my amendment should be adopted, there would be no cancelation whatever of any of the taxes. The pay-as-you-go plan as incorporated in the pending bill would remain as written. All the taxes paid by the taxpayer in 1943 under his 1942 tax bill would be applied to the 1943 taxes, and the rest of the taxes for 1943 would be paid from the 20 percent withheld which is to be made from the taxpayer's income from July 1 to December 31 of this year as provided for in the pending bill, and the payment of the taxes for 1942 would be spread over a period of 5 years. The first payment of the taxes for 1942 would be due on March 15. 1944, and the amount to be paid by each taxpayer each 6 months would be one-tenth of whatever his 1942 taxes amounted to. So that by paying on March 15, 1944, and every 6 months thereafter, one-tenth of the 1942 taxes, the entire tax bill of the taxpayer would be discharged in 5 years.

Mr. President, that would be the only effect of the amendment. As I said yesterday, it would be almost criminal for the Congress to enact a law forgiving any taxes at this time. We are not in a position to cancel taxes. The President, as well as the Secretary of the Treasury, advised us last year and this year that it would be necessary to increase the tax bill by $16,000,000,000.

Mr. BILBO. If the Senator will yield, does he propose that interest shall be charged on the deferred payments for the 5-year period?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; there is to be no interest so long as the taxpayer keeps his deferred payments current. Should he default as to any of his payments, then the remaining installments will become due and interest will be imposed thereon.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am very much impressed by the Senator's amendment. I am also impressed by the article which appeared in this morning's newspaper telling us that $16,000,000,000 is the amount of additional taxes under the Treasury program.

Listening to the debate which has taken place here for the past 2 or 3 days, it seems to me that the important thing is the withholding tax of 20 percent. According to the argument which has been made, it is important because there is fear that the wage earner and the salaried man may spend their wages and salaries before the Treasury gets its cut.

Mr. ELLENDER. I may say to the Senator that that was the genesis of the Ruml plan. It was an effort to put into the taxing net the salaried men and the vast number of new wage earners, and a smart idea was cooked up that in order to put us on a pay-as-you-go basis, that it would be necessary to cancel the taxes of those able to pay. Such cancelations, as I pointed out yesterday, ranged from over four to almost ten billions of dollars.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the Senator will bear with me a moment or two further, I wish to see if we cannot improve his amendment.

If we should adopt a withholding tax of 20 percent, what difference would it make to the Treasury whether it were paid on 1942 taxes or 1943 taxes? The dollars would roll into the Treasury exactly at the same time; they would come to the Treasury in the same quantity and number, whether we applied them on 1942 or 1943 taxes. The question then occurs to me, inasmuch as the Treasury is coming back to Congress later for additional taxes, why should we add the installments which the Senator from Louisiana contemplates in his amendment? Why not adopt the 20-percent withholding tax and let the law remain as it is?

Mr. ELLENDER. In other words, the effect of the Senator's suggestion would be that the taxes be discharged as they are now paid?

Mr. MURDOCK. Exactly as they are now paid.

Mr. ELLENDER. And add 20 percent?

Mr. MURDOCK. No. I do not mean to add 20 percent to them, but the idea of the 20-percent withholding tax, as I understand, is to reach the person who some are a little afraid might not pay his tax.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. If my suggestion is followed, and if we apply the 20-percent withholding tax under the present rate, and under the present tax, then we shall have accomplished the main thing that is desired by everyone, and we shall not forgive $9,000,000,000 in taxes, or add to the present burden. Is that not the proper solution of the question?

Mr. ELLENDER. That would be another way of doing it, but I propose to show that I think it is possible for most taxpayers to pay their normal taxes plus the one-fifth which I propose be paid in addition each year. Let us consider the plan which will be submitted by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. He proposes to forgive 75 percent of the taxes for 1 year, and he further proposes to spread the remaining 25 percent over a period of 2 years. In other words, the deferred tax of a taxpayer to the extent of one-quarter of the entire 1942 or 1943 tax, whichever is lower, will be spread over 2 years, whereas under my proposal the tax for 1942 would be spread over a period of 5 years.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the Senator yield for another observation?

Mr. ELLENDER. I have but 15 minutes. Of course, I may be able to take a little time in speaking on the bill, but I would rather not do so.

Mr. MURDOCK. I simply wish to make a brief observation. It seems to me that if the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] would get together on their two amendments we could then simplify what in my opinion is a very difficult situation.

Mr. ELLENDER. To continue my discussion, Mr. President, with respect to the so-called George amendment. Senators, listen to this. The amendment proposes to forgive 75 percent of the 1942 tax, or the 1943 tax, whichever is the lowest, and provide that the payment of the remaining 25 percent, that is one-quarter, shall be divided into two equal installments payable yearly. My amendment provides that the 1942 taxes shall be spread over a period of 5 years, and if I were to modify my amendment so as to make the period of payment 8 years instead of 5 years, the taxpayer would pay the same amount per year as he would under the George amendment. I feel confident that the distinguished Senator from Georgia has found it possible for a taxpayer to pay his normal taxes and one-eighth of the payments deferred as above set forth, otherwise he would not be advocating such a method. I believe that I can show that a taxpayer can pay each year his normal taxes and one-fifth of his 1942 taxes.

I realize that a few may suffer. There is a provision in the bill to the effect that in the event a taxpayer is unable to meet his taxes some discretion is left in the hands of the Commissioner to make an adjustment or ease his payments in some equitable and just manner.

Forgiveness of an entire year's taxes, as proposed in the Senate bill, involves the unjust enrichment of many individuals. For example, a married person with a net income before personal exemptions of $100,000 is forgiven a tax debt of $64,060. If his income is $1,000,000, he is forgiven a tax debt of $854,000. These reductions in liabilities result in an increase in the net worth of the individual just as truly as if these huge amounts had actually been bestowed upon the individual in the form of a gift in cash.

The benefits received from such forgiveness will be immediate as well as ultimate. Not only will the estate of these individuals at time of death be higher than they would have been without the tax cancelation, but these persons can immediately enjoy the fruits of cancelation. They can borrow against their improvement in net worth.

Another way of looking at this unjust enrichment is to compare the amount of tax forgiven with the amount of income remaining or available to these individuals after taxes. The taxpayer with $100,000 net income will have left $35,940 after present taxes. The amount forgiven under the Senate bill is 178.2 percent of the income after taxes. In the case of the $1,000,000 income the amount forgiven is 585 percent of the income available after taxes. Even if this individual were to save every cent of the income available after taxes, the amount forgiven would amount to about 6 years' savings.

Another way of looking at the unjust enrichment which complete cancelation bestows on the high-income receivers is to compare the amount forgiven with the tax increases which the Congress has enacted in 1940, 1941, and 1942, for the purpose of strengthening our national defense and preparing for war finance. For the person receiving $100,000 of net income before personal exemption, the tax increases under the acts of 1940, 1941, and 1942 amounted to $62,833, or over $1,000 less than the $64,060 which would be canceled under the Senate bill. For the $1,000,000-income receiver, the tax increases since 1939 amount to $267,006. The amount forgiven, $854,000, is more than three times as great as the entire tax increases since 1939.

Complete cancelation of a year's taxes, or 75 percent cancelation of a year's taxes, or any other substantial percent cancelation which applies uniformly up and down the scale, must inevitably bestow unjust enrichment upon the higher income receivers.

The Senate Finance Committee bill would cancel $9,815,000,000 of 1942 tax liabilities and would add to the 1943 net income tax liabilities certain amounts attributable to the so-called windfall provisions which, in the aggregate, amount to $1,300,000,000, leaving a net cancelation of $8,500,000,000. It is bad public policy—bad for the morale of the Nation—to relieve taxpayers of an incurred liability of $8,500,000,000 while at the same time our President is calling upon us to strengthen the revenues for the fiscal year 1944 by $16,000,000,000. The public debt of the United States stood at $144,000,000,000 on May 10 this year and it is estimated that it will reach over $200,000,000,000 by the end of the fiscal year 1944. Why should we not collect the 1942 liabilities already incurred and have them apply toward the reduction of the public debt which, despite any revenue measures we can take during this war emergency, will almost certainly climb to $300,000,000,000 and perhaps more? The Federal Government cannot afford to cast away billions of assessed taxes. If relief for the armed forces were made applicable to the liabilities in 1942, the total 1942 liabilities would amount to approximately $9,500,000,000. If, as suggested, one-fifth of this were made payable each year for 5 years, the Federal revenues would be increased by $1,900,000,000 a year.

It should be noted that without cancelation, this $1,900,000,000 of revenue increase in each of 5 years is obtained in an equitable way, is fairly distributed over all classes of income—everybody contributes in accordance with our present conception of how the taxes should be loaded over the different income brackets. But if you cancel the taxes for 1942 and try to reimpose new tax rates, higher tax rates, which will bring in $1,900,000,000 additional revenue in each of 5 years, you will find that it is not possible to increase the upper middle and top brackets sufficiently to get anything like the same proportion of the $1,900,000,000 out of these classes as you will get under my suggestion that these taxes be postponed rather than canceled. If you cancel taxes you will inevitably shoulder most of the tax increase onto the lower and least-able-to-pay taxpayers. That is why I do not propose to cancel any taxes.

Now, it has been stated that the taxpayers simply cannot bear the tax burden which the suggested pay-as-you-go plan would impose upon them—that they cannot pay a full year's taxes and in addition one-fifth of another year's taxes. There are two answers to this argument. The first is that the incomes and the savings of the American people are now larger than they have ever been in the history of the country; and the second is that for the rank and file of the people, the great majority of average citizens, there is no alternative—they must pay higher taxes and it matters little to them whether these higher taxes result from new and higher rates or whether they result from the retention of the present rates but the liquidation in five annual installments of an additional year's liabilities. Under the postponement plan the great majority of individuals will fare about as well under one alternative as under the other. The only difference is that postponement avoids the unjust enrichment of the few in the upper, middle, and top income brackets through relieving them of their just share in the burden of financing the war.

Liquid savings of individuals throughout the country reached the unprecedented figure of $28,900,000,000 in 1942. This is almost three times the amount of individual savings in 1941 and is seven times the figure for 1940. It is nearly three times the tax liability on 1942 income.

The great increase in savings arose from the largest national income, $120,000,000,000, in our history. This income was largely paid out to individuals, predominantly in salaries and wages, and was paid to increased numbers of individuals, unemployment being at almost a minimum. The enlarged payments were distributed widely, with the lower income groups enjoying huge increases. Since price control held down the cost of living, and rationing and the unavailability of many items, such as automobiles, restrained the amount of purchases which might have been made, a great part of the increased income found its way into savings.

This year income will be even higher and the volume of civilian goods and services smaller. There will be tens of billions of dollars of income above taxes that cannot be spent. For 1943, it is estimated, savings of individuals may exceed $40,000,000,000 after payment of taxes.

In practically every income group this will mean savings many times greater than the tax that must be paid. The following table shows average savings by income classes in 1942, together with average taxes paid. This table indicates that in 1942 the group with incomes between $1,500 and $3,000 saved on the average, after taxes, $338 apiece; those with incomes between $3,000 and $5,000 saved $943 apiece; and those with incomes of $5,000 to $10,000 saved $2,366 apiece.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in my remarks the table to which I have just referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Average income, taxes, consumption and savings of families and single civilians, by income level, 1942 [1]

Income level	Average income and outlay
	Money income	Taxes	Income after taxes	Consumption	Gifts to organizations	Savings
Under $1,500	$862	$4	$858	$845	$11	$2
$1,500–$3,000	2,139	14	2,125	1,763	24	338
$3,000–$5,000	3,813	57	3,756	2,767	46	943
$5,000–$10,000	6,716	208	6,508	4,049	93	2,366
$10,000 and over	21,074	3,932	17,142	6,999	153	9,990
All levels	2,558	104	2,454	1,808	29	617

[1] The averages cover approximately 41,000,000 civilian spending units, consisting roughly of 33,000,000 families of 2 or more persons and 8,000,000 single civilians.

Mr. ELLENDER. Much of the savings, particularly at income levels above $2,000, is highly liquid. The unprecedented incomes that are being received this year by the American public cannot be spent in full, without ruinous inflation. The result will be, among all income classes, unprecedented savings that could be utilized to meet increased tax liabilities.

Let me state this point in another way. The Department of Commerce reports that the disposable income of individuals for 1942 amounted to $108,800,000,000. This disposable income is income after taxes and was more than $20,000,000,000 higher than in any year since 1929, the first year for which comparable figures are available. The net savings of individuals are estimated by the Department of Commerce at $26,900,000,000, more than $12,000,000,000 in excess of their estimate for 1941, and more than three times their estimate for the banner year 1929. The net savings of individuals as a percent of the disposable income amounted to 24.7 percent in 1942. It is interesting to note that in 1929 the people of this country saved 11.1 percent of the disposable income and they did not save as much as that from 1929 to 1941. In 1941 they saved 15.5 percent of their disposable income.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the savings as a percent of disposable income of individiduals, 1929–42, be inserted in the RECORD at this point of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Savings as a percent of disposable income of individuals, 1929–42

[Amounts in billions of dollars]

Year	Disposable income of individuals	Net savings of individuals	Percent net savings to disposable income
1929	79.6	8.8	11.1
1930	70.7	5.8	8.2
1931	59.6	5.4	9.1
1932	45.6	2.6	5.7

Mr. ELLENDER. The point I am making is that no matter whether we use the S. E. C. savings figures, or the O. P. A. savings figures, or the Department of Commerce savings figures, we find that the people of this country are saving more and a larger percentage of their income, at almost all levels of income, than they ever have in the history of the income tax. These savings are mostly liquid and they are available for tax payment. The people cannot buy many of the durable goods that they have been accustomed to buying; their incomes are higher, their savings are high, and they can well afford to pay over the next 5 years a little so-called doubling up of taxes.

The suggested plan is that taxpayers pay a full year's taxes plus one-fifth of the 1942 taxes. Let us examine a few figures to see whether the total payments are unreasonable in years of very high national income and war emergency. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point of my remarks a table showing individual income and net Victory taxes for a full year under present rates, plus one-fifth of the 1942 income-tax liabilities.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Individual income and net Victory taxes for a full year under present rates plus one-fifth of the 1942 income-tax liabilities—married persons, no dependents

Net income before personal exemption	Income tax plus net Victory tax	One-fifth of 1942 tax	Total taxes	Effective rates of total tax

Treasury Department, Division of Tax Research.

Mr. ELLENDER. It will be noted that a married person with $1,200 net income before exemptions would have total payments in 1944 and each of the 4 subsequent years of $21, or 1.8 percent of net income.

If the income is $2,000 the total tax payments per year would be $216, or 10.8 percent of net income.

If the income is $5,000 the total payments would be $1,043, or 20.9 percent.

If the income is $10,000 the total payments would be $2,897, or 29 percent.

If the income is $100,000 the total payments would be $81,396, or 81.4 percent.

If the income is $1,000,000 the total payments would be $1,069,800, or 107 percent.

You will note from the table that the payments do not exceed the income until we reach incomes of nearly $500,000. When we get up to incomes of this size I submit that the taxpayer is likely to have accumulated sufficient assets with which to make the necessary income payments. Indeed, I would have no objection for these relatively few cases in the very high income brackets, if it were provided, as was done in the Ways and Means Committee bill, that discretionary power be bestowed upon the Commissioner to grant extensions for some further period in cases of undue hardship.

Under the plan that would not cancel any of the 1942 taxes, all war profits would pay their just and fair share of income taxes to the Federal Treasury. Once we begin to cancel taxes we must, to salve our consciences, try to figure out some device, or devices, or mechanisms which will somehow or other make war profits bear their proper tax load. In the Senate Finance Committee bill we find two antiwindfall provisions designed to achieve this objective. The more I scrutinize these antiwindfall provisions the more I agree with the Senator from Virginia that they are discriminatory and that they would not operate in an equitable and fair way.

The first antiwindfall provision creates war profits out of distress. If 1943 incomes are low because of war dislocation, 1942 incomes are treated as if they were extraordinary and abnormal, whereas in truth they might well have been entirely normal. So this windfall catches war profits and victimizes the innocent that suffered dislocation in 1943.

So with the second antiwindfall provision. It is true that it would bring war profits under higher taxes if 1942 and 1943 incomes greatly exceeded the incomes of the base years 1938, 1939, and 1940, but it is equally true that it would treat as war profits, profits of those who for the first time came into their full earning capacity in 1942 and 1943 after years of trial and training during the period 1938 through 1940. I cannot subscribe to any measure which, in a vain attempt to catch war profiteers, would victimize millions of innocent people, some of whom had suffered dislocation in 1943 and others who for the first time came into their full earning powers in 1942 and 1943.

If we have no cancelation all war profits will pay their proper share of taxes without antiwindfall provisions, and I submit that no amount of ingenuity can supply antiwindfall provisions that would not operate in a discriminatory and unfair way.

Mr. President, I do——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will take a few minutes in speaking on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent order, all the time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ELLENDER. Am I precluded, under the order, from speaking on the bill itself?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The order under the unanimous-consent agreement is that no Senator shall be allowed to speak over 15 minutes on the amendment or any amendment thereto.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have always asked for strict enforcement of orders made in pursuance of unanimous-consent agreements in order that the Senate may pursue its work in an orderly fashion. We are under obligation today to proceed under the order previously entered. Much as I hesitate to do so, I shall object to any further time being granted for discussion of the amendment. I shall ask for strict enforcement of the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. ELLENDER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	George	Murray
Austin	Gerry	Nye
Bailey	Gillette	O'Daniel
Ball	Green	Radcliffe
Bankhead	Guffey	Reed
Barbour	Gurney	Revercomb
Bilbo	Hatch	Reynolds
Bone	Hawkes	Robertson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I transfer my pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], who, if present, would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent conducting hearings in the West on behalf of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. WALLGREN] are out of the city conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is detained on important public business.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are detained in Government departments on matters pertaining to their respective States.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is unavoidably detained. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] is detained in committee. If present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 57, as follows:

YEAS—21

So Mr. ELLENDER's amendment to the committee amendment, as amended, was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. Harry L. Englebright, late a Representative from the State of California, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CURRENT PAYMENT OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2570) to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the committee amendment, as amended, which is open to further amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I submitted a couple of days ago, which has been printed and is on the table, and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Beginning on page 105, line 16, it is proposed to strike out down to and including the period on page 107, line 21, and insert "In the case of any individual who dies while in active service as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States and prior to the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the President, the tax imposed by this chapter shall not apply with respect to the taxable year in which falls the date of his death, and the tax under this chapter and under the corresponding title of each prior revenue law for preceding taxable years which is unpaid at the date of his death (including interest, additions to the tax, and additional amounts) shall not be assessed, and if assessed the assessment shall be abated, and if collected shall be credited or refunded as an overpayment."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, this amendment has to do solely with the case of a man or woman who has entered the armed service of the United States, and who dies during the period of such service. The difference between this provision, as contained in the amendment which I have just offered, and the provision beginning on page 105 and running over to page 106, as contained in the committee amendment, lies simply in the fact that the net effect of the committee amendment finally works out to an abatement of the earned income of a man or woman who dies in the military service of the United States during the progress of this war.

Mr. President, I believe that there can be no serious question as to persons who have entered the armed services of the United States. If they die while in the armed services, the least the Government can do is to abate or cancel what taxes they may owe the Government of the United States at that time. The purpose of this amendment is simply to clarify that principle, because the language contained in the committee amendment is so complicated that it is not very easy to discern exactly what it means. The net effect of the language in the committee amendment is to limit the remission of taxes in such a case. My amendment, unlike the general provisions of the so-called Ruml plan, is a remission of taxes, and it is intended to be a remission of taxes, granted to persons who have entered the armed forces of the United States. I may say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not think this is a sufficient remission to persons who have entered the armed forces.

With regard to the first windfall provision of the committee amendment, being the provision which requires payment on the highest of 1942 or 1943 taxes, I thought that an exception should be made with regard to men and women who have gone into the armed forces, because it seems to me that persons in private life who are making comfortable incomes, or even large incomes, and who have not been able to accumulate the money to pay their taxes, or who at least have not accumulated it, and who then go into the armed services at very much smaller remuneration, should be given the option of electing whether 1942 or 1943 income should be taxed.

I offered such an amendment in the Finance Committee and it was rejected. I shall probably offer the same amendment before the conclusion of the consideration of this measure in the Senate. The amendment which I have presently offered has nothing to do with that. It has to do with the remission of taxes in cases of members of the armed forces. The question is whether we shall make a complete remission of their tax liability to the Government in case of their death. The only instance of persons in the armed forces being entitled to remission is in case of death. The question is whether we shall make a complete remission or make a remission only as to earned income.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri appears at page 59 of the bill before us. It is in substantially the same language as the House text there printed. The chief difference is that the Senator from Missouri would insert the language "who dies on or after December 6, 1941."

Mr. President, the committee canvassed the proposal submitted by the Senator from Missouri with very great care. We considered the House language most diligently. It appeared to us that it was open to very serious criticism in three particulars.

In the first place, the House provision, or the Clark amendment as now offered, would grant relief only to those servicemen who are delinquent in their taxes. It would abate all taxes due to the Government at the time of their death.

In the second place, the House language, or the Clark version of it, would apply to all taxes, whether attributable to earned income or income from capital.

In the third place, the House language, or the Clark amendment, would extend relief all the way back for as many years as any serviceman was delinquent in his taxes at the time of his death. It seemed to the committee, as we considered those three phases of the Clark amendment——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that this is not an abatement of all taxes. It is merely an abatement of income taxes. It would prevent the Government from proceeding against the widow in case a man were killed in the service.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, under the first point of those which I have made, the committee took the position that such a remission would be unfair to those members of the armed forces who were conscientious in meeting their tax obligations and had paid up currently all the taxes due the Government.

The so-called Clark amendment would reward those who had been delinquent in their taxes and therefore would prove unfair to the servicemen who had paid their taxes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think if the Senator will read the amendment, he will find that his statement is not entirely accurate, because it would treat all soldiers alike. I share the Senator's objection to giving a premium to taxpayers who have become delinquent in paying their taxes, but, if he will read that portion of the amendment at the top of page 2 thereof, he will discover that, if the soldier has paid his taxes, they will be credited or refunded as an overpayment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, proceeding further to the points considered by the committee, we felt that relief with respect to taxes on unearned income would be unnecessary because such income would continue during the years the serviceman is in the armed forces, out of capital, or out of the source of income from which the taxes attributable to that income could be paid, and the tax could be paid whether he were in the armed service or not.

The committee bill limits the relief to taxes attributable to a man's earned income, and it seemed to us that that would prove to be adequate relief in all cases.

As to the final point the committee took the position that the proposed relief would prove to be extraordinarily great in some cases and would have no correlation whatever with the period during which the man was in the armed services. In other words, a man who had an income of $3,000, let us say, on which taxes were owing, would find the taxes against his estate remitted in the event of death, whereas another man, who had an income of $100,000 and who might have been delinquent for 1 year, 2 years, or 3 years, would be given an equal measure of reward, multiplied, however, by the amount of the tax which would be attributable to the much larger income.

Consequently, the committee felt that the taxes to be abated or refunded should be limited to those which become due and payable after the date the man was inducted into the service, assuming that he was on a quarterly installment basis. In no case would the relief extend to any taxable year earlier than the year preceding the effective date of the Selective Service Act.

Your committee therefore would extend relief only for those years during which the serviceman's obligation to pay taxes becomes unduly burdensome by reason of his diminished earnings resulting directly from his services in the armed forces of the country.

The points I have mentioned, Mr. President, were made the subject of extended debate and argument in the committee, and the committee overwhelmingly rejected the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The amendment was never offered in the Finance Committee in anything like its present form. So far as I know the question was never discussed in the Finance Committee, and I was present at almost every meeting of the committee when consideration was given to the amendment. This is an entirely different proposal. As I stated on the floor a moment ago, I offered an amendment, which was rejected, to allow persons in the armed services to elect whether 1942 or 1943 should be taken. But to my knowledge this particular amendment was not offered in the committee. I believe I was present during every minute of the committee's consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, I should like to modify the amendment which I have offered. On page 1, line 3, of the printed amendment, after the word "dies" I should like to modify the amendment by inserting the words "after December 6, 1941", so as to read:

In the case of any individual who dies after December 6, 1941, while in active service as a member of the military or naval forces—

And so forth. There was a defect in the amendment as I offered it, and I desire to modify it in that form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri to what years the taxes would apply. What are the limitations as to the years to which the taxes would apply?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The amendment would apply to any taxes which might be owed by a sailor or soldier at the time of his death.

Mr. MALONEY. That might be for 1941, 1942, or 1943.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. MALONEY. There is no limitation as to time?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am perplexed by the final language of the amendment which would apparently provide for a refund of any deficiency which had heretofore been collected against a soldier who had died in service, and it apparently applies "under the corresponding title of each prior revenue law for preceding taxable years." Would that carry the refund back 10, 15, or 20 years, if during any of that period there might have been a deficiency paid?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That provision merely means that if the tax has been paid by the man's estate, it shall be refunded.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am afraid the Senator does not catch my point. Let us say that a soldier who dies in service has hanging over him at the time of his death an uncollected income tax for 1939, which was in dispute, and therefore not settled. Obviously, it is the purpose of the Senator to cancel that tax.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no quarrel with that purpose, but in order to equalize that situation, apparently the Senator would also provide that any man killed while in military service, who may have had a similar dispute under any tax law during his life, would be entitled to a refund.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the tax were unpaid at the date of his death, yes. It seems to me to be inconceivable that the Government would permit any tax concerning which there had been a dispute to remain unpaid for any lengthy period of time. However, under this amendment, if the tax were unpaid at the time of the soldier's death, the amendment would protect the soldier's widow against the collection of the tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not quarreling with that theory. I am talking about a situation in which the tax has been paid. I am referring to the point at which the Senator is trying to equalize the situation as between the soldier who did pay and the soldier who did not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not understand that this would apply to a back tax. If the Senator will read the language of the amendment, he will find that that is certainly not my intention, or the intention of those who are in sympathy with it. We do not intend it to apply to previous taxable years. We intend this amendment to apply to current taxes which have not been paid.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I think I understand one of the difficulties which faces the Senator from Michigan. There could be no refund of a tax under this amendment unless the tax had been collected after the death of the soldier. That is my interpretation of it. If at the time the soldier is killed there is an unpaid tax, and if thereafter there is a collection of that tax, then there would be a refund.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If that is the correct interpretation, I have no quarrel with it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is certainly the intention of the amendment. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I wish to put all members of the armed forces on a basis of equality. If after the death of a member of the armed forces his widow or his estate had paid this tax, then his widow or his estate should be put back in status quo with those who had not paid it. That is the intention of the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas, if I have the floor. The question as to who is in possession of the floor seems to be rather uncertain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is in possession of the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am interested in the Senator's amendment, although I think we ought to be very careful about a soldier who has given his life on the battlefield and has a family and children; when we are handing out $9,000,000,000 as a gift we ought not to be too generous with him; we ought not to give him a great deal, according to the contention of Senators. It seems to me——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say to the Senator from Texas that he has never heard any such contention advanced by me.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true. I want to give the Senator credit because he has offered the amendment, but, it seems to me, when we go forth with our hands full of good old currency handing out $9,000,000,000——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yielded to the Senator from Texas for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well; I will speak a little later.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well; the Senator can speak as long as he wants to speak in his own time.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut if I still have the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Missouri and I have collaborated so generously in sharing the floor, if I may put it in that way, I should like to emphasize one further point with reference to the Senator's amendment. I will present it in my own way, and he may make such further rebuttal as he chooses. I think it apropos that I take the floor.

Every legitimate objective, every purpose properly to be achieved under the very noble impulse of the Senator from Missouri, which we all share, can be achieved and attained under the committee amendment. I should like to have Senators turn to page 106 of the bill on their desks where they will find that there are three situations which we take care of.

If the individual entered upon service in the armed forces of the United States before the commencement of the taxable year beginning in 1943 the committee proposal provides that there shall not be assessed against him, and if assessed the assessment shall be abated, and, if collected, the amount so collected or credited shall be refunded:

First. In the entire amount of the tax attributable for the taxable year in which falls the date on which the soldier or sailor entered the service or as of September 16, 1940, whichever is the later.

The second case we deal with results in equal treatment for the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all subsequent taxable years during which the soldier or sailor was in the service.

And in the third case we take care of that portion of the tax so attributable for the taxable year last preceding the date on which he entered the armed forces or September 16, 1940, whichever date is the later, which bears the same ratio to the total tax so attributable as the number of quarters in the taxable year described in subparagraph (A) subsequent to the date on which he entered the service, whichever is the later, bears to four.

That sounds like a complex formula, but the fact of the matter is that, technically, our draftsmen advised us that it had to be written in that way in order to take care of the four installment payments which mature annually, assuming that a taxpayer is on a quarterly installment basis.

Moreover, if the individual entered upon the service during the taxable year beginning 1943, the committee amendment would give fair treatment, as we feel, to that portion of the tax for the taxable year beginning in 1943, reduced by the increase under section 6 (b) of the Current Tax Payment Act of 1943, which bears the same ratio to the total tax so reduced as the number of quarters in the taxable year subsequent to the date on which a serviceman entered the service bears to four, to the extent that such portion is so attributable.

Abatement would be obtained, in other words, in the taxable year 1943 if a man entered the service this year, or for so much of the unabated quarters of the tax during 1942 as remained unpaid or if paid it would be subject to refund.

Mr. President, we also take care or sought to take care of other situations which it seemed to us fairly comprehended the overwhelming plurality of the taxpayers who enter the armed forces. The matter was very fully canvassed, and we rejected the House language, which, as slightly modified by the Senator from Missouri in his pending amendment, it seemed to us dealt unfairly to the Government and to all other taxpayers and even discriminated among taxpayers who are in the armed services.

Therefore, Mr. President, the committee reported the amendment which is apparent in the bill commencing on page 105, line 14, and running through page 107, line 20, if Senators wish to study it further.

I thank the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the committee amendment as amended. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt. Those who are in favor of the amendment will stand. [A pause.] Those opposed will stand. [A pause.] The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated briefly.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY to the amendment, as amended, of the committee in the nature of a substitute, is as follows:

That (a) this act may be cited as the "Current Tax Payment Act of 1943."

(b) Meaning of terms used: Except as otherwise expressly provided, terms used in this act shall have the same meaning as when used in the Internal Revenue Code.

SEC. 2. Collection of tax at source on wages.

(a) In general: Chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to employment taxes) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subchapters:

"SUBCHAPTER D—COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX AT SOURCE ON WAGES

"SEC. 1621. Definitions.

"As used in this subchapter—

"(a) Wages: The term 'wages' means all remuneration (other than fees paid to a public official) for services performed by an employee for his employer, including the cash value of all remuneration paid in any medium other than cash; except that such term shall not include remuneration paid—

"(1) for services performed as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States, other than pensions and retired pay includible in gross income under chapter 1, or

"(2) for agricultural labor (as defined in section 1426 (h)), or

"(3) for domestic service in a private home, local college club, or local chapter of a college fraternity or sorority, or

"(4) for casual labor not in the course of the employer's trade or business, or

"(5) for services by a citizen or resident of the United States for a foreign government or for the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, or

"(6) for services performed by a nonresident alien individual, other than a resident of a contiguous country who enters and leaves the United States at frequent intervals, or

"(7) for such services, performed by a nonresident alien individual who is a resident of a contiguous country and who enters and leaves the United States at frequent intervals, as may be designated by regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, or

"(8) for services for an employer performed by a citizen or resident of the United States while outside the United States (as defined in section 3797 (a) (9)) if the major part of the services for such employer during the calendar year is to be performed outside the United States, or

"(9) for services performed as a minister of the gospel.

For the purpose of paragraph (8) services performed on or in connection with an American vessel (as defined in sec. 1426 (g)) under a contract of service which is entered into within the United States or during the performance of which the vessel touches at a port in the United States, or on or in connection with any vessel as an employee of the United States employed through the War Shipping Administration, shall not constitute services performed outside the United States.

"(b) Pay-roll period: The term 'pay-roll period' means a period for which a payment of wages is ordinarily made to the employee by his employer, and the term 'miscellaneous pay-roll period' means a pay-roll period other than a weekly, biweekly, semimonthly, monthly, quarterly, semiannual, or annual pay-roll period.

"(c) Employee: The term 'employee' includes an officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term 'employee' also includes an officer of a corporation.

"(d) Employer: The term 'employer' means the person for whom an individual performs or performed any service, of whatever nature, as the employee of such person, except that—

"(1) if the person for whom the individual performs or performed the services does not have control of the payment of the wages for such services, the term 'employer' (except for the purposes of subsection (a)) means the person having control of the payment of such wages; and

"(2) in the case of a person paying wages on behalf of a nonresident alien individual, foreign partnership, or foreign corporation, not engaged in trade or business within the United States, the term 'employer' (except for the purposes of subsection (a)) means such person.

"(e) Single person: the term 'single person' means a person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that such person is single, or is married and not living with husband or wife, and is not the head of a family.

"(f) Married person: the term 'married person' means a person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that he is married and living with husband or wife.

"(g) Married person claiming all of personal exemption for withholding: the term 'married person claiming all of personal exemption for withholding' means a married person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that for the purposes of this subchapter such person claims all of the personal exemption and that for the purposes of this subchapter his spouse is claiming none of the personal exemption.

"(h) Married person claiming half of personal exemption for withholding: the term 'married person claiming half of the personal exemption for withholding' means a married person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that for the purposes of this subchapter such person claims half of the personal exemption and that for the purposes of this subchapter his spouse is claiming not more than half of such exemption.

"(i) Married person claiming none of personal exemption for withholding: the term 'married person claiming none of the personal exemption for withholding' means a married person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) making no claim with respect to the personal exemption for the purposes of this subchapter.

"(j) Head of family: The term 'head of a family' means a person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that he is the head of a family.

"(k) Dependent: The term 'dependent' means a person included in a withholding exemption certificate in effect under section 1622 (h) as a person dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the employee and either under 18 years of age or incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

"SEC. 1622. Income tax collected at source.

"(a) Requirement of withholding: Every employer making payment of wages shall withhold and collect upon such wages a tax equal to the greater of the following:

"(1) Twenty percent of the excess of each payment of such wages over the family status withholding exemption allowable under subsection (b) (1) (A), or

"(2) Three percent of the excess of each payment of such wages over the Victory tax withholding exemption allowable under subsection (b) (1) (B).

"(b) Withholding exemption.—

"(1) In computing the tax required to be withheld under subsection (a), there shall be allowed as a withholding exemption with respect to the wages paid for each pay-roll period—

"(A) in computing the tax required to be withheld under subsection (a) (1), a family status withholding exemption determined in accordance with the following schedule:

"Family status withholding exemption

"Pay-roll period	Single person	Married person claiming whole of personal exemption for withholding or head of family	Married person claiming half of personal exemption for withholding	Married person claiming none of personal exemption for withholding	Each dependent, other than the first dependent in the case of the head of a family

"(2) If wages are paid with respect to a period which is not a pay-roll period, the withholding exemption allowable with respect to each payment of such wages shall be the exemption allowed for a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days in the period with respect to which such wages are paid.

"(3) In any case in which wages are paid by an employer without regard to any pay-roll period or other period, the withholding exemption allowable with respect to each payment of such wages shall be the exemption allowed for a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days (including Sundays and holidays) which have elapsed since the date of the last payment of such wages by such employer during the calendar year, or the date of commencement of employment with such employer during such year, or January 1 of such year, whichever is the later.

"(4) In any case in which the period, or the time described in paragraph (3), in respect of any wages is less than 1 week, the Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may authorize an employer, in computing the tax required to be withheld, to use the excess of the aggregate of the wages paid to the employee during the calendar week over the withholding exemption allowed by this subsection for a weekly pay-roll period.

"(5) In determining the amount to be withheld under this subsection, the wages may, at the election of the employer, be computed to the nearest dollar.

"(c) Wage bracket withholding—

"(1) At the election of the employer with respect to any employee, the employer shall deduct and withhold upon the wages paid to such employee a tax determined in accordance with the following tables, which shall be in lieu of the tax required to be withheld under subsection (a):

If the number of dependents is in excess of the largest number of dependents shown, the amount of tax to be withheld shall be that applicable in the case of the largest number of dependents shown reduced by $0.15 for each dependent over the largest number shown, except that in no event shall the amount to be withheld be less than 3 per centum of the excess of the product of the median wage in the bracket in which the wages fall and the number of days in the period (or if the wages paid are $30 or over, of the excess of the wages) over the product of $1.70 and the number of days in the period, computed, in case such amount is not a multiple of $0.05 to the nearest multiple of $0.05.

"(2) If wages are paid with respect to a period which is not a pay-roll period, the amount to be withheld shall be that applicable in the case of a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days in the period with respect to which such wages are paid.

"(3) In any case in which wages are paid by an employer without regard to any pay-roll period or other period, the amount to be withheld shall be that applicable in the case of a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days (including Sundays and holidays) which have elapsed since the date of the last payment of such wages by such employer during the calendar year, or the date of commencement of employment with such employer during such year, or January 1 of such year, whichever is the later.

"(4) In any case in which the period, or the time described in paragraph (3), in respect of any wages is less than 1 week, the Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may authorize an employer to determine the amount to be withheld under the tables applicable in the case of a weekly pay-roll period, in which case the aggregate of the wages paid to the employee during the calendar week shall be considered the weekly wages.

"(5) In determining the amount to be withheld under this subsection, the wages may, at the election of the employer, be computed to the nearest dollar.

"(d) Tax paid by recipient: If the employer, in violation of the provisions of this subchapter, fails to withhold and collect the tax under this subchapter, and thereafter the tax against which such tax may be credited is paid, the tax so required to be withheld and collected shall not be collected from the employer; but this subsection shall in no case relieve the employer from liability for any penalties or additions to the tax otherwise applicable in respect of such failure to withhold and collect.

"(e) Nondeductibility of tax in computing net income: The tax withheld and collected under this subchapter shall not be allowed as a deduction either to the employer or to the recipient of the income in computing net income for the purpose of any tax on income imposed by act of Congress.

"(f) Refunds or credits.—

"(1) Employers: Where there has been an overpayment of tax under this subchapter, refund or credit shall be made to the employer only to the extent that the amount of such overpayment was not withheld and collected under this subchapter by the employer.

"(2) Employees: For refund or credit in cases of excessive withholding, see section 322 (a).

"(g) Included and excluded wages: If the remuneration paid by an employer to an employee for services performed during one-half or more of any pay-roll period of not more than 31 consecutive days constitutes wages, all the remuneration paid by such employer to such employee for such period shall be deemed to be wages; but if the remuneration paid by an employer to an employee for services performed during more than one-half of any such pay-roll period does not constitute wages, then none of the remuneration paid by such employer to such employee for such period shall be deemed to be wages.

"(h) Withholding exemption certificates: Every employee receiving wages shall furnish his employer a signed withholding exemption certificate relating to his status for the purpose of computing the withholding exemption, or if the employer exercises his election under section 1622 (b) (relating to wage-bracket withholding), for the purpose of computing the amount to be withheld under such subsection. In case of a change of status, a new certificate shall be furnished not later than 10 days after such change occurs. The certificate shall be in such form and contain such information as the Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary, by regulations prescribed. Such certificate—

"(1) If furnished after the date of commencement of employment with the employer, shall take effect with respect to the first payment of wages made on or after the first status determination date which occurs at least 30 days from the date on which such certificate is furnished to the employer, except that at the election of the employer such certificate may be made effective with respect to any previous payment of wages made on or after the date of the furnishing of such certificate. For the purposes of this paragraph the term 'status determination date' means January 1 and July 1 of each year.

"(2) If furnished on or before the date of commencement of employment with the employer, shall take effect as of the beginning of the first pay-roll period ending, or the first payment of wages made without regard to a pay-roll period, on or after the date on which such certificate is furnished to the employer.

A certificate which takes effect under this subsection shall continue in effect with respect to the employer until another such certificate furnished by the employee takes effect under this subsection. If no certificate is in effect under this subsection with respect to an employee, such employee shall be treated, for the purposes of the withholding exemption, or in case the employer exercises his election under section 1622 (c) (relating to wage-bracket withholding), for the purpose of computing the amount to be withheld under such subsection, as a married person claiming none of the personal exemption for withholding.

"(i) Overlapping pay periods, and so forth: If a payment of wages is made to an employee by an employer—

"(1) with respect to a pay-roll period or other period, any part of which is included in a pay-roll period or other period with respect to which wages are also paid to such employee by such employer, or

"(2) without regard to any pay-roll period or other period, but on or prior to the expiration of a pay-roll period or other period with respect to which wages are also paid to such employee by such employer, or

"(3) with respect to a period beginning in one and ending in another calendar year—

the manner of withholding and the amount to be withheld under this subchapter shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary under which the withholding exemption allowed to an employee in any calendar year shall approximate the withholding exemption allowable with respect to an annual pay-roll period.

"(j) Withholding on basis of average wages: The Commissioner may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, authorize employers (1) to estimate the wages which will be paid to any employee in any quarter of the calendar year, (2) to determine the amount to be withheld and collected upon each payment of wages to such employee during such quarter as if the appropriate average of the wages so estimated constituted the actual wages paid, and (3) to withhold and collect upon any payment of wages to such employee during such quarter such amount as may be necessary to adjust the amount actually withheld and collected upon the wages of such employee during such quarter to the amount required to be withheld during such quarter without regard to this subsection.

"SEC. 1623. Liability for tax.

"The employer shall be liable for the payment of the tax required to be withheld and collected under this subchapter, and shall not be liable to any person for the amount of any such payment.

"SEC. 1624. Return and payment by governmental employer.

"If the employer is the United States, or a State, territory, or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, the return of the amount withheld and collected upon any wages may be made by any officer or employee of the United States, or of such State, territory, or political subdivision, or of the District of Columbia, or of such agency or instrumentality, as the case may be, having control of the payment of such wages, or appropriately designated for that purpose.

"SEC. 1625. Receipts.

"(a) Requirement: Every employer required to withhold and collect a tax in respect of the wages of an employee shall furnish to each such employee in respect of his employment during the calendar year, on or before January 31 of the succeeding year, or, if his employment is terminated before the close of such calendar year, on the day on which the last payment of wages is made, a written statement showing the wages paid by the employer to such employee during such calendar year, and the amount of the tax withheld and collected under this subchapter in respect of such wages.

"(b) Statements to constitute information returns: The statements required to be furnished by this section in respect of any wages shall be furnished at such other times, shall contain such other information, and shall be in such form as the Commissioner, with the approval of the secretary, may by regulations prescribe. A duplicate of such statement if made and filed in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the secretary shall constitute the return required to be made in respect of such wages under section 147.

"(c) Extension of time: The Commissioner, under such regulations as he may prescribe with the approval of the secretary, may grant to any employer a reasonable extension of time (not in excess of 30 days) with respect to the statements required to be furnished to employees under this section.

"SEC. 1626. Penalties.

"(a) Penalties for fraudulent receipt or failure to furnish receipt: In lieu of any other penalty provided by law (except the penalty provided by subsection (b) of this section), any person required under the provisions of section 1625 to furnish a receipt in respect of tax withheld pursuant to this subchapter who willfully furnishes a false or fraudulent receipt, or who willfully fails to furnish a receipt in the manner, at the time, and showing the information required under section 1625, or regulations prescribed thereunder, shall for each such failure, upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"(b) Additional penalty: In addition to the penalty provided by subsection (a) of this section, any person required under the provisions of section 1625 to furnish a receipt in respect of tax withheld pursuant to this subchapter who willfully furnishes a false or fraudulent receipt, or who willfully fails to furnish a receipt in the manner, at the time, and showing the information required under section 1625, or regulations prescribed thereunder, shall for each such failure be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $50.

"(c) Failure of employer to file return or pay tax: In case of any failure to make and file return or pay the tax required by this subchapter, within the time prescribed by law or prescribed by the Commissioner in pursuance of law, unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect, the addition to the tax shall not be less than $10.

"(d) Penalties in respect of withholding exemption certificates: Any individual required to supply information to his employer under section 1622 (h) who willfully supplies false or fraudulent information, or who willfully fails to supply information thereunder which would require an increase in the tax to be withheld under section 1622, shall, in lieu of any penalty otherwise provided, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 1627. Other laws applicable.

"All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the tax imposed by section 1400 shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this subchapter, be applicable with respect to the tax under this subchapter.

"SUBCHAPTER E—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1630. Verification of returns, etc.

"(a) Power of commissioner to require: The Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may require that any return, statement, or other document required to be filed under this chapter shall contain or be verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury, and such declaration shall be in lieu of any oath otherwise required.

"(b) Penalties: Every person who willfully makes and subscribes any return, statement, or other document, which contains or is verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury, and which he does not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter, shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to the penalties prescribed for perjury in section 125 of the Criminal Code.

"SEC. 1631. Use of Government depositaries in connection with payment of taxes.

"The Secretary may authorize incorporated banks or trust companies which are depositaries or financial agents of the United States to receive any taxes under this chapter in such manner, at such times, and under such conditions as he may prescribe; and he shall prescribe the manner, times, and conditions under which the receipt of such taxes by such depositaries and financial agents is to be treated as payment of such taxes to the collectors."

(b) Technical amendments.—

(1) Amendment to section 34: Section 34 of the Internal Revenue Code (cross reference) is amended by striking out "453, 454, and 466 (e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "453 and 454."

(2) Amendment to section 322: Section 322 (f) of the Internal Revenue Code (cross reference) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Tax withheld at source: For refund or credit in case of withholding agent, see section 143 (f). For refund or credit in case of employer required to withhold tax on wages, see section 1622 (f)."

(c) Expiration date for withholding at source on wages under subchapter D of chapter 1: Section 476 of the Internal Revenue Code (prescribing the expiration date for the taxes imposed by subchapter D) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 476. Expiration date.

"The tax imposed by part I of this subchapter shall not apply with respect to any taxable year commencing after the date of cessation of hostilities in the present war. The tax imposed by part II of such subchapter shall not apply with respect to any wages paid after June 30, 1943."

(d) Effective date: The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect July 1, 1943, and shall be applicable to all wages paid on or after such date.

SEC. 3. Credit for tax withheld at source.

Section 35 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the credit for tax withheld on wages) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. Credit for tax withheld on wages.

"The amount withheld and collected as tax under subchapter D of chapter 9 during any calendar year upon the wages of any individual shall be allowed as a credit to the recipient of the income against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year beginning in such calendar year. If more than one taxable year begins in any such calendar year, such amount shall be allowed as a credit against the tax for the last taxable year so beginning."

SEC. 4. Refunds.

(a) Excessive withholding, etc.: Section 322 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to excessive withholding) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Excessive withholding: Where the amount of the tax withheld at the source under part II of subchapter D or subchapter D of chapter 9 exceeds the taxes imposed by this chapter against which the tax so withheld may be credited under section 35 or 466 (e), the amount of such excess shall be credited against any income tax or installment thereof then due from the taxpayer, and any balance thereof shall be refunded immediately to the taxpayer.

"(3) Credits against estimated tax: The Commissioner is authorized to prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary, regulations providing for the crediting against the estimated tax for any taxable year of the amount determined by the taxpayer or the Commissioner to be an overpayment of the tax for a preceding taxable year."

(b) Presumption as to date of payment: Section 322 (e) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to presumption as to date of payment) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) Presumption as to date of payment: For the purposes of this section, any tax actually withheld and collected at the source during any calendar year under part II of subchapter D or under subchapter D of chapter 9 shall, in respect of the recipient of the income, be deemed to have been paid by him on the fifteenth day of the third month following the close of his taxable year with respect to which such tax is allowable as a credit under section 35 or section 466 (e); except that in the case of a nonresident alien individual, it shall be deemed to have been paid by him on the fifteenth day of the sixth month following the close of such taxable year. For the purposes of this section, any amount paid as estimated tax for any taxable year shall be deemed to have been paid not earlier than the fifteenth day of the third month following the close of such taxable year."

(c) Delegation of authority to collectors to make refunds: Section 3770 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to authority to make refunds) is amended (1) by striking out "(4)" at the beginning of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof "(5)"; and (2) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

"(4) Delegation of authority to collectors to make refunds: The Commissioner is authorized to delegate, with the approval of the Secretary, to collectors any authority, duty, or function which the Commissioner is authorized or required to exercise or perform under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this subsection, or under section 3772 or 1027, where the amount involved does not exceed $1,000."

(d) Overpayments: Section 3770 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to authority to make credits and refunds) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(c) Rule where no tax liability: An amount paid as tax shall not be considered not to constitute an overpayment solely by reason of the fact that there was no tax liability in respect of which such amount was paid."

(e) Cross-reference: The last subsection of section 3771 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to interest on overpayments) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Estimated tax and tax withheld at source: For date of payment in respect of estimated tax and of tax withheld at source on wages, see section 322 (e)."

(f) Review of allowance of interest: Section 3790 of the Internal Revenue Code (prohibiting administrative review of Commissioner's decisions) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "In the absence of fraud or mistake in mathematical calculation, the allowance or nonallowance by the Commissioner, of interest on any credit or refund under the internal-revenue laws shall not, except as provided in chapter 5, be subject to review by any other administrative or accounting officer, employee, or agent of the United States."

SEC. 5. Current payment of tax not withheld at source.

(a) In general: The Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out sections 58, 59, and 60 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 58. Declaration of estimated tax by individuals.

"(a) Requirement of declaration: Every individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien) shall, at the time during the taxable year prescribed in subsection (d), make a declaration of his estimated tax for the taxable year if—

"(1) his gross income from wages (as defined in section 1621)

"(A) in case such individual is single or married but not living with husband or wife: can reasonably be expected to exceed $2,700 for the taxable year; or did exceed $2,700 for the preceding taxable year; or

"(B) in case such individual is married and living with husband or wife: can when added to the gross income which can reasonably be expected to be received by such husband or wife from wages (as so defined) reasonably be expected to exceed $3,500 for the taxable year; or did when added to the gross income of such husband or wife from wages (as so defined) for the preceding taxable year, exceed $3,500 for such preceding taxable year; or

"(2) his gross income from sources other than wages (as defined in section 1621)

"(A) in case such individual is single or married but not living with husband or wife: can reasonably be expected to exceed $100 for the taxable year and his gross income to be such as will require the making of a return for the taxable year under section 51; or did exceed $100 for the preceding taxable year and such individual either was required to make a return under section 51 or 455 for such preceding taxable year or would have been so required if he had been single during the whole of such preceding taxable year; or

"(B) in case such individual is married and living with husband or wife: can when added to the gross income which can reasonably be expected to be received by husband or wife from such sources, reasonably be expected to exceed $100 for the taxable year and the aggregate gross income of such husband and wife can reasonably be expected to be such as will require the making of a return under section 51 or 455; or did, when added to the gross income of such husband or wife from such sources for the preceding taxable year, exceed $100 for such preceding taxable year and such individual would have been required to make a return under section 51 or 455 for such preceding taxable year if he had been married and living with husband or wife during the whole of such preceding taxable year.

"(b) Contents of declaration: In the declaration required under subsection (a) the individual shall state—

"(1) the amount which he estimates as the amount of tax under sections 11 and 12, or 400, as the case may be, and section 450, for the taxable year, without regard to any credits under sections 32, 35, and 466 (e);

"(2) the amount which he estimates as the credits for the taxable year under sections 32, 35, and 466 (e); and

"(3) the excess of the amount estimated under paragraph (1) over the amount estimated under paragraph (2), which excess for the purposes of this chapter shall be held and considered the estimated tax for the taxable year.

The declaration shall also contain such other information for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this chapter as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe, and shall contain or be verified by a written statement that it is made under the penalties of perjury.

"(c) Joint declaration by husband and wife: In the case of a husband and wife living together, a single declaration under this section may be made by them jointly, in which case the liability with respect to the estimated tax shall be joint and several. No joint declaration may be made if either the husband or wife is a nonresident alien. If a joint declaration is made but a joint return is not made for the taxable year, the estimated tax for such year may be treated as the estimated tax of either the husband or the wife, or may be divided between them.

"(d) Time and place for filing: The declaration required under subsection (a) shall be filed on or before the fifteenth day of the third month of the taxable year, except that if the requirements of subsection (a) are first met after such date, the declaration shall be filed on or before the fifteenth day of the last month of the quarter of the taxable year in which such requirements are first met. An individual may make amendments or revisions of a declaration filed under this subsection, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. If so made, such amendments or revisions shall be filed on or before the fifteenth day of the last month of any quarter of the taxable year subsequent to that in which the declaration was filed and in which no previous amendments or revisions have been made or filed. Declarations and amendments and revisions thereof shall be filed with the Collector specified in section 53 (b) (1).

"(e) Extension of time: The Commissioner may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing declarations and paying the estimated tax, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe with the approval of the Secretary. Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than 6 months.

"(f) Persons under disability: If the taxpayer is unable to make his own declaration, the declaration shall be made by a duly authorized agent or by the guardian or other person charged with the case of the person or property of such taxpayer.

"(g) Signature presumed correct: The fact that an individual's name is signed to a filed declaration shall be prima facie evidence for all purposes that the declaration was actually signed by him.

"(h) Publicity of declaration: For the purposes of section 55 (relating to publicity of returns), a declaration of estimated tax shall be held and considered a return under this chapter.

"SEC. 59. Payment of estimated tax.

"(a) In general: The estimated tax shall be paid in four equal installments except that—

"(1) if the declaration is filed (otherwise than pursuant to an extension of time) after the fifteenth day of the third month of the taxable year, the estimated tax shall be paid in equal installments the number of which is equal to the number of quarters remaining in the taxable year (including the quarter in which the declaration is filed); and

"(2) if any amendment or revision of a declaration is filed, the remaining installments shall be ratably increased or decreased, as the case may be, to reflect the increase or decrease, as the case may be, in the estimated tax by reason of such amendment or revision; and

"(3) at the election of the individual, any installment of the estimated tax may be paid prior to the date prescribed for its payment. One installment of the estimated tax shall be paid at the time of making the declaration, and an installment thereof shall be paid on the fifteenth day of the last month of each succeeding quarter of the taxable year. Payment of any installment of the estimated tax shall be considered payment on account of the tax for the taxable year.

"(b) Assessment: The estimated tax shall be assessed only to the extent paid.

"SEC. 60. Special rules for application of sections 58 and 59.

"(a) Farmers: In the case of an individual whose estimated gross income from farming for the taxable year is at least 80 percent of the total estimated gross income from all sources for the taxable year, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 58 (d), the declaration for the taxable year may be made at any time on or before the fifteenth day of the last month of the taxable year.

"(b) Application to short taxable years: The application of sections 58, 59, and 294 (a) (3), (4), and (5) to taxable years of less than 12 months shall be as prescribed in regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

"(c) Application to taxable years beginning in 1943: If the taxable year is the calendar year 1943, the 15th day of September 1943 shall be substituted for the 15th day of March for the purposes of section 58 (d). If the taxable year begins in 1943 after January 1, the date which shall be substituted for the fifteenth day of the third month of the taxable year for the purposes of section 58 (d) shall be prescribed by regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In either case installments of the estimated tax for such taxable year payable after September 1, 1943, shall be ratably decreased to reflect the payments on account of a taxable year beginning in 1942 which are treated as payments on account of the estimated tax for a taxable year beginning in 1943."

(b) Additions to tax: Section 294 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to additions to tax in case of nonpayment) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(3) Failure to file declaration of estimated tax: In the case of a failure to make and file a declaration of estimated tax within the time prescribed, there shall be added to the tax an amount equal to 10 percent of the tax.

"(4) Failure to pay installment of estimated tax: In the case of the failure to pay an installment of the estimated tax within the time prescribed there shall be added to the tax $2.50 or 2½ percent of the tax, whichever is the greater, for each installment with respect to which such failure occurs.

"(5) Substantial underestimate of estimated tax: If 80 percent of the tax (determined without regard to the credits under sections 32, 35, and 466 (e) in the case of individuals other than farmers exercising an election under section 60 (a) or 66⅔ percent of such tax so determined in the case of such farmers, exceeds the estimated tax (increased by such credits) there shall be added to the tax an amount equal to such excess or equal to 6 percent of the amount by which such tax so determined exceeds the estimated tax so increased, whichever is the lesser. This paragraph shall not apply to the taxable year in which falls the death of the taxpayer."

(c) Penalties: Section 145 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to criminal penalties) is amended (1) by inserting after "return" wherever appearing therein the words "or declaration", and (2) by inserting before "tax" wherever appearing therein the words "estimated tax or."

(d) Payment by installments: Section 56 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to installment payments) is amended by striking out "The" at the beginning thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "Except in the case of an individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien), the."

(e) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1942.

SEC. 6. Relief from double payments in 1943.

(a) In general: This subsection shall be applicable with respect to the taxable year 1942 but shall not take effect until September 1, 1943. The tax imposed by Chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code upon any individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien) shall, in lieu of that otherwise imposed, be a tax determined in accordance with the following schedule:

If the tax determined without regard to this subsection is

(b) Time for payment of reduced 1942 tax: In lieu of the time prescribed in section 56 of the Internal Revenue Code for the payment of the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code, as reduced under subsection (a), upon an individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien) for a taxable year beginning in 1942, such tax as so reduced shall be paid as follows: One-third thereof on or before the 15th day of the 27th month following the beginning of such taxable year, one-third on or before the fifteenth day of the 39th month following the beginning of such taxable year, and one-third on or before the 15th day of the 51st month following the beginning of such taxable year.

(c) Treatment of payments on account of 1942 tax: Any payment (other than interest and additions to the tax) made on account of the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code for the taxable year 1942 upon a taxpayer any part of whose liability for such tax is discharged under subsection (a) shall be considered as payment on account of the estimated tax for the taxable year 1943. In the case of any extension of time for the payment of such tax granted by the Commissioner prior to September 1, 1943, payment of the portion thereof which if such extension had not been granted would have been payable under section 56 (b) prior to such date shall be made notwithstanding subsection (a), but the foregoing provisions of this subsection shall apply to any such payment. In case the taxpayer becomes delinquent, prior to September 1, 1943, in the payment of such tax or any installment thereof, subsection (a) shall not relieve the taxpayer of his liability for the tax, but the foregoing provisions of this subsection shall be applicable to payment of such liability. If any payment on account of the tax imposed by such chapter for the taxable year 1942 is made pursuant to a joint return made by husband and wife for such taxable year, and such payment is considered as a payment on account of the estimated tax for the taxable year 1943, such payment may be treated as a payment on account of the estimated tax of either the husband or the wife for such taxable year or may be divided between them.

(d) Extension of time for payment of reduced 1942 tax: Where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the payment of any installment under subsection (c) upon the date prescribed for the payment thereof will result in undue hardship to the taxpayer the Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may grant an extension for the payment of such installment for a period not in excess of 18 months, and, in exceptional cases, for a further period of not in excess of 18 months. If an extension is granted, the Commissioner may require a taxpayer to furnish a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount of the installment, with such sureties, as the Commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of the installment in accordance with the terms of the extension. If the time for the payment of any installment is extended, there shall be collected, as a part of the tax, interest on the installment at the rate of 6 percent per annum for the period of the extension, and no other interest shall be collected on such installment for such period. If the installment the time for the payment of which is so extended is not paid in accordance with the terms of the extension, there shall be collected, as a part of the tax, interest on the unpaid amount at the rate of 6 percent per annum for the period from the time fixed by the terms of the extension for its payment until it is paid, and no other interest shall be collected on such unpaid amount for such period.

(e) For the purposes of this section the term "taxable year 1942" means a taxable year beginning in the calendar year 1942, but shall not include any period of less than 12 months unless occasioned by the death of the taxpayer or unless there is no taxable year of 12 months beginning in such calendar year.

SEC. 7. Discount for advance payment of deferred 1942 tax.

In addition to the credits against the tax allowed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by such chapter upon an individual with respect to whom and for the taxable year with respect to which section 5 (a) is applicable—

(1) an amount equal to 6 percent of such tax if such tax is paid on or before the 15th day of the twenty-seventh month following the beginning of such taxable year, or

(2) an amount equal to 2 percent of such tax if the first installment thereof is paid within the time prescribed in section 5 (b) and the last two installments are paid on or before the 15th day of the thirty-ninth month following the beginning of such taxable year.

SEC. 8. Additional allowance for members of armed forces.

(a) In general: Section 22 (b) (13) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to additional allowance for military and naval personnel in computing net income) is amended to read as follows:

"(13) Additional allowance for military and naval personnel: In the case of compensation received during any taxable year and before the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the President, by a member of the military or naval forces of the United States for active service in such forces during such war, so much of such compensation as does not exceed $1,500."

(b) Effective date: The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1942.

SEC. 9. Abatement of tax for members of armed forces upon death.

Chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting after section 404 the following new supplement:

"SUPPLEMENT U—ABATEMENT OF TAX FOR MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES UPON DEATH

"SEC. 421. Abatement of tax for members of armed forces upon death.

"In the case of any individual who dies on or after December 7, 1941, while in active service as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States and prior to the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the President, the tax under this chapter (including interest, additions to the tax, and additional amounts) attributable to earned net income (as defined in section 25 (a) (4)) received or accrued by him shall not be assessed, and if assessed, the assessment shall be abated, and if collected shall be credited or refunded as an overpayment, in the following amounts and for the following taxable years:

"(1) if such individual entered upon such service before the commencement of the taxable year beginning in 1943:

"(A) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for the taxable year in which falls the date on which he entered upon such service or September 16, 1940, whichever date is the later;

"(B) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all subsequent taxable years during which he was in such service; and

"(C) that portion of the tax so attributable for the taxable year last preceding the date on which he entered upon such service or September 16, 1940, whichever date is the later, which bears the same ratio to the total tax so attributable as the number of quarters in the taxable year described in subparagraph (A) subsequent to the date on which he entered upon such service or September 16, 1940, whichever date is the later, bears to four; or

"(2) if such individual entered upon such service during the taxable year beginning in 1943:

"(A) that portion of the tax for the taxable year beginning in 1943, which bears the same ratio to the total tax so reduced as the number of quarters in such taxable year subsequent to the date on which he entered upon such service bears to four, to the extent that such portion is so attributable;

"(B) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all subsequent taxable years during which he was in such service; and

"(C) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for the taxable year beginning in 1942; or

"(3) if such individual entered upon such service after the close of the taxable year beginning in 1943:

"(A) that portion of the tax for the taxable year beginning in 1942 so attributable which falls due (otherwise than by an extension of time) subsequent to the date of entering upon such service; and

"(B) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all taxable years during the whole of which he was in such service.

The computations required by this section shall be made in conformity with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. For the purposes of this section, a fractional part of a quarter shall be disregarded unless it exceeds 15 days, in which case it shall be considered a quarter."

SEC. 10. Assistant commissioners.

Subchapter B of chapter 39 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER B—ASSISTANT COMMISSIONERS

"SEC. 3905. Appointment.

"There shall be in the Bureau of Internal Revenue two Assistant Commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 3906. Duties.

"The Assistant Commissioners shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Commissioner or required by law."

SEC. 11. Extension of time in connection with release of powers of appointment.

Section 403 (d) (3) of the Revenue Act of 1942 is amended by striking out "July 1, 1943" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "March 1, 1944"; and section 452 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1942 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Release before March 1, 1944.—

"(1) A release of a power to appoint before March 1, 1944, shall not be deemed a transfer of property by the individual possessing such power.

"(2) This subsection shall apply to all calendar years prior to 1944 and to that part of the calendar year 1944 prior to March 1, 1944."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is sometimes known as the Doughton bill and sometimes known as the House Ways and Means Committee bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the amendment offered by the Senator represent the first, second, third, or fourth Doughton bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. With his wide knowledge of tax matters, all in the world the Senator from Missouri has to do is to look at it, and I know he will understand which one it is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As there were about a dozen, I am not certain anyone could recognize which is which. The Senator referred to it as the Doughton bill. There were several different bills known as Doughton bills and several different bills known as Ways and Means Committee bills, none of which got to first base in the House of Representatives, and I was curious to know which one the Senator is proposing.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will tell the Senator, but the Senator is not asking for information. He is asking in order to try to confuse and embarrass the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That would be impossible, I will say to the Senator; it would be like "carrying coals to Newcastle."

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator, but when he sticks his knife in my ribs he cannot divert me by sticking a flower at my nose. [Laughter.] As a matter of fact, this was the bill which was reported, as I now recall, by the House Ways and Means Committee on the 30th of April. The Senator knows that the 30th of April is the day before the 1st of May, and if he looks he will see that the bill was reported by the House Ways and Means Committee on the 30th of April.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, it would have been much more appropriate if the bill had been reported on the 1st day of April, but the Senator has sufficiently identified the numerical succession of the Doughton bill to the Ways and Means Committee bill to which he is now referring.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that the bill should really have been offered on the 1st of April, because it is really intended to fool people by the Ruml plan. Those sponsoring it may fool them now, but I say to the Senator from Missouri and to other Senators that before they cease hearing about the Ruml plan they are going to find out that while it may fool some of the people, all the people of the United States are not going to be fooled as to the purpose, the intent, and the effect of the Ruml plan.

A few days ago, after I had left the Chamber, the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Connecticut made some animadversions as to what the Senator from Texas had said and contended. Their contention is, as I understand, that they are not proposing to give away anything, that the Treasury is really to get more money by giving away $9,000,000,000 or $11,000,000,000 than if it is not given away. If the supporters of the Ruml plan are convinced that they are not being given anything, the plan is going to blow up. If Mr. Ruml, and all the others from whom Senators are getting telegrams whooping up the Ruml plan, are convinced that when it is adopted they are not going to get any money back, that they are not going to get any cancelation, that they are not going to get any increase of their assets, the Ruml plan will be blown out of the water. So its supporters had better act quickly, they had better vote on it quickly, because if those sponsoring it outside ever come to believe they are not to receive anything, the bill is going to collapse.

Mr. President, I have seen a great many magicians in my time, starting when I was a country boy, at the Indian show, the entrance fee a dime, proceeding from the lowest and coming to the real experts of the present day. I have seen them put rabbits under the hat, and then when the hat is lifted the rabbit is not there; it is over somewhere else, in somebody else's hat. But of all the magicians' tricks I ever saw, the greatest is the supposed theory of the Ruml plan—that we can forgive or abate or cancel $9,000,000,000 that are due to the United States on the tax books and not give somebody something. That suggestion is the most astounding, the most shocking to my imagination, and the most amazing to what little reason I have than any other I have ever heard in all the history of my short, uneventful, obscure life. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, what would this bill do? I understand that one Senator—I believe it was the Senator from Connecticut—said after I left the Chamber a few days ago that I had indicated I proposed to vote for the George plan in substitution for the Ruml plan, and therefore there was no principle involved in my viewpoint but a question of rates only. If the Senator from Connecticut had done me the honor either to read or to listen to what I stated, he would have observed that I said throughout the debate that I was not in favor of forgiving or canceling a single dollar that is now due.

If there is a desire to adopt the withholding tax, very well, I have no objection to adopting the withholding tax as to salaries and wages for 1943, and crediting it to a man's taxes for 1943. That is not inconsistent with keeping the tax system as we have it now.

Oh, but gentlemen say we want to make taxpayers current. Oh, yes; we have to pay taxes. When we assessed the 1942 tax to be paid in March 1943, a man cannot be paying it out of the income of 1943 because he has not received the 1943 income, except for 2½ months. He is paying it out of what he saved and accumulated in 1942 with which to pay the 1942 taxes, and if he has not saved it, is it very wise to teach the people to do that very thing—to accumulate during the year the money with which to pay their taxes in March of the following year.

When we pay our State and county taxes, do we pay them by the day or the month in advance? No, we pay them at the end of the year. When do we pay our rent—every morning, or at the end of the month? When do we pay our grocery bill—before we eat the groceries, or after we have eaten them at the end of the month?

Mr. President, with the condition of the Treasury of the United States as it is, with this colossal war debt hanging over us, I cannot see how we can afford to give away $9,000,000,000 of money now due to the Treasury of the United States.

Let me remind Senators that, under the present laws, revenues from individual income taxes amount to about $13,000,000,000 under the most favorable circumstances. We have to raise $16,000,000,000 more, it is said. Where are we to get it? Unless corporation taxes are raised—and you are not in favor of that, oh, no—unless corporation taxes are raised we must get the money from the individual income taxpayers, and that means that we will have to more than double the tax on the man with five or ten or fifteen or twenty thousand dollars of income, and even on the $3,000 man and on all the men and women in the lower brackets. We will have to more than double the present taxes in order even to get $13,000,000,000, and in the face of that, it is proposed that we give away $9,000,000,000.

Mr. President, I offer the Doughton plan, which provides in substance as follows: It adopts for 1942 the 1941 tax rates. It does not give the money all away, it gives some of it away, it remits some of it, it puts the tax back on the 1941 basis. That is the same basis which was arrived at by the committee and the Congress after consideration and after the most careful examination. It is a reasonable and a logical basis.

As to current payments, it provides for the same kind of current payments as provided in the bill now before us, the same as the Finance Committee bill provides for. It provides for withholding at the source, the same as the Finance Committee bill. That is the so-called Ruml plan. It recomputes the 1942 tax at the 1941 rates and exemptions. It forgives the difference between that and the present 1942 tax. It spreads the payment of the balance, not forgiven, over 3 years. The taxpayer will have 3 years in which to pay the 1942 tax. He will have to pay only one-third of it in the same year in which he pays his tax for 1943. I understand there is a provision in the bill which authorizes the Commissioner to grant an additional 3 years to the taxpayer in an extreme case, if he can make a showing that it will be a hardship to him to pay the tax in 3 years.

The substitute which I offer forgives four and a half billion dollars, which is much less than is forgiven either under the George plan or the Senate Finance Committee plan, and only one-half as much as would be handed out under the Ruml plan. The forgiveness, the deduction, or the abatement, would be distributed fairly, and would not discriminate in favor of the incomes in the higher brackets, as would the other plans.

For the fiscal year 1944 the revenue receipts would be increased, under the substitute, by $3,000,000,000, which is a starter at least on the $16,000,000,000 we are expecting to raise.

Mr. President, in brief I have stated what the substitute proposes. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate further; I was about to say I think it understands these questions, but it does not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have been studying the table on page 15 of the committee report to ascertain how much actual money would come into the Treasury under any of the plans which are now before us, or which are suggested. I can see how the income in the form of liability can be distributed, and frankly there is not a great deal of difference between the five or six plans set forth on page 15 with respect to income-tax liability. But when we come to the section "Income Tax Liabilities Due and Payable Into the Treasury" in fiscal years there is a wide difference. To Senators who serve on the Finance Committee this table probably is understandable. Frankly, to me it is not altogether clear as to how much less money, actual cash, will come into the Treasury under this, or that, or the other plan, as compared with existing law.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not have the report before me. If the Senator will lend me his copy I shall be glad to examine it. I will say to the Senator it is perfectly understandable that in such a period as we are now going through, when incomes are rising and are higher than they have ever been, by the forgiveness of the 1942 tax entirely and the speeding up and inducement to people to pay their taxes currently, probably there would be more actual cash coming in for a time than there would be under the old system, because under the old system the taxpayers can pay quarterly or semiannually. There, Mr. President, lies the trick. A "basement sale," as it were, is put on, and a great deal of money is brought in suddenly, but after that the market falls off for the succeeding month. By that "sale" an inducement is offered, the taxpayers are stimulated to come in and pay the 1943 taxes.

Let me say to the Senator from Maryland that this is something we cannot view simply for 1 year or for 2 or 3 years. We are obliged to view the long picture of the great national debt we owe, and whenever we forgive certain obligations, whether the tax money comes in cash at once or not, we are giving away an asset which would ultimately find its way into the Treasury and offset the public debt.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand the philosophy of the Senator's argument, it is that if we waive or cancel or forgive the tax for that year in which the Nation's income is large, the tax for that year is gone forever, and it can only be replaced later on by a tax in a year in which the income of the Nation is smaller.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I wanted to know, however, is how much money will come to the Treasury in this particular year under the different plans which are proposed. I am confused with respect to how much money would flow into the Treasury under the House plan, the old law, the Senate Finance Committee plan, the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas, and so forth.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that the George plan, for instance, breaks up the payment of the 25 percent into 2 years, and the taxpayers must pay 12½ percent of the 25 percent in the first year. It is perfectly conceivable that that will produce more revenue for the moment than the so-called Ruml plan. Under the House Ways and Means Committee bill the taxpayer would be required to pay only one-third of his 1942 taxes at the rate of 1941. I am not prepared, I will say to the Senator from Maryland, and I do not have the time now to go into all the questions involved. I will call some of the experts to give me certain information.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to divert the Senator from his argument.

Mr. CONNALLY. Such a maze exists, I will say to the Senator from Maryland, with respect to the different plans, that, with all deference to the Committee on Finance, I will say that I do not think there is anyone on the committee who completely understands all the angles and reactions. Taxation with us has become such a complex and involved matter that the Finance Committee in considering tax bills at any time could never make any progress or headway if it did not have available the experts of the Treasury. When a question arises we call on them for information as to what the effect of certain proposals would be, what the repercussions would be, what the reactions would be, and we are obliged to act on the basis of the information thus furnished.

Mr. President, the point I am trying to make, however, is that we cannot forgive—I do not care what year it is—a tax liability and maintain the financial or statistical position of the Government. If I go to a bank to borrow money the banker will say, "Mr. CONNALLY, we want a financial statement from you." I list on that statement what little chips and whetstones I possess. The banker will ask, "Have you any credit? Does anyone owe you anything?" That credit is one of my assets. He takes that into consideration. He looks forward to the time when payment is due and thinks that perhaps I will be able to pay him out of collections of what people owe me. It is not required that I have cash money in my pocket, but he wants to know that I have the resources with which to pay my loan.

Mr. President, if taxpayers pay 1942 taxes and then pay 1943 taxes, the Government will have 2 years taxes, will it not, in its Treasury? If they simply pay 1943 taxes, the Government will never have the 1942 taxes in the Treasury until kingdom come. It will never be there.

I wish to remind Senators that now is the flush period. We are in a period of great profits. We are in a period of prosperity. We are in a period of rising income. But when the war is over, when the accelerated rate of income from war production and war activities comes to an end, we are going to have a period of declining incomes and declining revenues. We probably will have an economic panic, and then, by reason of the decline, is the time when we shall have to put heavier and heavier taxes on the people. The rates will have to go up above the rates we now have levied.

Mr. President, I regret that I seem to be in a minority on this theory, but I cannot consent to abate or forgive $9,000,000,000 of the Treasury's money, the people's money, the Government's money, in order to lure somebody into current payment. The substitute which I offer carries the deduction principle. I am perfectly willing to take 20 percent out of my salary and have 20 percent taken out of the wages and salaries of everyone else, but the idea that the little income taxpayers are evading taxes, and that there are large defaults, is denied by the statistics of the Treasury Department. The statistics of the Treasury Department show that only a fraction of 1 percent of the taxpayers are in default.

Mr. President, it has been said that men receiving $10 or $15 a day in war plants will not pay their income taxes. There is a way to make them pay the taxes. There is a way to teach them how to save against the hour of payment. If they are to be tax-conscious, ought they not to know of the obligation they owe to the Government of the United States, which has made it possible for them to receive greatly enhanced incomes, and should they not save and provide to pay their taxes when they are due?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we adopt the 20-percent withholding tax about which the Senator is talking and to which every other Senator who has spoken on the question has referred, does it make any difference at all to the Treasury in which year the 20 percent is credited? Whether it is credited to 1942 or 1943, exactly the same number of dollars will flow into the Treasury.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then why is it not the sensible and the simple thing to continue under the present tax law and add the 20-percent withholding tax.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is exactly what the Senator from Texas favors.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that is what the amendment offered by the Senator's colleague [Mr. O'DANIEL] would accomplish.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am going to vote for that amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think that by the adoption of that amendment we would resolve this question very simply, and accomplish exactly what we all want to accomplish, and not forgive or double up.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has stated my position as I announced it the first time I spoke on the bill. I see no reason on earth, I say to the Senator from Utah, for forgiving anything. I should prefer that we go right on under the present tax system, and then levy the withholding tax, if it is desirable, for future years, and credit it to the taxpayer's account. That is all.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is right; and that is exactly my position. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I was talking about the percentage of delinquencies. I have before me a table coming from the Treasury Department, showing that in 1941, the delinquencies amounted to five-tenths of 1 percent, or one-half of 1 percent. For 1942 taxes—I suppose the figures relate to the returns—three-tenths of 1 percent were all that were delinquent; for 1940, 1.2 percent; for 1939, 1.2 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask if the figures the Senator is reading are for the persons who filed income-tax returns but neglected to pay the taxes when they were due, or whether they are for those who should have filed income-tax returns because their incomes were sufficiently large, but did not file them.

Mr. CONNALLY. The figures relate to the first branch of the Senator's inquiry, for when persons who should file income-tax returns do not file them at all, it is very difficult to find out who they are.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is the main argument in favor of making the deductions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interject at this point, let me say that I think one of the reasons why we have before us the tax-withholding plan, as I understand it, has been the supposition that many persons who heretofore have not paid income taxes have for the first time been shuttled into the income-tax brackets, but have not bothered to pay the taxes; and, therefore, the withholding tax is a device to reach them.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not been advised, beyond that, that there is any need for the withholding system. I still have an open mind on the subject, of course.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that, of course, he has put his finger on a very sensitive point. All the argument for the Ruml plan is based on the theory that it is necessary to have payments made currently because otherwise many persons will not file returns at all. But if the deductions or withholdings are to be provided for the people in that particular class, by providing that portions of all wages and salaries shall be withheld—for that is about the only way it can be done; it can be done only as to current salaries and wages; it cannot be done as to a grocer's business or other businesses of that sort—the difficulties will be met by the withholding provision, and at the same time we can go on with the present system in other respects. That is my point of view.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up any more time. When the Ruml plan was proposed, the people of the country and the Congress, in my opinion, were absolutely astounded. Then there opened up the campaign of propaganda over the radio, through the press, and by means of telegrams; and the thought of the desirability of getting current all at once took possession of the minds of a large segment of our population. But, Mr. President, the way to get current is not to give away what is due. The way to get current is to provide for withholdings to be made—if a system of withholding is desired—from the earnings of those who are not paying income taxes or who have not been in the habit of paying them, and to let the remainder of the people go right on paying as they have always paid. I pay every year; every other Member of the Senate pays every year. If we pay every year, what difference does it make to us whether theoretically the payment is made on 1942 or on 1943 incomes? Only our administrator or executors will be interested in that particular matter, at the time of our deaths.

So, Mr. President, as I have stated, I am against any remission or any abatement; but I offer the amendment for those Senators who want to provide some forgiveness and yet who are not prepared to swallow the Ruml plan.

The amendment in its entirety would amount to giving away about half as much—four and one-half billion dollars—as would the Ruml plan. Its rates are more equitably adjusted. The large taxpayers would not be given any favoritism. The distribution would be carried over the whole body of the taxpayers. The plan provides for a withholding tax on salaries and wages, and it further provides that when the taxpayer pays his 1942 tax on the basis of 1941 rates, he has to pay only that additional sum; and, if necessary, the Commissioner may give him 3 additional years in which to pay. So his income tax would be split up into six segments, under the most severe circumstances. That provision is simply an addition.

Mr. President, let me say a word further. Those members of the Senate who complain because of the fact that everyone will have to pay one-sixth or one-third in addition to his regular 1943 income tax, must remember that if that were the whole story that would be one thing, but it must not be forgotten that we shall have to raise $16,000,000,000 in additional taxes. Where we are to get them, I do not know. If we are to get them at all, we shall have to get them by raising the rates of most corporation taxes to still higher levels, and then by doubling the rates which the masses of the ordinary taxpayers are now paying. We cannot get much more from the very high brackets, because as to them we have already reached the point of unproductiveness.

However, that will not be all, I say to the Senate. In the dire necessities of the Government's need we may have to come to a sales tax, to levying a percentage tax on every transaction made by every man and woman in the United States. We must get the money; and every dollar we give away in the form of an abatement or a remission will have to be paid back into the Treasury out of the sweat, out of the blood, out of the toil, and out of the work of the horny hands of those whose incomes fall in the middle and lower brackets. Does the Senate want to do that?

Mr. President, I have a memorandum which is somewhat in the nature of a speech. I do not want to take the time of the Senate to read it, and I do not want it to appear in the RECORD as if I read it on the floor of the Senate. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that I may label it "Memorandum," and have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am against the Ruml plan not only because I am opposed to it but also because I believe a great many people do not understand how it works and have been misled by the strong publicity campaign which the newspapers and wealthy people of this country have been carrying on at great expense during the past 6 months.

Even the most basic ideas are confused. I would have thought that by this time everyone would understand clearly the fact that the Ruml plan actually forgives a year of taxes, not just theoretically, not at some indefinite future time of death, but now, the date when this bill became law. To my surprise some of my colleagues, even on the Senate Finance Committee, have denied this fact of forgiveness. Some have called it a postponement. The 1942 tax would not be postponed; it would never be paid. Some have said that in their opinion the Ruml plan does not really result in any financial gain to the taxpayer and that if they could be convinced that it does, they would vote against it. I suppose there is not much hope of trying to convince people who still hold this opinion after months of wrangling, but at least I am going to try.

This Ruml bill wipes out the income tax on the income for 1 year. On December 31, 1940, the taxpayer was in debt to the Federal Government for income taxes on 1940 income. On December 31, 1941, he was in debt to the Federal Government for the taxes on his 1941 income. On December 31, 1942, he was in debt to the Federal Government for the taxes on his 1942 income. Under the Ruml plan the amount of that 1942 debt is simply canceled without payment. What the taxpayer pays in 1943 is counted as payment of the tax on his 1943 income. He never pays the 1942 tax, now or any other time. He has simply and clearly been forgiven 1 year's taxes. The moment that forgiveness becomes effective, his estate or net worth is increased by the amount of the 1942 tax. For example, take a man with a $10,000 net income. That is a familiar amount to Members of this body. A married man with no dependents and $10,000 of net income would have a 1942 tax of $2,152. Under the Ruml plan that tax is wiped out, forgiven, canceled, remitted—call it what you please—and on the date that cancelation becomes effective, if this law is passed, the net worth of that man and every man like him is increased by $2,152.

Some people who admit that this is true—and of course it cannot be denied—say that the increase in estate is of no value until the man dies. That is certainly a new way to look at an increase in net worth and at the cancelation of a liability. A lot of us have other kinds of debts. Wiping out a debt certainly is a benefit I would feel now. I don't have to wait until I die to feel it.

If I am a businessman or a farmer and I want to borrow money from the bank, my banker will want to know what my assets are and what my liabilities are. My tax debt to the Federal Government is one of the liabilities that my banker is interested in. If that debt is wiped out, the chance that I am going to pay the bank is better. I shall be able to borrow more money or borrow it at a lower rate of interest. That is a real and immediate benefit.

But I don't need to borrow money from the bank to realize immediately the benefit of this decrease in my liabilities. If I have had any common sense and foresight, I have been saving money to pay my taxes. Through such saving—and most of the people who have substantial taxes to pay do save for taxes—at the end of each year I have set aside enough out of the income of that year to meet my tax debt. . was therefor. even, so far as the year was concerned. Thus, a $10,000 man who owed $2,152 tax debt by December 31, 1942, would have $2,152 out of his 1942 income to meet that debt. He is, likewise, at this moment accumulating savings out of his 1943 income to meet the tax debt which is being built up on account of 1943 income. If we cancel the 1942 tax liability of $2,152 he does not need to use the amounts he has saved up in 1942 to pay his taxes. With his tax debt wiped out, the savings that he made in 1942 to meet that debt are available for other purposes. He does not need the 1942 savings to pay his taxes during 1943 because the savings he is accumulating out of 1943 income for the tax for 1943, and which he expected to use in 1944, under a current system would be paid directly in 1943 on 1943 taxes. Under any pay-as-you-go plan each year provides the income to pay the taxes of that year. A person does not need to save to meet a liability due next year, for there is no overhanging liability. If the Ruml plan passes, that money you have saved up in 1942 to pay your taxes is free for you to use in any other way you wish. You can make it a permanent part of your capital. Or you can spend it. It is money in your pocket available now to do with what you wish. That is an immediate benefit. An acquaintance of mine has been buying tax-savings notes. After the Senate Finance Committee voted to forgive a year's taxes he said he was writing his banker to stop deducting money to buy more notes. He has a year's notes that he can cash. This is a real and immediate benefit from forgiveness.

Some people do not save specifically to pay taxes but do save for other purposes. The result is the same. The taxpayer's need for savings is less by the amount of the forgiven tax. Even people who have been unwise enough not to save anything get an immediate financial benefit from forgiveness because they are freed from the danger of having a debt to meet with no income from which to meet it.

It does not matter whether your income is going up, or going down, or remains the same. The minute the Ruml plan became law, every taxpayer would be immediately benefited by an increase in his net worth of 1 year's taxes and that increase in net worth gives an immediate benefit of the same kind as any other forgiveness of debt.

Let us look at the tax payments for a minute. A pay-as-you-go plan, whether it is tied up with Ruml forgiveness or not, speeds up collection of taxes by about 1 year. The taxpayer would no longer be given the favor he has had of waiting a year to pay his income taxes. It is this speeded up collection that results in the receipts of the Government not dropping out disastrously for a year. Pay-as-you-go means that tax payments respond more quickly to increases or decreases in tax rates. As long as incomes are going up, a pay-as-you-go system will bring in more money than our present system. The minute incomes turn downward—and I think all of us believe they will turn downward after this war—the tax collections will turn downward 1 year sooner than under present law. Then is when the Government will particularly feel the loss in actual receipts from forgiving a year's taxes.

How are Government receipts kept up when people retire or die? If they are, it will be due to new taxpayers who did not get the benefit of the forgiveness. New taxpayers who have taxable incomes for the first time in 1943 or thereafter would have to pay currently but would not have had a year's tax dropped out. They are the ones who will make up for the loss in revenue which comes from the older taxpayers' declining incomes, or loss in incomes, to the extent that it is made up without raising rates.

The proponents of the Ruml plan talk as if no one was going to die, or retire, or lose his income for a lifetime. People are dying every day. The Rumlites saw they could not support a forgiveness plan where the taxpayer died in 1942 so they deny the forgiveness in that case. They say they could not support it where he died in 1943, so they put in a special windfall provision to reduce or wipe out the forgiveness. But, if he dies in 1944, the final and full effect of forgiveness as well as the immediate benefit is felt. There will be many people dying in 1944 and in the early years thereafter. Moreover, there are many people who will retire in 1944, or 1945, or 1946, and who will then derive all the final benefits of the year's forgiveness. Like everybody else, they would get the increase in net worth at once in 1943. But they would also get quickly the benefits of not having the final year's tax to pay. The elderly taxpayer gets the maximum benefit out of this plan sooner instead of later. Moreover, the more elderly taxpayers are likely to be the ones with the large incomes.

The advocates of tax cancelation have made a big point about getting back some of this forgiveness in the estate tax. Of course, the minute they talk about getting it back and the minute they talk about windfall provisions, that minute they are admitting the benefits I have been talking about. But let us pass over that inconsistency. They talk as if the estate tax would recover the loss in income tax. This is obviously not the case. Under no circumstances could the estate-tax return to the Federal Government exceed 77 percent, since that is the maximum estate-tax ate and it applies only above $10,000,000.

By far the largest part of the estates will, of course, not fall in these very high brackets. Only about 1 percent of the people dying in the United States have estates large enough to be subject to any Federal estate tax whatever. Moreover, the law affords ample opportunity for giving away property without tax or at much lower tax rates. The gift loophole would greatly cut down the return through the estate tax. There is also no assurance that the funds represented by this forgiveness will remain in the estate. Being a windfall, they are available for expenditure. They can support a trip to California, or a summer home in the mountains. Or the forgiven tax may be invested and lost in business. Any one of a dozen things may happen to keep the return to the Government from being substantial. There will be some return, no doubt, but the total amount of it can hardly be more than minor.

So much for the question of whether there really is forgiveness and really is a benefit.

This Ruml plan is bad chiefly because of the way in which the forgiveness is distributed. There are all sorts of ideas of what is fair and what is just. I am not going to try to impose my ideas of what is fair on my colleagues. But I want to give you a few facts and see if you do not agree that a tax bill which distributes its forgiveness the way this one does is grossly inequitable, according to your standards of fairness.

At the top are the 60 or so people who have incomes of a million dollars or more. The effect of this Ruml plan of forgiveness is to remit for each of these people as much as they could possibly save in 6 years if they saved every cent of what they would have left after taxes. Now, I think Congress did what it thought was equitable when it put the existing tax rates on the higher incomes. I think Congress wanted to have that tax burden imposed. The effect of this forgiveness is to undo our progressive tax schedules to the tune of handing our most fortunate citizens—60 in number—as much as they would have left over 6 years under our tax laws.

The same thing is true to a lesser extent for other high incomes. The person with a $100,000 income would be forgiven the equivalent of 20 months' income after taxes. But a person with an income of $2,000 would get the equivalent of less than 1 month's income after taxes.

It needs to be pointed out that under this bill 60 people with net incomes of $1,000,000 and over will receive as much forgiveness under the plan as 2,800,000 people with net incomes of less than $1,000; as much as 750,000 people with net incomes of $1,000 to $2,000; and as much as 550,000 people with net incomes of $2,000 to $3,000; and the forgiveness for the 60 millionaires will represent a far larger proportional increase in the income remaining after taxes. The forgiveness will average 226 months of income after taxes for the 60 people with the largest incomes as compared to an average of slightly over a half month for the large number having small incomes of less than $1,000, slightly over a month's income for those with incomes of from $1,000 to $2,000, and a little less than a month's income for people with net incomes of $2,000 to $3,000.

I do not want to cast aspersions on the supporters of the Ruml plan, but in the light of the disproportionately large benefits to the high-income groups, is it any wonder that the issues of the Ruml plan have been consistently and persistently misstated in the newspapers and that the facts of the kind I am telling you have scarcely appeared at all? Is it any wonder that the editorials of our most prosperous newspapers have fanatically favored the Ruml plan? Is it any wonder that the financial leaders of the Nation have thrown their prestige behind the Ruml plan? The unfortunate fact is that the great masses of the people who will get little out of this and who, as I shall point out in a few minutes, will lose what little they do get—the unfortunate fact is that these people have not been informed by the newspapers and by the radio of what the truth is about the Ruml plan. The people are all mixed up. I am willing to prophesy that if this plan becomes law the politicians who run for our seats and try to take our places here will be better able to persuade them than the Treasury Department has.

Here are some more facts that you do not read about in the newspapers. In the last 3 years, 1940, 1941, and 1942, we have been imposing new taxes to pay for the defense effort and the war. Now it is proposed that we turn around and forgive taxes for the year 1942. A person who has steadily had an income of $5,000 has had imposed on him new additional taxes for the war, totaling $991 up through December 31, 1942. An amount equal to three-fourths of that $991 is forgiven under the Ruml plan. The person with the $100,000 income will have had the whole increase forgiven under the Ruml plan. So far as the increased war taxes are concerned, the slate will be clean for him as of January 1, 1943. Finally, the man who has been getting $1,000,000 year after year will not only have been forgiven all tax increases up to January 1, 1943, but at present tax rates for 3 years more. He will actually be better off as of January 1, 1943, by nearly $600,000, than if there had been no revenue act of 1940, 1941, and 1942, and no Ruml plan.

It is very unfortunate that this tax forgiveness proposal comes before the Senate as a separate issue. It should come here as part of the revenue bill. The President of the United States has asked for an additional $16,000,000,000. That is a conservative request in the light of the huge expenditures we are making and the terrific pressure of consumer purchasing power which threatens daily to break price ceilings and has made necessary extensive rationing and has given rise to black markets. Many people go along complacently as if our financing of the war was adequate. It is far from being adequate, either to raise the money the Government must have or to prevent inflation and other disastrous consequences during and after the war. And yet the bill before us does not raise $16,000,000,000. It does not raise any money, although it may result in a small immediate increase in receipts due to speeding up tax collections and to the so-called windfall provisions. It is not a revenue bill—it is a forgiveness bill. At a time when we should be raising $16,000,000,000 f additional revenue we are giving away nearly $9,000,000,000 of liabilities already owed to the Government. Now, you may be able to pick flaws with the idea that this $9,000,000,000 is a cashable asset of the Government. Be that as it may, the people know that forgiveness means a lightening of their burdens, as I have already shown you. It is certainly peculiar war psychology to tell the people of the United States that we can forgive the collection of $9,000,000,000 of tax liabilities in the middle of a war, when the need for revenue is as tremendous as it is. How can we expect in another month, or 2, or 3, or 4, to pass a bill increasing taxes as they should be increased—and as they must be increased if you and I and everyone else in the country is not to suffer, when we have told the American public that this is the time to decrease their taxes?

The matter is worse than that. Where are we going to get the $16,000,000,000? Obviously, we are not going to get it from the upper income brackets. We set an upper limit of 90 percent last year so that the full impact of the victory tax would not be felt by the top incomes. We are going to get the increased revenue out of the little fellow and out of the middle incomes. It does not matter how we do it. If we get it by a sales tax we get it out of the lowest incomes rather than out of the middle and higher ones. If we do it from an income tax, we protect the very lowest groups but get it out of some forty or forty-five million of our taxpayers, most of them with small and middle incomes. When we are through forgiving $9,000,000,000 and imposing $16,000,000,000 of additional taxes, those small and middle income groups will have nothing to show from this legislation. They will financially be far behind what they are now.

But the higher income groups are going to have a great deal to show from this year's legislation. The man with a million-dollar income is going to have 6 years of income after taxes to show for this year's legislation. There is no way by which we can take that from him and there is no way by which we can offset the gift by increasing the rates on his future income. He has a final net gain.

The small and middle incomes will get this forgiveness, to be sure, but it will not represent a net gain to them because we will have to impose on them much more than they gain. We shall simply have to if we are to get anything like $16,000,000,000. They would be very much better off if we were not to allow this forgiveness and to speed up collection of existing taxes instead of imposing as much new taxes. Taxpayers already owe the taxes on 1942 incomes. They received the income. By and large they saved money in 1942. The rate of saving in this country was higher in 1942 than it ever has been before. There would be little hardship in paying the 1942 tax over a period of 2 or 3 years while putting current taxes on a pay-as-you-go basis. It would be equitable and would merely be collecting what the taxpayers of this country now owe their Government. It would be simply removing the privilege of postponing payment by 1 year.

But what does this bill do? Does this bill get a substantial portion of the money we need by collecting the debts of people to the Government? It does not. It forgives all the taxpayers of the country 1 year's tax. It will be followed by a revenue measure which will in effect reimpose on the lower incomes and middle incomes the taxes which might have been gotten by collecting that debt. The upper income groups will have received benefits which cannot be taken away from them and which will permit them to retire and live in luxury the rest of their lives, without another stroke of work.

These are some of the things this bill does. Those are some of the reasons why I believe that the members of the Senate Finance Committee and the Members of this Body must not have been fully informed on the way the bill operates and on the effects it will have on the distribution of our tax burdens. It is not too late to kill this obnoxious plan and substitute some more rational measure in its place.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I rise at this time, not for the purpose of discussing the merits of the proposition for confiscation and double taxation, offered by the Senator from Texas, but simply to discuss a point of order. I do so at this time, because I preferred not to interrupt the Senator from Texas by rising to a point of order at the time when he called the representative of the Treasury Department to his side a moment ago. I had previously advised the Senator from Texas of my intention to advert to the rule of the Senate in this matter.

Mr. President, rule No. XXXIII of the Senate relates to the question of the privilege of the floor. I shall take the trouble to read the rule in full, Mr. President, in order to elaborate the point which I am about to make.

Rule XXXIII of the standing rules of the Senate is as follows:

RULE XXXIII. PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

No person shall be admitted to the floor of the Senate while in session, except as follows:

The President of the United States and his private secretary.

The President elect and Vice President elect of the United States.

Ex-Presidents and ex-Vice Presidents of the United States.

Judges of the Supreme Court.

Ex-Senators and Senators elect.

The officers and employees of the Senate in the discharge of their official duties.

Ex-Secretaries and ex-sergeants at arms of the Senate.

Members of the House of Representatives and Members elect.

Ex-Speakers of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, under the rule, not even an ex-Member of the House of Representatives is entitled to the privilege of the floor of this body, under the standing rule of the Senate. An exception is made in the case of those who have held the high honor of presiding over the House of Representatives.

The Sergeant at Arms of the House and his chief deputy and the Clerk of the House and his deputy.

Heads of the executive departments.

That is, Cabinet officers of the United States.

Ambassadors and Ministers of the United States.

Governors of States and Territories.

The General Commanding the Army.

The Senior Admiral of the Navy on the active list.

Not every admiral, not every general, but the General Commanding the Army and the Senior Admiral of the Navy on the active list.

Members of national legislatures of foreign countries.

Judges of the Court of Claims.

Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The Librarian of Congress and the Assistant Librarian in charge of the Law Library.

The Architect of the Capitol.

He, of course, is an official of the Senate and the House.

The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

Clerks to Senate committees and clerks to Senators when in the actual discharge of their official duties.

Clerks to Senators, to be admitted to the floor, must be regularly appointed and borne upon the rolls of the Secretary of the Senate as such.

Mr. President, under the explicit terms of the rule, those are the only persons who are entitled to be admitted to the floor of the Senate while the Senate is in session, and yet—and this does not apply only to the present debate—over a long period of time we have seen representatives of the various departments come into the Senate Chamber and sit around like crows on a limb, trying to influence the action of the Senate in passing on legislation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Of course, the Senator has stated the rule exactly as it is written.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have read the rule.

Mr. HILL. Since the Senator has made the statement which he has made about the departments, does he not think it is fair to say that although bringing representatives of the departments to the floor of the Senate has not been in accordance with the rule, as the Senator says, it has been the practice to do so?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am protesting against the practice. I am not only protesting against the practice, but I am particularly protesting against such an instance as this, in which representatives of the Treasury Department have come into the Senate Chamber for the purpose of opposing a measure approved and recommended to the Senate by an overwhelming majority of one of its great standing committees.

It is a matter of common knowledge that representatives of the Treasury Department have been on the floor of the Senate actively lobbying in opposition to the report submitted by the Finance Committee of the Senate. When the Senate adjourned yesterday there were a sufficient number of those representatives around the desk of the Senator from Louisiana, waving their arms, to have constituted a town meeting.

Mr. HILL. Is it not fair to say that the representatives who have come here from the Treasury Department and from other departments have come at the invitation or suggestion of some Member of the Senate?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not think there is the slightest doubt of it. I am not making these remarks for the purpose of criticizing the young men who come here from the Treasury Department. I am simply giving notice that I think the rule ought to be enforced or repealed. I think the practice has been a growing evil. I have seen examples of it on several previous occasions. I remember when Mr. Thomas Corcoran and Mr. Ben Cohen came here and took their places on the floor of the Senate alongside the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] advising him and whispering in his ear in connection with most important legislation. I have seen Army officers in uniform come here and sit beside a Senator. I think the practice is in violation of the rule, and ought to be stopped.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. For the purpose of the RECORD, let me say that Mr. Corcoran never came on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As a matter of fact, I think Tommy sat on the lounge outside the door, and Ben sat next to the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. Ben Cohen came here when the public utility holding company bill was before us, and he came at my request. Mr. Corcoran never came into the Chamber.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He sat on the couch which I can see through the door. The Senator is probably correct.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator probably saw him. I asked him to come here. The question was never raised, and he rendered valuable service when the bill was before the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I say, I did not raise the point of order when the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] turned around and called this young man to his side. I do not wish to make a personal issue of it, because I do not think it is the fault of the young man who came here. Treasury representatives have been in the habit of coming here and sitting around, giving advice. They are encouraged to do so by the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury, who gives advice to Congress through the newspapers almost daily, and by the attitude of Mr. Randolph Paul, general counsel of the Treasury Department, who tells on the radio what Congress ought to do, and what Congress must do. However, I call attention to the rule, with the suggestion that I think a great deal more attention should be paid to it in the future than has been paid to it in the past, or else the rule should be repealed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Of course, the Senator is well within his rights in calling attention to the rule. He has read the rule. Under the rule, gentlemen, who come not only from the Treasury Department but other departments, are not entitled to be admitted to the floor of the Senate. However, I do not think the Senator ought to give the impression to the Senate or to the country that these gentlemen have shoved themselves in here, so to speak, as lobbyists, on their own initiative. They have come here, whether they have come from the Treasury Department or from some other department, at the invitation and request of some Member of the Senate. Of course, the purpose of having them here, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has said, and as has been my experience on one or two occasions, is that the Senator in charge of a bill or some particular amendment may have the information which the representative of the department can give him, so that the Senator may transmit such information to the Senate.

The Senator is entirely within his rights in calling attention to this practice, but he ought not to give the impression that representatives of the departments have crowded into the Senate like lobbyists. They have come here at the request of Members of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I still have the floor.

I have already said that I recognize this practice as a growing evil. That is the reason I am calling attention to it today. I do not know who invited these gentlemen to come here. I do know that the practice has been an increasingly prevalent evil in the Senate. Almost anyone connected with any executive department has felt that he had the right to be admitted to the floor of the Senate. As a matter of fact, they pull at the coattails of Senators and give them advice. At the conclusion of the debate in the Senate yesterday I noted the occurrence to which I have referred, in the nature of a town meeting. I am now calling attention to the letter of the rule, with the suggestion that I think it should be enforced. I do not criticize the representatives of the Treasury Department particularly, because I have seen on the floor of the Senate representatives of almost every other department and commission. I have always thought that it was an evil to violate the rule of the Senate in that way, and I am now calling attention to the specific provisions of the rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Missouri is quite familiar with all the rules. However, the Senator knows that there is statutory law and there is common law. Common law grows up as a matter of custom, and statutory law supersedes the common law.

For years it has been the practice, at the request of Senators, to have representatives from the departments who are familiar with all the facts sit by them and respond to requests for information. As I stated to the Senate, the young man from the Treasury Department came here at my invitation, so that instead of my stopping in the middle of a speech and running through a pamphlet containing 10 or 15 pages, I could call on him, and in a moment, while I was talking about something else, he could have the information ready for us. If the Senator from Missouri is going to insist upon a strict construction of the rule, the legislative counsel who sits by the Senator from Georgia cannot remain in the Chamber.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me, I think that the head of the joint congressional committee staff is clearly entitled to be admitted to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Where does the rule say that he is entitled to be admitted to the floor of the Senate?

Mr. WHEELER. It is not in the rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is nothing in the rule which would entitle him to that privilege.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I disagree with the Senator. I think that the provision entitling clerks to Senate committees and clerks to Senators to be admitted to the floor of the Senate would apply to members of the staff of a joint legislative committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let us see if it does.

Clerks to Senate committees and clerks to Senators when in the actual discharge of their official duties. Clerks to Senators, to be admitted to the floor, must be regularly appointed and borne upon the rolls of the Secretary of the Senate as such.

That is, as clerks to Senators. The joint committee is not a Senate committee. It is a joint committee between the House and Senate.

I do not wish to exclude those gentlemen. I wish to have them here. I do not wish to shut the windows of my soul to information. I obtain a great deal of information from Senators, but there is some information which Senators do not have. I have found on several occasions that I can thus obtain information which is not in the possession of any Senator. So I think it is very helpful. I think it expedites the work of the Senate. If the rule is to be invoked harshly and rigidly, I should favor a modification or an amendment of it, because I believe the Senate needs information at times, and I am willing to receive information, but I want it to come from a reliable source. From my contacts with them I have never found among the representatives of the Treasury Department or other departments who have been sent here to aid Senators anyone who did not answer honestly and intelligently concerning the matters under inquiry. I never had one to press his views on me. I did not invite him here for that purpose. We may have our own views, but we certainly can obtain from these men factual information, as well as information concerning practices of the departments and their reactions to the laws which Congress has passed. So, Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri will exercise the able and gracious tolerance for which he is famed, and not insist on a rigid and strict enforcement of the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the matter which has been brought up by the Senator from Missouri.

It is obvious from a reading of the rule that a strict enforcement of it would exclude any person not mentioned directly in the rule and described therein, from having the privilege of the floor of the Senate. But, Mr. President, it is a matter of common knowledge that legislation, and the problems with which the House and the Senate have to deal have become so complex, and the duties, obligations, and problems confronting Senators have become so diverse, that it is impossible for any one Senator, no matter how hard he may work, to become an expert on complex questions such as those involving tax legislation.

I am proud of my membership on the Finance Committee. I think I can say, without making any comparison with any other committee, that the membership of the Finance Committee other than myself, is certainly representative of the ability which is lodged in this Chamber. Mr. President, I venture the assertion that if that committee had nothing else to do it could not frame and bring to the floor of the Senate a tax bill under conditions which confront us when we come to a revision of the tax laws, or the necessity of increasing revenue.

To my certain knowledge, Mr. President, ever since the Revenue Act of 1917 representatives of the Treasury Department have been upon the floor of the Senate, not to lobby, but to furnish information to Senators. I grant that they have been here in violation of a strict enforcement of the rule, but I also make the assertion that the Senate could not have legislated, it could not have discharged its responsibility in connection with these important measures without the assistance of experts here to give information impartially to any Senator who desired to ask for it—not argument, but information, I emphasize.

We have also had present with us since 1924, I believe, if my recollection serves me correctly, representatives of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation in connection with each revenue bill. I do not think they are privileged to the floor under the strict interpretation of the rule. Yet, I say that it would be a great mistake, and the work of the Senate upon revenue legislation would be greatly impaired, if the members of the staff of the joint committee could not be here likewise to furnish impartial information to Senators who disagree—sometimes very definitely and sharply—upon questions of policy in connection with revenue legislation.

It has been my experience, Mr. President, that both the experts of the Treasury Department and the experts of the joint committee have, insofar as humanly possible, endeavored to furnish impartially, and without bias, information to Senators who have disagreed violently upon principles as well as the application of principles to questions of taxation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is a member of the Finance Committee. Does he think the committee itself, the members of which are supposed to be well informed upon the subject, could get anywhere without the constant attendance of these experts before the committee? Does that not hold true also here in the Senate?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I made the statement that I do not believe the committee could discharge its responsibilities without the assistance of experts both from the joint committee and from the Treasury. I think it follows that the Senate could not discharge its responsibility as well as it does discharge it if it did not have the privilege of allowing these experts to be present here upon the floor of the Senate.

I would join with the Senator from Missouri in saying that we ought to modify the rule and make it definite and specific. But, unfortunately, Mr. President, or fortunately—I have never been able to decide which—the Senate does not enforce its rules. The Senate has operated usually on the principle of unanimous consent and practice. It is only when some advantage from a parliamentary standpoint can be obtained that the rules of the Senate are invoked.

That leads me to say that once a very able man came to the Senate of the United States. He had never had any experience in legislative bodies, but he had made a mark for himself in the world outside affairs of government. At various times during the first few months of his work in the Senate I saw him reading the Senate Manual, marking paragraphs of the rules. Occasionally he would raise his eyes from his book and a look of mystery and amazement would come over his face as I assumed he was attempting to apply the rule to the procedure which was taking place before his eyes.

I ventured to say to him that I thought that unless he intended to become involved in a filibuster, or unless he hoped at some time to take a parliamentary advantage as a result of knowledge of the rules, he certainly could learn nothing as to the daily activity and action of the Senate by a study of its rules, no matter how long he devoted himself to that purpose.

Mr. President, I hope at some time the Rules Committee will undertake a revision and modernization of the rules of the Senate, but it seems to me it would be unfortunate to invoke the rule now. I wish to join with the Senator from Texas in urging the Senator from Missouri not to invoke the rule in the midst of consideration of what is obviously a very complex and difficult tax bill or tax problem.

Mr. McFARLAND and Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall yield in a moment. I wish to say one further word.

I have observed the experts present upon the floor of the Senate, and I wish to say that there are only two experts from the Treasury Department whom I have recognized as being on the floor of the Senate during the time the pending bill has been under consideration. That is a lesser number than has usually been present. The other experts here are from the joint committee staff or from the legislative counsel's office of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.

I now yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he does not agree that this discussion shows the need for experts being employed by the Senate so that the Senate may rely on them and not be required to call in experts from the various departments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, we have available to us the experts of the joint committee. I certainly would join with the Senator in saying that I believe we need more expert service in the Senate. But unless the Senate and the House of Representatives are willing to appropriate a great deal more money for expert services than they have been willing to appropriate in the past, there will be a continuing need on the part of the Senate, when confronted with legislation such as tax legislation or complex legislation of other character, to call upon experts from various departments of the Government. I certainly hope that we will not place ourselves in such a position that we cannot obtain the information which is necessary to an intelligent consideration of the problems which confront us.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not understand that a motion has been submitted by the distinguished Senator from Missouri but that he has simply called attention to the rules. I hope very much that we may proceed with the bill. I regret the circumstances which have provoked this discussion, because I think the officials of the Treasury Department have usually come here at our insistence and request to aid and assist us, and I know that I have always found their assistance to be invaluable.

Mr. President, there is a point I should like to bring to the attention of the Senator from Texas. Since the proposal which I have made is not in the form of a substitute for the entire bill but is in the nature of a perfecting amendment to a particular section of the bill, the question has arisen in my mind—and my view has been confirmed by the statement of the Parliamentarian—that the vote upon that amendment should come before the vote upon the complete substitute, because, if the complete substitute should be adopted, I would have no opportunity to present my amendment. I did not think that was the situation when the Senator from Texas presented his amendment, because he very kindly said he would be glad to have my amendment presented first, but I think that is the situation at this time.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have assured the Senator from Georgia all along that I did not want to embarrass the status of his amendment in any way. I also propounded an inquiry or two with reference to the matter.

Mr. GEORGE. The amendment of the Senator from Texas would be in order after action on my amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. It would then be in order.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand the ruling of the Chair, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, if it does not go to the whole bill and is not a complete substitute, could be considered as being in the nature of a perfecting amendment, which would take precedence over my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Texas is correct. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia being in the nature of a perfecting amendment would take precedence.

Mr. CONNALLY. With that understanding, I have no objection. I desire to go along with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas very much. This question, I think, has been pretty thoroughly debated, and I do not care to elaborate on it, but I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate a few facts which, as I view them, may dissipate some confusion.

I think there can be little criticism made of the Canadian system and of the method by which they assess and collect their individual income taxes. I should like to read from the budget statement of the Minister of Finance of Canada under date of March 2, 1943, and I invite Senators who do not think there is any reason to change to a pay-as-you-earn basis to notice the common sense of the statement of the Canadian Minister of Finance.

The first and most important measure I shall propose—is the placing of our personal income tax on a pay-as-we-earn basis. In this way we will complete the transformation in our income tax begun with the enactment of the national-defense tax in 1941, and carried last year to an advanced stage both in collecting a graduated tax at the source and in collecting as early as possible after the income is received on which the tax is assessed.

Said the Minister—

That is precisely our problem.

I am proposing—

Said the Minister—

that beginning this year, 1943, the income tax currently collected at the source or paid in quarterly installments shall apply in respect of the tax to be assessed on the income of this current year, 1943. If Parliament sees fit to put this proposal into effect, we shall then be on a fully current income-tax basis. No one, speaking generally, will then be liable for large amounts of income tax on income he has earned in the past, except to the extent that adjustments in tentative tax deductions or payments must be made after the year's income is finally determined with accuracy.

Listen, I beg of my colleagues—

The advantages of a system of current payment of tax such as I propose are now well known, so I need only remind you of them. Under this plan, when a man's income falls off, his tax falls off with it; when his income rises, his tax rises with it. It enables us to avoid the lag in the payment of tax under our present system—a lag which now amounts to about 8 months—

In our case 15 months, because we are not on a partially current basis; Canada was on a current basis at the time, or prior to 1943—substantially less than it was several years ago, but still a problem to those suffering or expecting to suffer a reduction in income.

Need I remind the Senate and the country that the hour is inevitable when every taxpayer, must of necessity and without exception, witness the complete cessation of income, all of us, because all of us must eventually die.

The difficulties in the present system are most serious in the case of those whose incomes cease or decline severely because they enter the armed forces, lose their jobs, retire or die. Advocates of such a plan have made most people very much aware of the personal problems created in such situations by income tax debts. With taxes at present levels, such problems are now very difficult ones for any who have not made provision in advance for their taxes.

Our friends say that we ought all to make provision in advance for our taxes, but the answer is we do not do it; the answer is that humanity is not perfect, that it is weak, and there is no need to talk about what we should do either as a moral obligation or as a matter of convenience. We simply do not do it. Forty-four million taxpayers in this country will not do it. There need be no mistake about that. Reading further from the statement of the Canadian Minister of Finance:

For example, a young married man who has earned $40 a week during 1942 who wished to join the Air Force at the beginning of this year had to face the necessity of paying income tax of $282, on his civilian income of last year and out of his much lower service pay this year. Again, if a professional man earning, say, $5,000 a year, should die and leave behind a wife and two children, they would be liable for perhaps $831 of income taxes, whether or not there was any estate. The wage earner who loses his job would in many cases have anything up to several hundred dollars of income taxes to pay during the succeeding 6 months or year—taxes on income he had probably spent while he was earning it.

It is taxes on income which he most certainly would have spent in 90 cases out of every hundred.

Anyone who looks forward to early retirement on a pension considerably lower than his current earnings faces an almost insuperable barrier. We do not wish such persons either to exhaust what savings they have set aside or to be forced to break the law.

Mr. President, that is a pretty sound philosophy of government, we have to learn all over again in these United States, that before our citizens can furnish the money to the Government, they have to be permitted to earn it.

We hear a great deal about the pending proposal being a scheme to take care of the rich. Tax rates in Canada are very similar to ours, and let us take the case of an ordinary young man in any profession, say a lawyer, a teacher, a doctor, a dentist, one who earns five or six thousand dollars a year, and has a wife and two children. At any time when he dies he will owe nearly a thousand dollars in taxes, and perhaps the only thing on earth he leaves in his estate is a little four- or five-room house, and that house would have to be sold, or the widow would have to beg for extension at the Treasury, and at the tax collector's office, with this tax liability hanging over her head, and nothing with which to pay it, the income earner gone, and practically no estate at all.

The Minister of Finance said further:

There are other substantial advantages of a pay-as-we-earn plan. It enables us to make more effective use of collection at the source from earnings and to avoid many refunds and adjustments that would otherwise be necessary. Secondly, it will make it possible in the future to adjust our income-tax rates and collections more promptly when changes in economic or other circumstances make such adjustments desirable. In this way it will make the income tax a better instrument of fiscal policy in helping to maintain full employment.

It is to overcome the various types of difficulty which I have described, and to obtain the other advantages of having our taxes on a sound current basis that the Government is proposing now to complete the transformation of our income-tax system to a full pay-as-we-earn plan.

In the case of Canada, it is necessary to forgive only 50 percent of the tax on all earned income, carrying over the tax on unearned income until the date of the death of the decedent, with certain privileges of redemption by him.

Now I wish to read a few concluding words from this sober, thoughtful, tax executive, commenting on conditions in a country undergoing almost the same experiences we are undergoing, paralleling almost our own experiences here, a country at war, with rising incomes, with advancing wages. He says:

In order to make the change to a complete pay-as-we-earn system of taxation on the income of 1943 and subsequent years, it is necessary to make some adjustments of the tax on 1942 incomes.

He is right; there is no other way of doing it, because it is not possible to double up sufficiently to do it, without destroying the taxpayers.

I continue reading from the Minister of Finance:

If this is not done, we should have to pay a large part of the 1942 tax as well as the 1943 tax during the year 1943. If tax rates were substantially lower than they are, this overlapping would not be serious. With rates at their present high levels, we must avoid piling the unpaid portion of the 1942 tax liability on top of the current collections for 1943. This is the difficult problem of the transition to the pay-as-we-earn system. Nearly everyone has recognized the virtues of being on the pay-as-we-earn system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to be considered before the one offered by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; because mine is in the nature of a perfecting amendment, and has to be voted on first. The Senator from Texas has very kindly offered to permit that course to be followed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not know whether the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] is in the Chamber, but he has an amendment which I had hoped would be brought up ahead of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. His amendment proposes to assess a withholding tax, and apply it to the 1942 liability currently.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be very glad to do what I can to get a vote; I am trying to bring the debate to an end, and obtain a final determination.

I have spoken of the necessity of getting on a pay-as-you-earn basis. Regarding the wisdom and the necessity of that at this time, I do not see how reasonable minds can differ. It will cost something to do it, because we are not able to collect 2 years' taxes in 1 year.

The distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], on whose amendment we voted this morning, proposed to spread the 1942 tax over 5 years. On incomes of $250,000 and up there would have been exacted of the taxpayer many thousands of dollars more than his total earnings. With a provision for a 5-year period, when one has accounted for his living expenses, for his doctor's bills, and made all the other deductions, the Senator's amendment would have meant plain bankruptcy of every man in the United States earning $250,000, who paid taxes on it in 1942.

Under the amendment I am offering there would be a slight doubling up, and there would be, for the period of 2 years, an increase above the actual income of the taxpayer whose income reached $500,000 or more. It is perfectly clear that the income taxpayer whose income is above $500,000 can pay slightly more for 2 years for a privilege which is of inestimable benefit to him and to his estate, and which will enable his government to go on a pay-as-you-earn basis.

When one considers the high rates of our present income taxes, and when one considers that the taxpayer is always behind one full year, and contemplates the end of that taxpayer's life, or the end of his career as an earner, and adds the two taxes which may be exacted, or only one tax, if you please, if there be no taxable estate under the estate tax law, incomes will have to be very large before the widow and children of the deceased taxpayer can be assured of the retention of even small property holdings.

Mr. President, I have offered to do no more than the House did in its bill so far as the matter of revenue is concerned. Under the bill passed by the House the aggregate individual income tax is reduced by some 76 or nearly 77 percent—at least 76 percent—but that reduction is not uniform. It is a 100-percent reduction in the low brackets and it ranges to 19-percent deduction in the higher brackets.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the argument is made that that is the way it should be, but I do not see how reasonable men can take that position. If we are to have a progressive income-tax system, if we are to have it properly graduated—and while it is not perfect, it is graduated from the ground up to 88 percent, not considering the Victory tax of 5 percent on gross—if we have done a halfway job in graduating the tax on income and it rises, then the only fair and logical and consistent thing to do is to give to every taxpayer the same percentage reduction when there is to be a reduction made in the tax.

Mr. President, in 1924 we reduced taxes in this country effective as beginning in the calendar year 1923, by a flat 25 percent in everybody's tax. At one time, there was a proposal before the Ways and Means Committee to apply the same principle in the form of a flat 50-percent reduction of each individual's income tax. This is a true principle which, in my opinion we ought to apply in canceling or abating any part of the 1942 tax liability.

The bill as passed by the House, while it cancels about 76 percent of the 1942 liability, does not give equal treatment to all taxpayers. Some taxpayers have only 20 percent of their tax liability canceled while others have 100 percent canceled. In terms of cancelation under the bill passed by the House the cancelation ranges, as I have said, from 100 to 19 percent.

Mr. President, I invite Senators who are present to look at the committee bill and see what the amendment which I have proposed will accomplish so far as producing revenue is concerned. The amendment I have proposed would bring in a substantial amount of additional revenue to the Treasury and at the same time would make it possible for a taxpayer to go on a pay-as-you-earn basis. As has been pointed out, the committee bill technically cancels the entire 1942 liability, but in effect draws back or recoups $1,300,000,000, or 13 percent of that liability, through the two windfall provisions. The first windfall provision is estimated to bring in $900,000,000, the second $400,000,000.

The amendment I have proposed also technically cancels the 1942 liability, but in effect would recoup $3,129,000,000, or practically one-third of that liability. Of this total recoupment, $2,229,000,000 would represent 25 percent of the lower year, either 1942 or 1943 liability of all taxpayers, and $900,000,000 would represent the gain under the first windfall provision, whose effects would not be materially altered under or by my amendment.

By way of comparison, it has been estimated that $2,213,000,000, or about 23 percent of the 1942 liability, would remain uncanceled under the bill passed by the House. It will be noted that my amendment in effect would bring into the Treasury $1,829,000,000 more of the 1942 liability than would the Finance Committee bill as it stands, and $916,000,000 more than would the bill as passed by the House. Moreover these increases would be reflected in Treasury receipts almost immediately, that is in the fiscal years 1944 and 1945.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say upon this amendment, except to repeat that after the most careful thought and most careful consideration, I am convinced that the taxpayers can pay 25 percent straight through in all the brackets of the 1942 liability, and that being true, I do not think that we should abate it. Therefore, as much as I desire to go on a pay-as-you-earn basis, I believe we should recognize these facts and refuse to abate anything more than we are compelled to abate.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the substitute amendment which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has already presented to the Senate, and which he very kindly placed aside in order to give me a parliamentary status for the vote, except to say that under the amendment which I have offered, if the bill goes to conference, and it is the judgment of the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate, and of the two Houses subsequently, to accomplish substantially all that the Senator from Texas can accomplish under his substitute, it will be entirely within the province of the conferees and of the two Houses subsequently to do, by merely reducing or abating the 1942 tax by 50 percent. It would do it in the same way, because under the bill known as the committee bill in the House you go back to the 1941 rates and to the 1941 exemptions, you recalculate your income in 1942 by applying the rates and exemptions, doubling up the work placed upon the taxpayers, and immensely increasing the work of the Treasury Department and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. President, in the 1942 act we lowered exemptions and increased rates, which resulted in adding 7,000,000 taxpayers to the rolls. The substitute amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Texas would propose to repeal that provision in the 1942 act as to the year 1942, and to let these 7,000,000 taxpayers go free of all tax liability for that year.

Much as I regret it, Mr. President, I would not be able to support that measure. Much as I regret it, because I have the greatest confidence and respect for the House conferees and for the members of the House Ways and Means Committee, I could not support that particular measure. I do not think it is as good as a great many other proposals. Actually it will raise or retain for the Treasury more of the 1942 liability, but its effect is not to apply the reduction equally among our taxpayers.

I shall be glad to answer any questions with respect to the amendment I have offered, but its terms are so well understood and so clear to the minds of all Senators that perhaps no question is necessary.

Mr. President, I wish to offer the amendment in corrected form. The amendment has been printed, and there is no change in substance. There are simply certain technical corrections in the amendment as printed, and there is one subsection which was inadvertently omitted; but that subsection merely would give to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary, the power to administer the section I have amended, under rules and regulations to be promulgated by him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment as now presented as modified will be printed in the RECORD, unless the Senator desires to have it read.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; it is practically the same as the one read yesterday and printed in the RECORD. Unless some other Senator desires to have the amendment read, I see no necessity to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment, as modified, offered by Mr. GEORGE is as follows:

Page 97, line 19, strike out "and (2)" and insert: "(2) the tax under such chapter for the taxable year 1943 shall be increased by an amount equal to 25 percent of the tax for the taxable year 1942 (determined without regard to this subsection, without regard to interest and additions to such tax, and without regard to credits against such tax for amounts withheld at source), and (3)."

Page 98, line 12, strike out "such excess" and insert: "the sum of such excess plus an amount equal to 25 percent of the tax for the taxable year 1943 (so determined), which shall be in lieu of the increase therein under clause (2) of subsection (a)."

Page 98, beginning with the word "the" at the end of line 14, strike out down to and including the word "Secretary" in line 19 and insert: "in determining such increase the portion of such excess which is attributable to earned net income (as defined in section 25 (a) (4)), as determined under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, shall be disregarded."

"(C) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all subsequent taxable years during which he was in such service; or

"(3) if such individual entered upon such service after the close of the taxable year beginning in 1943,

"(A) that portion of the amount by which the tax for the taxable year 1943 is increased under section 6 (a) or (b) of the Current Tax Payment Act of 1943 which falls due (otherwise than by reason of an extension of time for payment) after entering upon such service, to the extent that such portion is so attributable;

"(B) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all taxable years during the whole of which he was in such service."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment——

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the question is put, unless there is to be argument——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me inquire what is the present parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia, as modified, has just been submitted; and the question will be on agreeing to it.

Mr. LODGE. As an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. As an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Has the Senator from Texas withdrawn his amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. Temporarily.

Mr. LODGE. Temporarily?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; because the adoption of his amendment, which was a complete substitute, would have precluded any further discussion on the committee version.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia were agreed to, would it then be impossible for the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] to offer his amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands not. The bill would be open to further amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think the Senator from Texas would be precluded from offering his amendment; and in the event that question should arise, I would ask that the Senator have the privilege of presenting it. I think undoubtedly he could present it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have only this final word to add: I believe that when the thoughtful people of the country—small taxpayers and large taxpayers—know all the facts they will not hesitate to say that the amendment I have offered to the bill should be agreed to, rather than the committee version, because it goes as far as it is necessary to go, in my opinion, in order to accomplish everything which should be properly accomplished by the committee version. I think the American people will feel, upon sober reflection, that the Congress should not take steps to abate the entire 1942 liability, when that is unnecessary.

So far as the committee plan is concerned, I frankly admit that if it were agreed to, there would come into the Treasury in 1943 the same amount of money as that under existing law, increased by any increase in income upon which the levy would be imposed, plus the windfalls. But all the windfall effect, of course, would not come in within the first fiscal year, because such items would be collected over a period of years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. From the statement the distinguished Senator from Georgia, the very able and much-beloved chairman of the Finance Committee, made in the Finance Committee, I have understood that it was the theory of the Senator from Georgia, in offering his substitute, that a certain amount of double taxation—which, of course, his proposal is, to the extent of 25 percent of the 1942 taxes—would be justifiable if taken as an increase in the forthcoming tax rates, and that it would be a substitute for an increase in the tax rates. Am I correct in that statement? I certainly so understood the Senator, as he made his original statement.

Mr. GEORGE. I may have made that statement, and I think I did make it in substance; but, of course, in that respect I was speaking for myself; I was not undertaking to bind the Treasury.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I understood that was the Senator's individual proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; and I still think so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But, of course, the Senator is familiar with the fact that, possibly for the purpose of increasing any effective support that there might be for the so-called Ellender plan, and perhaps for the purpose of trying to influence Senate action against either the committee amendment or the Senator's own substitute, the Secretary of the Treasury yesterday took occasion to announce that he was going to insist on the levying of $16,000,000,000 of new taxes. As I read his statement, he said Congress had to do that. Of course, I do not understand what authority the Secretary of the Treasury has to say that Congress has to do anything; but I so read the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Therefore, I take it that the Senator from Georgia is not in a position to say that his proposal would be a substitute for additional taxes. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I cannot say that; because I am not speaking for the Treasury. Frankly, although some part of the press has intimated that my plan has the approval of the Treasury, I do not think I should say that my plan does have the Treasury's approval—certainly not in the first degree; it might have in the second, third, or fourth degree.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But the Senator's own proposition, as presented to the Finance Committee, was that the increasing or doubling-up of taxes to the extent of 25 percent of 1942 income, which would be spread over 2 years, and would amount to a 12½-percent increase of taxes——

Mr. GEORGE. Not a 12½-percent increase; it would be a 12½-percent increase of the 1942 liability, which would be far less——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator is correct. As I was saying, the Senator's own proposition, as presented to the Finance Committee, was that the increasing or doubling-up of taxes to the extent of 25 percent of 1942 income would be taken in lieu of further taxes in the period in which the increase or doubling-up would be imposed; is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. I speak to the Senator in perfect frankness, and say that would be so only insofar as I myself am concerned.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understood that the Senator from Georgia was speaking only for himself. I am very much interested in his proposition, and I am interested in ascertaining now what it is. But, in view of the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, it seems to me that that very appealing argument for the plan of the Senator from Georgia has failed.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know why the Secretary of the Treasury made the statement, and I do not know what statement he made. I suspect that he expressed the hope that we might raise $15,000,000,000 or $16,000,000,000 of new taxes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, the Senator from Georgia is undoubtedly familiar with the fact that certain elements of the taxpayers of the country have taken that proposition, as it was understood by me and, I think, by every other member of the Finance Committee, and have been sending out telegrams urging the support of the Senator's proposal on the very basis that it might obviate an increase in corporation taxes.

Mr. GEORGE. I said nothing about corporation taxes, and corporation taxes are not involved in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I entirely agree with the Senator from Georgia on that point. However, a certain very powerful organization of large taxpayers, I am informed, not by authority of the organization itself, but by authority of a section of the organization, has been sending out telegrams, as the Senator may or may not know, supporting his amendment on the theory that it was the most effective way to prevent increased taxes on corporations during the period of the next 2 years. I refer to the National Association of Manufacturers, I say to the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I know nothing of the telegrams. I have conferred with no member of the association.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I was not suggesting that the Senator from Georgia had done so. I should like to have the Senator understand me on that point. I am not suggesting that the Senator from Georgia was a party to the sending out of the telegrams. As a matter of fact, I am informed by responsible officers of the National Association of Manufacturers that the telegrams were sent out not by that organization, but by an individual member of the organization who happened to be chairman of its tax committee. Nevertheless, the fact remains that within the last 2 days a considerable propaganda has been started in behalf of the Senator's substitute, on the theory that it would obviate any increase in corporation taxes.

Mr. GEORGE. As I see it, corporation taxes are certainly not involved in this bill either directly or indirectly. My position is that if 25 percent of the 1942 liability of the individual income taxpayer were carried over, as I have suggested, there should be no further increase in individual income-tax rates for the next 2 years. If the Republicans should take charge of the Senate 2 years hence—the good Lord forbid—I think we might safely anticipate that they would not suggest a further increase in individual income-tax rates.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TAFT. That was the very question I wished to ask the Senator. Of course, the assurance given by the Senator is only his own.

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. The Treasury certainly has given no such assurance, as I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. Not so far as I know.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to state also, for myself, that I certainly would give no such assurance. In my opinion individual income taxes should be raised during the next 2 years. Certainly I would not regard the increase which is proposed, of one-eighth of the tax, without any attempt to adjust the rates as between the lower and upper brackets, as adequate. In some cases I think the rates are too low, and in other cases I think they are too high. Certainly the passage of this bill would not lead me to think that we can set aside any possible increase in individual income taxes. I believe that individual income taxes should be increased.

Mr. GEORGE. I am speaking only for myself. I agree with the Senator from Ohio that there should be some adjustments in individual income-tax rates, but I would not be willing to vote for still further increases in the individual rates if 25 percent of the 1942 liability were carried over, as I have suggested. However, I am speaking only for myself. I am not undertaking to bind the Treasury, and I am not suggesting that my view represents the Treasury's attitude.

However, I hope that I may be permitted to live during the next 2 years, and that will be my position, particularly if this increase is now superimposed on top of the present rates. That would not preclude certain necessary adjustments which should be made.

I am very anxious to have the opportunity to make some adjustment in the Victory tax, and particularly in the provision for crediting that tax in the computation of income for general income-tax purposes. However, those questions are, of course, not precluded by my statement. I would not undertake to influence any Senator to vote for this proposal in the hope that there would be no further increase in individual income taxes, but I can say with great confidence that there is certainly much stronger probability that we shall face a demand for an increase in the individual income-tax rates if the committee bill is enacted as it was reported to this body, and that demand will be very difficult to resist.

So far as the corporate rates are concerned, I think my own opinion is fairly well known to the country. I know nothing of any telegram which anyone sent, why he sent it, or what may have influenced the sending of the telegram; and I do not care. I have never been afraid that any kind of propaganda would persuade me to do wrong. I have never been afraid to talk to anyone because I have never believed that anyone, by talking to me, could make me believe something that was not true.

I have received many protests against the proposal. The C. I. O. is against it. If Senators wish to adopt the C. I. O. program, they may do so. I do not ask Senators to compare one program to another according to the endorsers of the respective programs. I do not care a continental who endorses my proposal outside the Senate. I have made it in the interest of the American people, the American taxpayers, and the Treasury of the United States. On that ground I stand.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one suggestion?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to make it very clear to the Senator from Georgia and to the Senate that I was not suggesting in any way that the Senator from Georgia had anything whatever to do with sending the telegrams to which I referred. I know that what the Senator from Georgia has said as to his attitude on this and other legislative matters is absolutely true. I know that from 10 years' service with him in this body. I simply called attention to this matter because it seemed to me that the sending of the telegrams might be based on a misapprehension of the effect of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe I understand the position of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator desires to speak, I shall be glad to withhold my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to address the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withdraw my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, does the Senator wish to have a quorum call?

Mr. TAFT. I do not believe it is necessary.

Mr. President, I have not taken a very active part in the discussion of this particular amendment, and I do not feel so enthusiastic in favor of the Ruml plan as some other Members of the Senate may feel—certainly not so enthusiastic as some members of the press. When it was first presented last summer it seemed to be of relative unimportance; and I still think it is relatively unimportant, compared with some of the more important issues of taxation and the financing of the war.

It seems to me that the Ruml plan would leave us just about where we are. I never could see that the Ruml plan would greatly change my liability or change the Government's revenue, or make any substantial change in the realities of the situation. So at that time, while I was mildly in favor of it, I took no particular interest in its presentation.

More and more, however, as we went on it became apparent that we had to have a withholding tax. If we are to have a withholding tax, a situation is produced in which we must deal with the problem raised by the Ruml plan.

The one thing which seemed to me to be unfortunate is the Treasury's proposal of last summer, however, and the ground on which I object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, is that 2 years' taxes are made payable in 1 year. That is the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. It is an increase of taxes. The taxpayer would pay all his taxes for 1943, and in addition, one-eighth of his tax for 1942. The next year he would pay all his taxes for 1944, and one-eighth of the 1942 tax in addition.

If we are to increase income taxes, I think we ought to increase them directly. We ought to increase them after a consideration of the whole problem of all the taxpayers, and consideration of the question of where the burden ought to fall. We ought not to increase them by telling a taxpayer that he must pay two taxes in 1 year.

It seems to me that the objection which has been raised against the other amendments proposed is equally an argument against the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

I have never been able to understand the theory that the Ruml plan is forgiveness. If we were really forgiving taxes, it seems to me that the arguments presented by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] would be valid. I have never been able to see where there is any forgiveness. Let us look at the question from two points of view—from the point of view of the Government, and the point of view of the individual taxpayer. From the Government's point of view, how can there be any forgiveness when the Government receives the same amount of money every year, whether or not the Ruml plan is adopted? As a matter of fact, over a long period the Government would receive exactly the same—probably more in the long run—under the Ruml plan as it would receive under the other plan.

It is said that the 1942 taxes are to be forgiven; but at the same time that it is proposed to forgive the 1942 taxes, it is proposed that the taxpayer pay the 1943 taxes, which would not otherwise be payable until 1944, in the year 1943, when otherwise the taxpayer would pay his 1942 taxes. Sc he would pay exactly the same amount whether we adopt the Ruml plan or not.

In 1943 the Government would actually receive more money under the Ruml plan that it would under any of the other plans. In 1944 it would still receive more money. In the long run the Government will always receive more money when the national income is rising. It is rising now, and is likely to rise again in 1944, and in 1945.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think the Senator from Ohio means to say that under the Ruml plan the Treasury would receive more money in the fiscal year 1944 than it would under the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. TAFT. No, I think not; because the Senator is proposing that 2 years' taxes be paid in 1 year. Of course, if that were done, more money would be collected than under any other plan. I was really referring to the amendment presented by the Senator from Texas. His amendment is in opposition to the Ruml plan altogether.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not think it is an accurate statement to say that under the Ruml plan more taxes would be collected in 1944 than under any other plan. If the taxes are to be collected as they are collected under the present law, if no change were made whatever, we would collect just as much in the way of taxes for 1944 as we would under the Ruml plan. We would collect them, however, in 1945.

Mr. TAFT. I was assuming that the national income would still be rising in 1944. It has risen every year so far. The Government would collect taxes on the 1944 income which would be greater than for 1943. It would collect more money in 1944 under the Ruml plan than under existing law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The point is that the Government would collect the 1944 liability in 1945.

Mr. TAFT. That may be; but——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is not "may be"; it is absolutely true.

Mr. TAFT. The Government will collect the same amount of money; and when we make a budget today for 1944, we are concerned as to how much money the Government will collect in 1944, not in 1945. In the long run the Government is in exactly the same condition it would be in whether we adopted the Ruml plan or did not adopt it, because in the years of rising income the Government would get advantage of that income more quickly, and in years of a falling income the Government would feel the effect of the lowered income more quickly, and therefore it would collect less money. I think in the long run the Government would receive the same amount of money, whether we adopt the Ruml plan or did not adopt it. The only difference in the world between the two plans is that at the end of each year the Government does not have on its books a lot of accounts receivable in taxes. And what good are they, Mr. President? The Government cannot sell them, cash in on them, or use them in any way. As a matter of fact, the Government actually pays me interest on the money I loan the Government on tax anticipation notes, which it will later pay back to help me pay my taxes next year. Those accounts receivable on the Government books would not make any difference, and in 1980, if you please, the Government would be in exactly the same financial condition under one plan as under the other, except that in 1980 it would not have those accounts receivable on its books. That is the only effect I can see of the adoption of the Ruml plan, so far as the Government is concerned.

There are certainly many individuals to whom the Ruml plan might make a difference. However, so far as I myself am concerned, I do not see any difference. I would pay in 1943 actually the same amount under the Ruml plan as I would pay under the existing law. It would be just the same, dollar for dollar, unless there should be imposed on me the additional 12½-percent tax, as proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. Otherwise I would pay the same amount, and next year I would pay the same amount.

When national income or individual income is falling, it is true that one would pay less money under the amendment proposed than he would under the existing law. Should not that be so? If the national income at any time drops from $100,000,000,000 to $80,000,000,000, should not the tax burden of the people be reduced? Is not that a sound policy of taxation? And when the national income increases, should not the Government get the advantage of the increase more quickly? Should we not have that additional income reflected in greater taxes more quickly than under the present plan? As a matter of fact, if my income is falling off, I think I ought to pay a lower tax in the year in which the income falls off. That seems to me to be a sound policy of taxation. But, as a matter of fact, the great bulk of people pay from year to year about the same income tax. The only time a person receives an advantage is when he dies, and his estate is left without any income tax to pay. That, as a rule, would result in an increase in the estate tax, and probably result in the Government recovering about 50 percent of the money not paid in income taxes. But consider the continuation of that property. If that man had property and was receiving income from it, the property would presumably go to his heirs, and under the Ruml plan his heirs would begin to pay taxes 1 year sooner than they would otherwise pay under the existing law. So, what is lost from the man who dies is made up by 1 year's equivalent collection of taxes from his heirs.

The Senator from Virginia stated that when his term came to an end and his income of $10,000 a year was reduced to nothing—which was a violent assumption, as I pointed out—if we suppose there could be such a case, there would be a successor from the State of Virginia who would receive $10,000, and the successor would have to pay 1 year sooner on the $10,000 salary which he would be receiving from the United States Government. So the Government would be losing nothing. The mere fact that we can find here and there some case in which somebody derives an advantage by having all these taxes moved up 1 year does not seem to me a valid argument against the general policy.

So far as the claim is concerned that there is forgiveness of $9,000,000,000 in taxes, it seems to me that we have departed very far from the realities. The Government gets just as many dollars every year from now to about 1980 or 2000. It is very hard for me to see how it can be said to be giving up $9,000,000,000. There would be no forgiveness.

The result is that when we come to the point of dealing with the additional tax proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, what we are really asked to do is to increase everybody's income tax. That is admitted. If there is really any forgiveness, how could it possibly result in an increase in people's taxes?

It is said there is a 75-percent forgiveness. Yes; but it is imposing such a tremendous additional burden on the taxpayers of the United States during the next 2 years, that the Senator says he is opposed to any additional increase in rates of any kind on individual incomes. There can be no forgiveness in that plan. It is a plan to impose additional taxes; to impose part of 2 years' taxes in 1 year.

I think there should be additional taxes, but I do not think taxes should be increased by adding one-eighth to the amount everyone pays in taxes. If we need more money, we ought to approach the whole problem and consider corporations and individuals alike, and try to work out an equitable burden over the whole field of taxes in connection with all the taxes.

The purpose of the pending bill is merely to provide a withholding tax and as nearly as possible to put people on an equal basis. The Treasury has said, and properly so, that whether the Congress passes this bill or not, it will propose immediately another bill to increase taxes. I believe it will, and I think we should consider that bill. I do not think we ought to take this bill and use it as a means of increasing people's taxes.

Reference has been made to the fact that the National Association of Manufacturers has sent out telegrams. I have received I suppose from 50 to 100 telegrams from leading manufacturers of my State as a result of the telegram which was sent by the National Manufacturers' Association, which said "Vote for the George amendment, because if you do it will mean an indefinite postponement of additional taxes, particularly on corporations," and this 12½ percent increase on every individual in the United States who pays taxes is going to protect the corporations and protect all the rest of us individually against greater increases than 12½ percent.

Certainly it seems to me that we would be going a long way from the proper purposes of a pay-as-you-go tax bill. If there is any forgiveness involved in this bill, we should not pass it at all, or pass the House text, or simply provide that money withheld shall be applied on last year's tax. But if it is not forgiveness, and I am convinced it is not, we should certainly not adopt the George amendment as a means of increasing the individual taxes 12½ percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Caraway	Hatch
Austin	Chandler	Hawkes
Bailey	Chavez	Hayden
Ball	Clark, Idaho	Hill
Bankhead	Clark, Mo.	Holman
Barbour	Connally	Johnson, Colo.
Bilbo	Danaher	Kilgore

Radcliffe	Thomas, Okla.	White
Reed	Thomas, Utah	Wiley
Revercomb	Tobey	Wilson
Reynolds	Tunnell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is absent because of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS], who, if present, would vote "nay." I am prepared to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. If he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent conducting hearings in the West on behalf of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. WALLGREN] are out of the city conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate National Defense.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is detained on important public business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is detained in one of the Government departments on matters pertaining to his State. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

I further announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who if present and voting would vote "yea," is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who if present and voting would vote "nay."

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who if present and voting would vote "yea," is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], who if present and voting would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 32; nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—32

Bailey	Hayden	Robertson
Ball	Hill	Russell
Bilbo	Holman	Scrugham

So Mr. GEORGE'S amendment, as modified, to the amendment of the committee, as amended, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I realize that a stage has been reached in the consideration of the problem before the Senate where it is probably impossible for debate to have any effect upon the ultimate outcome. However, in view of the importance of the question under consideration, I wish briefly to state my position for the RECORD. I ask my colleagues to bear with me, because I am slightly indisposed today, and therefore I shall not be able to speak long and to cover as much ground as I had intended.

I feel that our country faces not only the gravest military crisis ever confronted by any nation in the history of the world, but I feel likewise that we face the most serious fiscal crisis any nation in modern times has ever been forced to confront.

I yield to no man, in this Chamber or out of it, in my firm confidence in the vast productive capacity of this Nation and its people. However, no other nation in all the written history of the world has ever undertaken such a task as that which this Nation has assumed in this war. We are attempting not only to raise, equip, and to carry overseas a huge Army of our own; we are also attempting to act as the arsenal for the United Nations, not only for their actual munitions and equipment of war, but even so far as a substantial part of their food and clothing is concerned.

Mr. President, this has resulted in appropriations of money the sums of which I contend are beyond the comprehension of the human mind. It may be, and I do not question, that there are mathematicians who understand the mathematics of the figures which we use in connection with the stupendous and unprecedented appropriation record of the American Congress since 1939, but I insist that there is no one in this Chamber or out of it who knows what these figures mean, when translated into dollars and cents, in terms of wealth and the productive capacity necessary to produce these sums of money.

Naturally, Mr. President, with this huge expenditure of money we are, and have been from the beginning of our defense program, in danger of experiencing a run-away inflation. When I use that term I wish to distinguish clearly and concisely between a rising price level, which I think all too often people have characterized as inflation, and that form of inflation which comes when there is a flight from currency into goods. Every intelligent person knows that if such inflation as I have described is experienced by this Nation, all citizens of the United States will suffer. They will suffer the loss of their accumulated savings. Those who are creditors will suffer the loss of their assets. But over and above that, Mr. President, if any such unfortunate condition ever descends upon America we shall be in danger of losing all the things for which we say we are fighting this war.

It is a blind man, indeed, Mr. President, who cannot see that one of the principal things which produced totalitarianism in this world was the uncontrolled inflation which swept over the countries that became the victims of totalitarianism. So far as my limited knowledge of history goes, there is no nation in all history in which the liberties of people have existed, that has preserved them under a runaway, uncontrolled inflation.

Mr. President, there are certain methods by which a government may seek to prevent an inflation in the face of stupendous expenditures. One is by setting prices and attempting to regulate the prices of commodities. Another method, when commodities are scarce in relation to purchasing power, is to ration the distribution of such commodities. Another method is to utilize the taxing power of government to subtract from the income stream of the citizens large portions of the purchasing power which are over and above the available goods and services to be purchased therewith.

In view of the astronomical character of our appropriations and expenditures it seems to me that we are indeed caught in a strange situation when the Congress of the United States, first in the House of Representatives and now in the Senate, for the first 4 months of its session, should have been the scene of a bitter struggle over how much of the tax liability owing and assessed against the taxpayers of the United States should be abated, canceled, or forgiven.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I wonder if the Senator has given any thought to another possible alternative, and that is a capital levy, which is almost an anathema at this moment, but which, if properly worked out from a mechanical standpoint, may solve many of the difficulties which the Senator is dwelling upon in so scholarly a fashion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am frank to confess that I have never given any serious consideration to a capital levy. Such time as I have had to devote to matters of taxation has been devoted to meeting the growing need for greater taxation and more equitable taxation. I have never devoted any time to the consideration of a capital levy, because I have always considered it to be unconstitutional, and therefore futile.

I repeat, Mr. President, that it seems absolutely incomprehensible to me that we should have devoted such a large portion of the first session of this Congress to a clash over how much of the 1942 tax liability already assessed and partially collected the Congress should abate, cancel, or forgive. In my opinion, it is very unfortunate that we are forced to consider as a separate problem the question of the advisability and the practicability of making a portion or all of the taxpayers in this country current when there exists the absolute, urgent necessity of increasing the amount of money which is being collected from the taxpayers.

I venture the assertion that many of the words—and there have been millions of them—which have been uttered in this debate in the two Houses of Congress and in the country would never have been uttered if we were attempting to achieve a certain goal in the collection of increased taxes from the taxpayers of the United States. It is only because we are considering this question as a sole and single question, seemingly unrelated to the question of the urgent need of the Treasury for increased revenue, that we are able to feel we are in a position to abate, cancel, or forgive all or a portion of the 1942 tax liability of the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. President, one could go on at great length in discussing the question of inflation. It is not my purpose to do so, but I do wish to point out one state of facts which it seems to me should impress every Senator who is considering the problem before us. The national income for 1943 is estimated, as I understand, by the most recent estimates, to be $135,000,000,000. We are collecting about $15,000,000,000 in personal taxes. If we subtract the taxes from the national income we find that $120,000,000,000 over and above personal taxes is in the hands of people in this country, or will have passed through their hands by the end of 1943. During this year it is estimated that there will be available, due to the sharp curtailment of civilian supplies, only $65,000,000,000 worth of goods and services. So, it is obvious that there are approximately $55,000,000,000, over and above personal taxes, goods, and services, which could become, and probably will become, a great inflationary influence in this country. In fact, Mr. President, in my humble opinion, unless we have the courage to be realistic in our application of taxes, all other efforts to prevent inflation by other methods will fail.

As has been mentioned so many times in the debate, the President of the United States in his Budget message—and again on yesterday, the Secretary of the Treasury reiterated the President's statement—said that $16,000,000,000 is requested by the executive arm of the Government.

Mr. President, in this connection I desire to point out that one of the battles we are fighting on the economic front in this war is to prevent inflation and to carry our Nation through the war in as sound an economic condition as possible, in order that we may successfully face and deal with the post-war problems. We should take warning from the fact that this great Nation, the richest Nation on earth, is raising by taxation only a small percentage of the funds required for its total expenditures. It is estimated that in 1943 this country will obtain from tax revenues only 28 percent of its expenditures, whereas Canada will raise 48.1 percent, and the United Kingdom will raise 46.3 percent. I offer a table with the supporting figures, and ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Tax revenues as a percent of expenditures for National Governments in the United States, Canada, and the United Kingdom for fiscal fiscal year 1943

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I say that we should take into consideration the economic conditions our country will face. In my opinion, we do not discharge our full responsibility to posterity, we do not discharge our full responsibility, if you please, to the men who are fighting on all the far-flung battle fronts, if we do not have the courage to tax heavily enough to maintain a sound economy to which our fighting men can return with the expectation of resuming a somewhat normal life.

Therefore, Mr. President, in my humble opinion, in our approach to the pending bill and amendments we should not separate these problems, even if they are separated at the time of our consideration of them. For I feel certain that when the temporary insanity which, it seems to me, has seized upon the Congress and the country is dissipated and lifted, we shall realize that we must assume our responsibility and must discharge it, and that before the end of the present taxable year we shall have pending in this Chamber a tax bill designed to raise by taxation more revenue than we are now raising. When we are confronted with that situation, Mr. President, when we are confronted with the need to raise more money in taxes this year, I think we shall realize that the Congress and the country have been caught in a mare's nest in the consideration of these various proposals.

Mr. President, how did the question of current collection of taxes happen to be raised? It happened to be raised because in the exercise of our plenary power to tax, we decided that in the face of the great burden confronting the Treasury we would have to dip down into the low-income groups of our people and ask them out of their meager incomes—many of them so low as not to furnish a decent standard of living—to contribute toward meeting the extraordinary burden created by the war. To accomplish that end, we lowered the personal exemptions and we imposed the Victory tax.

Mr. President, that was how the main question of current collection of taxes came to be raised—in that way and also in connection with the problem of men going into the armed services who find themselves with less income than they had in private life.

Collection at the source is provided for in all the measures, so far as I know, upon which the Senate will vote this afternoon before it concludes consideration of the pending bill. Under all the plans, as I understand them, at least 70 percent of the taxpayers will be made current in their tax payments, because the withholding tax provided will be sufficient, under existing law and exemptions, to discharge their tax liabilities to the Government. In other words, at least 30,000,000 of our taxpayers will be made current in their tax payments through the withholding tax, insofar as any of the plans upon which the Senate will vote are concerned.

But beyond that we are considering, Mr. President, the problem of the 14,000,000 taxpayers who will not become absolutely current in their tax payments because they do not derive their incomes from salaries and wages or do not have a sufficient amount of their income deducted at the source in order to discharge their current tax liabilities. I recognize that Congress and the country have become enamored of current collection of taxes. I confess that I fell victim to the blandishments of that suggestion. But I should like to say, in passing, that in my opinion the group which does not have a collection at the source of an amount sufficient to discharge its full tax liabilities will find the methods proposed in these measures—proposals of quarterly returns and estimates of income—more onerous and less desirable than the existing law, as it has worked out in their experience. Certainly it would make the administration of the law more complicated, and it certainly would require a great many more persons in the Bureau to collect the taxes.

Mr. President, there are 4,000,000 taxpayers whose incomes exceed the first surtax bracket after exemption, and they, of course, are the persons whom we normally speak of as being in the middle or upper brackets of income. Despite the fact that many middle-bracket taxpayers would receive substantial abatements under the Finance Committee bill, it is my belief that in the long run, in view of the over-all revenue problems with which we are confronted, the taxpayers in the middle- and lower-income brackets would be better off if we would inaugurate current collections on 1943 incomes on July 1, 1943, without canceling the 1942 liability, and would permit taxpayers to pay in quarterly installments in 1944 that part of their 1943 income tax not paid by current collections in 1943. I recognize that this would mean a stiff burden; but, Mr. President, if we are to prevent inflation in this country, from which all persons would suffer grievously, we must stiffen the burden upon the taxpayer. Such a program would have produced about $8,000,000,000 in additional revenue and would have gone a long way toward meeting the fiscal problems of the Government. At least the taxpayer would know early in the year what his burden in 1943 is going to be.

Now, I fear that the taxpayers will be subjected to the same tragic experience which they suffered in connection with the 1942 tax bill. I fear that once collection-at-the-source has been written upon the statute books it will be many months before another revenue bill can be fought through the Ways and Means Committee, the House of Representatives, the Senate, and conference, and become law. And throughout all that time the taxpayer will be in the dark as to his final tax bill.

However, Mr. President, I was in no position to write the ticket, and so, as I see it, we are confronted with a series of choices. If we are to cancel, abate, or forgive the 1942 tax liability, the question is, How much shall be abated and to what groups shall that abatement be given?

In my humble opinion, the greatest fallacy in this whole debate is the idea that the tax liability assessed and due from the individual taxpayer is something which belongs to the particular individual. It does not. As I see it, it is an obligation which he owes under existing law as a citizen to his Government. It is his share of the cost of Government in 1942, and that portion of the cost of the war which the Government saw fit to levy in the form of taxes. He has enjoyed that income. He has either spent it all or saved a portion of it.

It seems to me that the contention that if we now move in the direction of abatement, cancelation, or forgiveness at all, we must return something to the taxpayer because it belongs to him does not bear analysis. Of course, the Government has the right to cancel all or a part of the 1942 tax liability of any individual or any group of individuals, but, in my judgment, that would be only an act of grace on the part of the Government. In my opinion, it would be justified only if we should come to the conclusion that the taxpayer cannot afford to pay the tax liability which has been assessed against him.

Therefore, Mr. President, as I view it, it is a question of policy; but in the event that we are, as a matter of policy, to cancel this obligation, we should be governed by the facts, and, so far as it is applicable, we should be governed by the principle of ability to pay.

I have never known of a question which has come before Congress in all the years that I have been a Member of it which has brought such a sharp division of opinion among honest men as to what the proposal of cancelation or abatement actually would accomplish. I read the debates in the House; I read the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee; I listened to the debate in the Senate; and on each and every one of those occasions there was a sharp difference of opinion among perfectly honest men. The difficulty has been in obtaining a stipulation of facts as a premise from which men could argue as to the policy which should be adopted.

Mr. President, I wish to make a few statements concerning the effect of canceling the 1942 taxes, which statements, it seems to me, are incontrovertible, although I recognize that there are Senators supporting the committee bill who would contend that statement is not correct. These comments, Mr. President, for the sake of some simplicity, disregard the operation of the antiwindfall provisions of the committee bill, and attempt to deal with abatement of 1942 taxes for a moment as a naked issue.

Taxpayers who had taxable income in 1942 under the committee bill would pay 1 year less taxes during their taxpaying lifetime. The tax which they would not pay would be the tax on their 1942 income. Taxes on incomes of 1943 and later years would be paid 1 year sooner than under the existing law. So long as income, exemption status, and tax rates all remain unchanged from the 1942 level, annual tax payments remain unchanged, and are the same as they would be under the existing law. Thus a taxpayer with an annual net income of $10,000, who is married and has no dependents, would pay $2,152 in 1943 and in each subsequent year in which there was no change in his income-exemption status or tax rate.

If the taxpayer's income rises from one year to the next, the increase in tax payments takes place 1 year sooner than under present law. Thus a person with a net income in 1942 of $10,000, of $15,000 in 1943, and of $20,000 in 1944 and subsequent years, would pay the $4,052 tax on the $15,000 1943 income in 1943 under the cancelation pay-as-you-go plan, while under present law the taxpayer would pay $2,152 in 1943 and $4,052 in 1944. Conversely his income tax payment declines 1 year sooner than under present law. Thus a taxpayer with an income of $10,000 in 1942, $8,000 in 1943, and $6,000 in 1944, would pay the $1,532 tax on the 1943 income of $8,000 in 1943, while under present law the taxpayer would pay $2,152 in 1943 and pay the $1,532 in the following year 1944. If income ceases tax payment ceases 1 year sooner than under present law. Thus a taxpayer with $10,000 net income in each year through 1944 and no income thereafter would pay $2,152 in 1945 under present law but would pay nothing in that year under a pay-as-you-go system with 1 year's tax cancelation.

If tax rates are increased, tax payments will increase 1 year sooner than under present law. Conversely if tax rates decrease tax payments will decrease 1 year sooner than under present law.

Under existing law the taxpayer at the end of each income year is in debt to the Government for the amount of the tax on the income of that year. This liability affects the taxpayer's net worth in exactly the same manner as any other liability. If 1942 taxes are canceled and future tax payments are placed on a current basis the taxpayer's net worth, that is, assets less liabilities, is immediately increased by the amount of the canceled tax.

And as has been stated in this debate, that becomes an asset in any statement of assets and liabilities of any taxpayer's situation.

Under a current payment plan the saving or accumulating of funds to meet taxes in the following year is unnecessary; each year's income furnishes the funds to meet the tax payable in that year. If funds have been accumulated under present law the shift to current payment and the cancelation of the 1942 tax will release such accomulated funds for whatever other purpose the taxpayer may choose to use them. If the tax liability each year is $12,000 and the taxpayer has accumulated funds to meet the tax at the rate of $1,000 a month, the cancelation of the 1942 tax will release $12,000 for other purposes.

Mr. President, it seems to me there is absolutely no escape from that proposition. The taxpayer may retain the $12,000 as part of his permanent capital. He may spend the $12,000 on current consumption or he may try to spend it, and because of the shortage of goods and services, he and others similarly situated will contribute to the tremendous inflationary influence which I fear will flow from the enactment of this measure. It will be in his hands. He can spend it. He can blow it in for any purpose he wants to, providing the goods and services are available.

Mr. President, that condition is very much more likely to obtain, and I contend we have a right to take judicial knowledge of the fact that it is very much more likely to obtain, among taxpayers in the medium and upper brackets than among the taxpayers in the lower brackets.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator recall that the financiers and experts have calculated that the national income will exceed the available consumers' goods by something like $20,000,000,000?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The estimate is $55,000,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. Fifty-five billion dollars—whatever the figure is. So there will be that much surplus money over and above our absolute needs; and yet, in the face of that situation, instead of gathering some of that money into the Treasury, we are dishing out more to increase the amount.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the advocates of the Ruml plan, the Rumlites, contend that no actual money would flow out of the Treasury into the hands of the taxpayers. But, Mr. President, if we do not exercise the power which we have under the present law and take from the taxpayer the money he had accumulated to pay his taxes, it will be tantamount to paying it out in cash, because it becomes a sum of money which he can utilize to add to his capital or which he can spend for any purpose he sees fit.

Mr. President, my consultation with persons who ought to know, persons who have acted as tax advisers to those in the upper brackets, inform me that to set aside tax money out of current income is a common practice; that it is a rare exception for a man who has enjoyed a substantial income not to accrue or provide for the payment of his taxes as the income is received. If he is in the uppermost brackets, Mr. President, he may not have to do that. If necessary, he can borrow the money to pay his taxes if he desires to do so. The fact remains that so far as the medium- and upper-bracket taxpayers are concerned, the enactment of the pending bill would release very substantial sums of money which would otherwise go to increase the capital assets of the taxpayers or go into the stream of spending at the very time when we ought to be exercising our taxing power to reduce the amount of money available for spending if we are to avert an uncontrolled inflation.

If he chooses to use the $12,000 to pay taxes, he will have $12,000 more of current income available for expenditure.

It is not necessary that the savings be made for this specific purpose of meeting tax liabilities. Savings made not specifically to meet the taxes are relieved of the liability for taxes on the income from which the savings were made upon cancelation of the tax.

If the taxpayer under present law accumulates no saving or insufficient savings to meet his accumulating tax liability, he has lived beyond his income. Even if he has made no savings, the effect of the cancelation is to remove immediately the danger of insolvency with respect to the tax liability. That is certainly a tangible and substantial benefit to confer upon the taxpayer even though he may be in this sorry plight.

Mr. President, it is true that some of the canceled income tax will be returned to the Government in the form of higher estate- and gift-tax revenues, but at the most this return, in the case of a taxpayer with an estate of more than $10,000,000, will be only 77 percent of the canceled tax, minus the amount of State death tax credited against the Federal tax. At the other extreme there will be no return to the Government in either estate or gift tax. The actual amount of the estate or gift tax will depend (1) on the extent to which the canceled tax is spent or lost; (2) on the extent to which the canceled tax is given away free as a gift; and (3) on the size of the estate and the estate- and gift-tax rates at the time of gift or death.

Since under a current payment plan the income tax must be paid sooner than under the present law, the pay-as-you-go system results in the loss of whatever interest the taxpayer would earn on the funds accumulated to pay the tax. The taxpayer who retires or dies soon after the tax cancelation loses less interest than the taxpayer who continues to pay taxes for many years thereafter. The taxpayer who retires or dies soon after the tax cancelation receives a larger net benefit from cancelation than the taxpayer who continues to pay income taxes over a long period of time.

Taxpayers who did not receive taxable income in 1942 receive no benefit from cancelation and pay taxes on each year's income thereafter. The taxes are paid 1 year sooner than under existing law. The receipt of taxes 1 year sooner from these new taxpayers tends to offset the loss to the Treasury which results when older taxpayers retire or die or suffer a loss of income.

I realize, Mr. President, that the statement of facts which I have made with regard to the naked effect of cancelation may be disputed, but, after the best study I have been able to give to this question, I cannot escape the conclusion that it is absolutely correct.

Now, Mr. President, I desire briefly to advert to one other aspect of this situation which has been discussed at great length here and in the hearings. I wish to refer to a table to which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] made reference in his address the other day, showing what happens to the distribution of this tax cancelation. In the light of the fact that taxpayers in the medium and upper brackets are very much more likely to have accumulated money to pay 1942 taxes, I think we are obligated, if we believe in the principle of the ability to pay, to consider the effect of the distribution of this cancelation of the 1942 tax liability.

A person with a net income before personal exemption—and the maximum earned net income is assumed—of $2,000 under the House bill would receive a tax cancelation of $140; under the Ways and Means Committee bill, which the Senator from Texas has offered as an amendment, the same taxpayer would receive a tax cancelation of $100; and under the Senate Finance Committee bill he would receive a tax cancelation of $140.

A person with a net income of $5,000, under the House bill, would receive a tax cancelation of $691, under the Ways and Means Committee bill and under the amendment of the Senator from Texas he would receive $388, and under the Senate Finance Committee bill he would receive $746.

A person with a net income of $10,000, under the House bill would receive $1,614 of tax cancelation, under the Connally amendment he would receive $860, and under the Finance Committee bill he would receive $2,152.

A person with a net income of $100,000 would, under the House bill, receive a tax cancelation of $18,690, under the Connally amendment he would receive a tax cancelation of $11,357, and under the Finance Committee bill he would receive a tax cancelation of $64,060.

A taxpayer with a net income of $1,000,000 under the House bill would receive a tax cancelation of $189,750, under the Ways and Means Committee bill and under the Connally amendment he would receive $121,126, and under the Senate Finance Committee bill he would receive $854,000.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the statement cannot be successfully refuted that if a taxpayer with $100,000 of net income in 1942 had accumulated money with which to pay his 1942 taxes, as most taxpayers in the upper brackets do under common practice, if we abate or cancel his 1942 tax he will have $64,060 which will either be added to his capital or which will be available to him to spend.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, a table showing the amounts of tax cancelation at selected income levels and the total amount canceled, for all taxpayers, under the various proposals made.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amounts of tax cancelation at selected income levels and total amount canceled for all taxpayers under different plans

A. SELECTED INCOME LEVELS (MARRIED PERSON, NO DEPENDENTS)

Net income [1]	House bill	Connally amendment	Uniform cancelation of—
			50 percent	75 per cent	100 percent (Senate Finance Committee bill)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, one significant aspect of the present problem clearly demonstrated by this table is found in comparing the effect of the House version with the proposal made by the Senator from Georgia. It will be seen that, although the total amount of tax liability forgiven in terms of dollars is practically the same, the distribution of the cancelation is decidedly different. Whereas, under the House version a man with a $2,000 net income would be forgiven $140, the proposal of the Senator from Georgia would cancel only $105 of the liability; and in the higher brackets the effect is reversed. Under the House version a person with $1,000,000 income would be forgiven $189,750 of taxes, and the so-called George amendment would forgive him $640,500.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I have been very much interested in what my colleague has said, but I want to find out if I comprehend the situation. First, he says that because cancelation would allow more money to remain in the hands of the public there would result a pressure on the so-called commodity goods and thus increase prices. Let me put it concretely. I have been trying to apply his reasoning to my situation. It is very enlightening to know that the Treasury officials stated this morning that less than 1 percent of all the taxpayers in this country were in default on their March payments. I take it that a large percentage of them did as I did, and paid the whole 1942 tax in March. If the new bill which we are contemplating should go into effect, there would be not only $2,200 which I would have to pay, but I would have to pay 20 percent each month from July on this year. That, plus my $2,200 next year, will be calculated, and then I will have a credit on my next year's tax. It seems to me that if there is any danger it is in the next year, because then I do not have to build up the difference to pay the next year's tax. In other words, I believe the 1942 taxes, according to the figures here, have been mostly paid. Is my assumption correct?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not think my colleague's assumption is correct.

It is my belief that most of the taxpayers in the upper- and high-income brackets do not pay their taxes in full on the 15th of March, as did my thrifty colleague. They prefer to keep the money and to earn interest on it, rather than let the Government have it. Most of them had heard about the Ruml plan, I feel sure, prior to the 15th of March, and I feel quite sure that most of them paid only one-quarter of their tax. If they saved $64,060, and if they paid only a quarter of their tax, they would have three-fourths of it in the form of cash, or assets convertible into cash, plus a portion of what they are setting aside currenly for taxes, which they could either add to their capital or could go out and spend, and, in my opinion, no one can successfully deny that that is going to be the effect of this bill if it becomes law.

A taxpayer with an income of $1,000,000, who accumulated and provided for the payment of the tax on the income, will have $854,000, less one-quarter paid on the 15th of March, which he can either add to his capital or utilize for spending.

Mr. President. I say that sooner or later the American people will find out exactly what has been done here. They are not going to swallow this "bunk" that it is possible to cancel taxes for persons who have accumulated money with which to pay it, and not have that money released in the hands of the taxpayers to add to their capital or utilize for the purpose of spending.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I believe I am partially convinced as to the correctness of my colleague's conclusion. However, we must first say that there is a national income of $135,000,000,000. If the pending bill shall go into effect in July, the impact upon that income will be 20 percent a month, and certainly we have to consider that as a large fraction of the $135,000,000,000. So that my question is, What proportion of the national income is in the bracket my colleague is now discussing, which would constitute an additional menace toward inflation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me see if I can find the figures on my desk.

Mr. WILEY. It has been stated all along that wages and salaries amount to a hundred billion dollars. There would be a deduction of 20 percent of that amount starting in July, and there would be the balance which would be in the other bracket, perhaps part of which is soldiers' pay, I do not know.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At the risk of having some one expelled from the floor, I shall ask the gentleman from the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation if he can tell me where the table is showing the percentages. I could figure that out for my colleague, but I would have to do some adding and subtracting. So I have asked the expert to do it. He gives me the following figures:

Estimates of the Treasury Department indicate that for the calendar year 1942 0.20 percent of the total number of taxpayers had net incomes in excess of $25,000; and that this group accounted for 24.07 percent of the total tax liability for that year. This would amount to $2,355,600,000.

Mr. President, in my opinion one evil effect of the discussion which has taken place in the country will prove to be the destruction, or partial destruction, of the taxpaying morale of the people. Unfortunately, a large majority of the taxpayers of the United States have gained the impression, because we are in a position to fight over how much of their 1942 tax liability we will abate, cancel, or forgive, that they can fight a war without paying for it.

I am convinced, from reading some of the mail that has come to me, that many taxpayers have a conviction—an erroneous conviction, it is true, but nevertheless it exists—that in some way the Ruml plan will perform some sort of a tax miracle, whereby they will not only have their 1942 tax liability abated, but that they will not suffer any increase in taxes during the remainder of the war, and that they will not even have to make out income-tax returns, because their tax will be collected at the source.

If we do not discharge our responsibility, if we do not now have the courage to be cruel in order to be kind in this matter of taxes, I say that the new tax bill in 1943, which will have to follow the bill we are now considering, will come as a rude shock and awakening to the taxpayers of this country, and it will come after this propaganda has resulted in a reduction in their morale and their willingness to pay taxes.

In my opinion, contrary to what apparently many of my colleagues believe, I think the people will not look with favor upon the Congress which has abated or canceled or forgiven the 1942 tax liability. I think they will turn upon the Congress and say that they have been misled, and that they will protest the effort to levy more taxes upon them.

Mr. President, as I stated at the outset, one day there will be a rude awakening from this mild form of insanity which has seized upon the Congress and the country. One day there will be an understanding as to exactly what has been done by the measure before us. And when that time comes, those who have been responsible for the abatement, cancelation, or forgiveness of the 1942 tax liability, already assessed and partially collected, will have to assume full responsibility for securing the taxes with which to meet the fiscal problem of the Government, for it must be obvious to everyone that although the expedient of canceling the 1942 tax liabilities has no significance so far as reducing the ultimate tax burden of the war is concerned, it is significant as a means of redistributing that burden at the expense of lower and middle income taxpayers.

The measure and the inequity of 100-percent cancelation of the 1942 tax liability can be illustrated in different ways, in comparison with other alternatives before the Senate.

They can be measured in terms of the taxpayer's income after taxation. Judging 100-percent forgiveness on that basis, it becomes evident that the Ruml plan for 100-percent cancelation of the 1942 tax liability, ignoring for the moment the windfall provisions proposed, would give a person with a net income of $2,000 a tax cancelation, stated in terms of the amount forgiven as a percentage of income after tax, amounting to 7.5 percent of his income after tax, as compared with a tax forgiveness of 584.9 percent of his income after tax, for a person with a million-dollar income.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a table setting forth that comparison.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Net income before personal exemption	Income tax, present law (married person no dependents)	Income after tax	Amount forgiven under—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in relation to the amount of increased taxes which have been levied against the various brackets to finance the national defense and war programs in 1940, 1941, and 1942, complete cancelation of the 1942 tax liability will have the effect of abating approximately 77 percent of the increases levied against a person with a $2,000 net income in those years, while abating for a person with a million dollar income three times as much as all the increases levied on his income.

I submit a table showing the comparison in detail, and ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Net income before personal exemption	Tax increases under Acts of 1940, 1941, and 1942 for married person, no dependents	Amount forgiven as percent of tax increases under—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is a foregone conclusion that the amount forgiven each of the various income groups cannot, as a practical matter be recovered from exactly the same groups through increased rates. The rates in the upper brackets cannot be raised substantially, and consequently taxpayers in the middle and lower income groups will have to pay later, in one form or another, not only the full amount now forgiven them, but also a substantial part of the 1942 taxes of the taxpayers in the upper brackets.

The Treasury Department submitted to the Finance Committee a table, which I offer for the RECORD, showing the rate increases necessary to recoup from taxpayers in the various income brackets the amounts canceled under the Ruml plan, the House version, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas. The table shows that in order to recoup the total cancelation of the 1942 tax on a million-dollar income, it would be necessary to increase the effective rate, from present rate of 89.9 percent, by an additional 28.5 percent. Obviously, it is impossible to impose such a rate. I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Net income before personal exemption	Effective rates of income and net Victory tax liability, present law	Effective tax rate increase necessary to recoup canceled taxes at same income levels over a 3-year period

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the other two tables from the minority or individual view report which I filed from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCLELLAN in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

From the following table, showing the effective tax rates on individual incomes it is clear that the greatest increases in rates must necessarily fall upon taxpayers with net incomes between $1,500 and $25,000.

Married person—no dependents

Net income before personal exemption [1]	Effective rates of present law

In the case of consumption taxes the following table shows how the income groups under $10,000 per year and particularly those under $2,000 would be most seriously burdened because of the larger percentages of their incomes that go to consumption.

TABLE A.—Families: Average outlay for personal taxes, consumption, gifts, and savings, by money income level, 1942 [1]

Income level	Percentage of income for—
	Personal taxes [2]	Consumption [3]	Gifts to organizations [4]	Savings

[1] Estimates cover all civilian consumers except those living in institutions. Families are defined as economic units of 2 or more persons sharing a common or pooled income and living under a common roof. Single consumers are defined as men or women maintaining independent living quarters or living as lodgers or servants in private homes, rooming houses or hotels. The term "spending unit" is used to cover both groups. Estimates are on a calendar-year basis. The form of average used is the arithmetic mean.

[2] Personal taxes shown here include only individual income taxes, poll taxes, and certain minor personal-property taxes. It should be noted that sales taxes, excise taxes, and all indirect taxes on consumption are included under expenditures for goods and service.

[3] Consumption consists of money expenditures only.

[4] Gifts consist only of money contributions to the church, the Red Cross, and other institutions and funds.

[5] Savings are defined as the net change in assets and liabilities of the spending unit durint the year exclusive of gains or losses from revaluation of assets.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suppose that the votes have been gathered in to pass this bill. If that is true I regret it. I think the bill, if passed, will have a very adverse effect upon the economy of this Nation as we face the harrowing years of war ahead of us. I fear that it will have a weakening effect upon the fiscal strength and ability of the Nation not only to meet the impact and the drain of war, but to meet perchance the greater strain of the problems of reconstruction and the peace when it comes. I only regret that there has not been a more concerted effort made to save the country from this tragic mistake.

Mr. MCFARLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Ferguson	Nye
Austin	George	O'Daniel
Bailey	Gerry	Overton
Ball	Gillette	Radcliffe
Bankhead	Green	Reed
Barbour	Guffey	Revercomb
Bilbo	Gurney	Reynolds
Bone	Hatch	Robertson
Brewster	Hawkes	Russell
Bridges	Hayden	Scrugham
Brooks	Hill	Shipstead
Buck	Holman	Stewart
Burton	Johnson, Colo.	Taft
Bushfield	Kilgore	Thomas, Idaho
Butler	La Follette	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Langer	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Lodge	Tobey
Caraway	Lucas	Tunnell
Chandler	McClellan	Tydings
Chavez	McFarland	Vandenberg
Clark, Idaho	McNary	Van Nuys
Clark, Mo.	Maloney	Wagner
Connally	Maybank	Walsh
Danaher	Mead	Wheeler
Davis	Millikin	Wherry
Downey	Moore	White
Eastland	Murdock	Wiley
Ellender	Murray	Wilson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GEORGE. A parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the substitute amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] for the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. My amendment being a substitute for the entire committee amendment, as amended, it would give way to perfecting amendments, as I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; perfecting amendments have precedence over the Senator's substitute amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit a clerical amendment to the committee amendment, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, line 9, before "1943", it is proposed to insert "the taxable year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I send forward another amendment the purpose of which is to correct an error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 98, it is proposed to strike out lines 13 and 14 and to insert "is in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time during the taxable year 1942 or 1943, the."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, permit me to make a statement with respect to that amendment so as to make the RECORD clear. The language in the lines proposed to be stricken is "enters upon active service in the military or naval forces of the United States during the taxable years 1942 or 1943, the." The amendment simply is for the benefit of members of the armed forces in active service in the military and naval forces in 1942 or 1943.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment as amended. The amendment has been printed and lies on the desks of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 85, line 13, after "calendar year", it is proposed to insert "to the extent not credited against the tax for a taxable year beginning in the preceding calendar year as hereinafter provided", and following the amendment heretofore adopted to the committee amendment in such line to insert:

The amount so withheld and collected during any calendar year shall also be allowed as a credit to the recipient of the income against the tax imposed by this chapter for any taxable year beginning in the preceding calendar year as follows:

(a) If the tax so imposed is paid otherwise than by installments, such recipient may credit against such tax the amount which he estimates as the amount withheld and collected during the first quarter of such calendar year.

(b) If the tax so imposed is paid in installments, such recipient may credit against each installment the amount which he estimates as the amount withheld and collected for the quarter of such calendar year during which such installment is paid, and for preceding quarters to the extent not credited against any preceding installment.

(c) If the aggregate of the amount so estimated as withheld and collected during such calendar year and allowed as a credit under subsection (a) or (b) exceeds the amount actually withheld and collected during such calendar year, such excess shall, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 56, be paid on or before March 15 of the succeeding calendar year.

On page 86, strike out lines 3 to 9, inclusive, and beginning in line 24, strike out down to and including the period in line 4 on page 87.

On page 88, after line 16, strike out all down to and including the period in line 14 on page 104.

On page 104, line 15, strike out "7" and insert "5."

On page 105, line 8, strike out "8" and insert "6."

On page 106, strike out lines 3 to 5, inclusive, and beginning with the semicolon in line 21, strike out down to and including the word "service" in line 15 on page 107.

On page 107, line 22, strike out "9" and insert "7."

On page 108, line 10, strike out "10" and insert "8."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate long in speaking for the amendment, because I think the subject has been fully debated during the course of the week. Possibly each Member of the Senate has come to a conclusion as to the position he intends to take on the pending measure.

There seems to be one question to decide—namely, the question whether we are to forgive, or abate, or cancel accrued taxes for some of our citizens.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I hope the Senator will take considerable time to explain his amendment, because I do not quite understand it. I think it is the best amendment offered thus far, and I hope the Senator will take sufficient time to explain it thoroughly.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I thank the Senator. I shall take all the time I think it necessary to take. If I fail to explain the amendment fully, I shall be glad to answer any questions which the Senator form North Dakota or other Senators may ask at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, the amendment I offer is so simple and so fair that I think it will not require much explanation. My amendment is intended to leave the whole income-tax system in practically the same position as that which it now occupies and has occupied for a period of 30 years.

To me, the proposition before us is a very simple and elementary one. However, from the debate which has occurred, it seems that there is much confusion, and that the gentle breeze has been fanned into a hurricane. The proposal I have made has had the endorsement of the majority of the Members of the Congress during the past 30 years; the majority of the Members of Congress have approved the plan I have proposed; because I have proposed the plan which has been in effect for the past 30 years and is in effect at the present time. My amendment would allow the income-tax system to remain in status quo. The only change my amendment would make would be to set up a collection system covering income tax on wages and salaries.

There is no doubt in my mind that the taxes which have accrued for the year 1942 constitute a just and honest debt from the individual taxpayers to the Government of the United States; and any abatement or forgiveness of those taxes simply would add to the capital of the taxpayers whose 1942 taxes were abated in any degree, either in whole or in part.

On the theory that the accrued taxes constitute a just debt, and under the conditions which exist at the present time, when our country is engaged in a great war, and is in need of funds more than ever before in our history, I think that now is a bad time to forgive any debt due the United States.

Mr. President, as I listened to the debate I recalled the statement made on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], chairman of the Committee on Finance, who is in charge of the bill, upon whose judgment I rely greatly, and for whom I have the utmost respect and confidence. He stated that whether taxes are remitted, canceled, or abated makes no difference so far as the Government is concerned, because the Government has the power to tax; and, therefore, if taxes are forgiven now, and if later more money is needed, the tax rate may later be increased. Even admitting that that may be true, the point I wish to make is that different individuals will be called upon to make up for the taxes that are abated. Individual citizens who have profited during 1942 or 1943 will have their taxes forgiven; and to the extent that their taxes are forgiven, the amounts forgiven will become capital for them. If, later, the Government decides that was a mistake, and concludes that it must raise more money and must increase taxes, possibly the tax burden will fall upon some other individuals. Some of it may fall upon the same individuals, but not to the same extent as it would have fallen; and in that way, the procedure will constitute an inequity.

We all know that at this particular time, when we are discussing the cancelation or abatement of income taxes, our Treasury Department is reminding us that we must find new taxes, that by taxation we must bring an additional $16,000,000,000 into the Treasury. While we are being reminded of that, we are considering the abatement or cancelation of taxes, which seems to me to be a very strange procedure. I, for one, am not in favor of the abatement or cancelation—whatever term may be used—of 100 percent of 1942 or 1943 taxes or of any other percentage of the taxes. I think they are due. I know that at the time when the taxpayers were making the profits, they were under the impression that a certain percentage of the profits belonged to the Government. I know that corporations which kept books considered a portion of the profits they made to be an honest debt to the Government—so much so, that each month they set up the amounts on their books as a liability, and considered them as liabilities, the same as their outstanding bonds or notes payable or accounts payable. I know that individuals who kept books made the same entries; and I know that other individuals who do not keep books consider that, as to all the profits they make, they are in partnership with their Government, and at the time when they are doing business they determine what percentage of their profits will possibly go to the Government. When large trades are made on oil wells or on land, and when other trades are made, before the trade is consummated each party to the trade wants to know exactly what amount will be due the Government. Those who have made such trades in 1942 or in 1943 to date have followed that plan. They know that that tax due the Government is a liability, and that if it is canceled or abated it will become a capital asset for them individually.

Most of the argument which has been put forth has been to the effect that everyone is anxious to get on a current basis. Anyone who wants to get on a current basis has had the opportunity to become current any day since 1913. He can take his money down to the Treasury Department and become current.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator certainly must agree that it is as much to the interest of the United States Government as it is to the interest of any individual to have taxpayers current with their income. For a liability with which, under the present system, the Government would never catch up until judgment day, it is proposed to substitute actual cash in the till. Furthermore, the Government cannot set up any sort of scientific tax system based upon scientific rates without having the people current in their taxes, so that the Government can take the money as it comes in. Let me ask my friend the Senator from Texas whether it is not as much to the interest of the Government as it is to the interest of the individual taxpayer himself to have taxpayers current with their taxes.

Mr. O'DANIEL. My answer to that is that I do not believe the Government is interested in whether the money it receives for taxes is current money or money which has been lying in the till of the individual for the past 2 or 3 years. The Government is interested in getting the money which is due it as its share of the profits made by the individual.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me one further question, is not the Government interested in the amount of money it gets into the Treasury this year?

Mr. O'DANIEL. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And next year?

Mr. O'DANIEL. And following years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is certainly true.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me to finish my question, the Government is certainly interested in whether or not the money which is earned by income taxpayers in this year is paid this year, or whether a certain amount of it is lost by reason of the fact that taxpayers who are liable this year under a pay-as-you-go plan will not have the money at hand and will not be able to pay next year. There will be no way to collect it from them next year. Is not that correct?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I hardly believe that is correct. At least, that is not my impression.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator differs with that statement, I have no argument with him, because it represents an essential disagreement on the whole theory of taxation. If the Senator believes that it makes no difference to the Government whether it collects the money which should be collected, and which is earned this year, or whether it loses a part of it next year because the taxpayers who have earned it this year will have already spent it and will suffer a falling off in their income and will not be able to pay it, then there is such an essential difference in general principle between the Senator and myself that there is no use in arguing the question.

Mr. O'DANIEL. The statement I made was that so far as the collection and payment of income taxes are concerned, I do not believe it makes any difference to the Government whether such taxes are paid from money which was earned in May 1943 or January 1942, or money which the taxpayer borrows from the bank. The Government is interested in getting the money which is due it as its share of the partnership arrangement for 1942.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not wish to trespass on the time and patience of my friend from Texas, but if he will permit me to ask one further question I will not interrupt him further.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I gladly yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, the Senator knows that under the present tax laws there are a great many taxpayers who never previously paid taxes. They are liable under the 1943 tax laws. They have not been in the habit of accumulating money, as most taxpayers are not. I should say that 99.99 percent of taxpayers have not been in the habit of accumulating money to pay their taxes. As to those persons who have not been in the habit of paying taxes and who may make less next year and may not be able to pay their taxes, does the Senator say that the Government is not concerned with the question whether they pay taxes out of income as it is earned or fail to pay their taxes next year out of income not earned?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I would not make the statement that the Government is not interested in the failure of anyone to pay his taxes; but I do say that the Government is not concerned about the source of the money which the taxpayer uses to discharge his tax debt.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is not the answer to the Senator from Missouri that under the Senator's amendment he proposes to do exactly the same thing as is proposed by the substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], or the bill which comes over from the House, or the substitute of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]? Under the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL], we would begin the withholding tax at the same date.

In my opinion, what the Treasury of the United States is interested in, is having money flowing into the Treasury. It would flow in just as currently, just as rapidly, and in the same volume under the Senator's amendment as it would under any other bill or amendment which is being considered by the Senate today. Does it make any difference to the Treasury of the United States whether the Treasury credits the 20-percent withholding tax which it receives on the 1942 or 1943 tax of the taxpayer? It makes no difference to the Treasury, does it?

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is exactly correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. On the other hand, in order to become current, as some Senators are advocating, they propose to cancel debts to the Treasury in the amount of $9,000,000,000 in order to credit it on the 1943 tax instead of on the 1942 tax. Have I correctly stated the Senator's amendment?

Mr. O'DANIEL. The Senator from Utah is eminently correct. My amendment would leave the tax situation in status quo, except that it would set up a tax collection system on salaries and wages, the tax to be deducted at the source. Those deductions would be forwarded to the United States Treasury, where they would be credited to the individual taxpayer's taxes which were then due, and which had accrued during the previous year.

It is simply a collection system. At the end of 1943, if the amounts deducted, plus other amounts sent in under the quarterly payments, should exceed the amount of the 1942 tax of the individual, the excess would be refunded by the Treasury Department. If those amounts should not pay in full the amount due, the taxpayer would be responsible for the balance due.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, the Government would receive more money under his amendment than it would receive under the pending bill, as amended, for this reason: We all know that during wartime the income of the Nation is probably the greatest in its history. It is estimated, for example, that about $130,000,000,000 a year will be the income of all the people during the war period. Let us suppose that 4 years from now the war is over. As soon as the war is over the demand for munitions, shells, tanks, and other things of like character will cease, and when it ceases employment will drop, and consequently the Nation's income will decline. So, looking at a 10-year period from 1942 to 1952, and assuming that the war ends in 1946, under the Senator's proposal the Government would collect income on 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945 before the war ended, and then for 5 years after the war ended. However, under the committee amendment the Government would collect income taxes only for 1943, 1944, and 1945. Thus it would collect no taxes for a year during which the income of the people was tremendously high, and substitute for it a year in the future when the income would be low. The net consequence would be, if the Ruml plan, unadulterated, should be adopted, that one whole high-income year would be completely eliminated, and in its place would be a low-income year, on the basis of which taxes would be levied. The Senator, therefore, in order not to lose that high-income year, would provide that taxes shall be collected currently so that no one may evade them without losing the potential income of the Government from the existing set-up which would be lost if we should wipe out a whole year's liability.

Mr. O'DANIEL. The Senator from Maryland is absolutely correct and has made the situation very plain, indeed. If the Ruml plan were adopted, there would simply be a gap in our income-tax system of 1 year, either 1942 or 1943, which would be forgiven, abated, canceled, and the Government would never receive an income for that year. But on a lower-income year, at the end of the war, the Government would receive less money and would therefore be short the difference.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Ruml plan were offered to the Senate, say, 5 years after the war was over, when we had gone through a depression and were on the upgrade, when income was increasing, say, in 1950 or 1951 or 1952, for illustration, and then we should adopt the Ruml plan, the Government would lose nothing for the reason it would be substituting a current year for the past year, the current year's income being higher than that of the preceding year. When the transition is made is all-important. However, to make it when income is high and when a poorer year is coming would be to give away a tax on a large yield for a tax on a small yield.

Mr. O'DANIEL. From a business standpoint the Senator's contention is absolutely correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. In addition to what the distinguished Senator from Maryland has said, is it not also likely to be true that over a period of years new taxpayers will take the place of some whose taxes it is now proposed to forgive, and will they not be obliged to assume the tax burden that is now proposed to be lifted or forgiven?

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is correct, and therein lies the great inequity and injustice which will be perpetrated if the Ruml-Carlson plan shall be adopted.

Mr. MAYBANK. Over a period of years many of the taxpayers whose tax it is now proposed to forgive will have died, and many of those who will take their places, who will be substituted as taxpayers for them, are men in the service who are now fighting on foreign soil and offering their lives for their country.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is correct. Present taxpayers will be replaced by other taxpayers completely in years to come, or gradually as the years go by.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. It seems to me that in all this argument we have laid very little stress on one vital aspect which I think is quite important in these trying times. It is the cold hard relationship of the taxpayer to his Government. I am now referring to the ethical and emotional side of the picture.

Whatever one may think of the tax abatement proposals submitted here, they simply mean that in the liability of a taxpayer, he will save for himself one full year's taxes which he may add to his capital. He has abated to that extent the financial burden which the Government has to lay upon all of us in the most trying moment in all American history. Libations of blood are being poured out which stagger the conscience of the world. While we face this grim tragedy, some lucky fellow will be given, perhaps $1,000,000 to put into his aggregate capital. The Government will never take this money from him. There is no arguing ourselves out of that. That is the ethical and emotional side of the tax picture which in due time will be most deeply impressed upon the consciousness of America. Under the Ruml proposal, one of these lucky taxpayers could and would keep that $1,000,000.

It would be staggering, weird, bizarre, and utterly stupid for one to rise in this Chamber and say we could abate one tiny segment of the agony of the battlefield. We can only abate taxes.

Mr. President, we are spending our time talking about abating taxes for some fellow who may thereby add from a thousand to a million dollars to his capital amidst the blood and travail of the battlefront. Returning to us are insane boys and those who will be wrecked physically for the remainder of their lives.

A short time ago I saw three letters from mothers and these letters were wet with the tears of these mothers. Their boys, who had returned to them from the eastern battlefront, were insane. Never again will these brave lads know the joy of living. The sunshine and the flowers have disappeared. They died to protect America, including the property of the taxpayers we so tenderly protect in this somber hour.

Here we stand figuring out how we can rebate enormous tax levies, which will be added to the capital of the fortunate taxpayer. One tax year is lifted out of his life, at a time when issues face the Nation which may ultimately destroy its institutions. I say the Senate of the United States should not spend its time listening to talk about how much some fellows can make out of the war when sons of the Republic are dying in battle. Possibly 3,000,000 of them may die before the war shall have been concluded. The rest will come home and read these long debates concerning methods which will give some fellow more dollars to add to his happiness and his capital. For one, I do not believe that we dare aid in a program that will translate widows' sighs and orphans' tears into more dollars for any man.

Mr. President, if we walk away from the ethical and moral implications of this tax problem we shall have occasion to regret it. We should not lay aside such considerations now any more than we should have laid aside similar issues confronting the Republic when its sons were turning back dissolution of the Union on the flame-crested hills of Gettysburg in front of the soldiers of Lee and Longstreet. That is all it means. Members may flounder around in this tank of argument until they develop dorsal fins and caudal appendages, but they will never change the picture.

Fathers and mothers who are seeing their boys shot to death on the battlefield to save our financial and economic system will not listen with much tolerance to discussions of the Ruml plan or any other plan which will permit any man to add a million dollars to his capital and justify it on the fantastic theory that it will be to the best interests of the country to do so. That is what this thing means. Nothing else. It cannot be translated into anything else.

This Chamber has rung with the oratory of men who proclaimed to the people of America that we must get money out of the hands of the people who are earning it, in order to prevent a disastrous inflation. It is argued that taxation of stored up purchasing power is necessary to resist inflationary tendencies, yet we are now assured that the proposal to allow some fellow to keep an extra million dollars of profit and add it to his income, if he earned that much, will help to do that. By abating that tax he would therefore have a million dollars more of purchasing power to threaten the whole commodity price structure of this country. That is either true, or else the inflation arguments advanced here rest on utterly fallacious assumptions.

I am sorry I have taken the Senator's time, but if I, as a Senator, could abate any of the blood and tears and agony of the boys dying on the battlefields, if I could abate one little bit of the horror facing young men marching away under the American flag into this world of conflict, I would abate that horror coming to them, rather than abate a year's taxes for us who stay at home. I wish I could vote to abate blindness and insanity and vote away the blasting of boys' lives by shells on the battle fronts. But we cannot do that. All we can do is to abate the tax on some fellow's income. The whole thing presents a grotesque twist of logic. It is a sort of madness.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I think it is very timely that the able Senator from Washington has made such an eloquent speech in support of my amendment, and should there be anyone within the sound of my voice interested in this subject from a political standpoint, may I remind him that the type of speech to which we have just listened by the Senator from Washington may be the type of speech which will be heard throughout the campaign of 1944, and those who make such speeches will be able to name the individuals who have profited by the Ruml-Carlson amendment, if such an unfortunate thing should occur as the passage of the amendment. Each one interested may consider the political consequences of the enactment of such an outrageous proposal as the Ruml-Carlson plan.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me once more?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK. It was suggested to me during the lunch hour that some of the men who some persons seem to fear might not pay their taxes and whom the 20-percent withholding tax is necessary in order to catch are making high wages in 1943 and will continue to make high wages in 1944 and probably in 1945; but in 1946, or after the war is over, their income may drop very materially. The question was asked me, What will be the situation of such an individual at that time? What is the Senator's answer to that? In other words, if that happens, the individuals who are caught in that kind of circumstances will be called upon to pay income taxes on a high income when they have dropped back to a lower income. I think there is an answer to that question, and I believe the Senator has it.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I thank the Senator for propounding that question. In reply, let me say that, of course, all who are accustomed to paying income taxes, and have been accustomed to paying them for years, realize that as they make profits or earnings, a certain proportion of such profits and earnings belong to the Government, and, in reality, they become custodians of Government funds, but have the free use of such funds from the time the profit or earnings accrued until tax pay day to the Government. Therefore citizens in that category incur the liability and retain the money which is due the Government so that they may be able to pay on pay day. Others, who are new to the game of paying income taxes, will sooner or later come to a realization that the payment of income taxes is very difficult to evade, and they will likewise follow the course of those who have set up reserves.

To answer the specific question, in case they should not do that, and in the event we should come to the time when incomes decrease, the taxpayer who in a lean year discovers and suddenly comes to the sad realization that he owes a larger tax for the preceding year than he is able to meet will, no doubt, be in a very bad predicament. It is, however, exactly that kind of individual who should have tax-forgiveness consideration of the Congress and the Government. Then will be the time when the tax debt should be forgiven. It should not be forgiven now to many people who have plenty of money with which to pay. We should wait until the time comes, when the individual finds himself destitute or insolvent before we consider canceling income-tax debts due the Government. Our system takes care of that; if he is unable to pay, he cannot pay, and the debt will then have to be forgiven. That is the only time when any debt to our Government should be forgiven.

Mr. President, it is said that the Ruml-Carlson plan is designed to make tax payments easier for the taxpayer, but some of the proposals I have heard suggested here make it harder for the taxpayer in that they increase his current payments. One of the proposals is that 75 percent of the 1942 tax shall be canceled and the remaining 25 percent divided, and 12½ percent of it paid with 100 percent of the 1944 tax, thus making 112½ percent which must be paid by each individual taxpayer in 1944 who had an income in 1942 and in 1944, and the same thing provided for the year 1945.

Other proposals have been made whereby the 1942 tax will be divided up and paid over a period of 5 years, which increases the percentage of payment to more than 100 percent during the time the old debt is being paid. Therefore, it is an imposition on the taxpayer.

I think our Nation discovered long ago and adopted as a sensible plan the system of installment payments. Many persons would not have had the opportunity of buying automobiles and electric refrigerators and other articles from commercial organizations had credit not been extended to them so that they might pay in the future on the installment plan and not pay as they go. Our Government is extending installment payments on income taxes to all its citizens over a period of 11½ months after the 12 months' period in which the tax debt accrued and is extending them without interest. Nothing it seems to me could be more fair. Many people use the amount of income tax due their Government as capital without paying interest. So far as the taxpayer is concerned, that certainly is fair. While our rates on income taxes may be objectionable to some persons and while there may be some inconsistencies and some inequities, yet I think we must all admit that, on the whole, throughout the years, our present income tax system has been equitable and fair. I see, therefore, no reason to make any change whatever. The only reason thus far advanced which to me has any sound basis is the desirability of taking care of the collection of income taxes from wage earners and salary earners who have not heretofore been accustomed to paying such taxes and possibly are under the impression that it is a debt they can evade. Therefore, as they get their money, either because it is all needed in order to pay their current expenses or because they like to spend it for some other purpose, they spend their money as fast as they get it. If it is not retained at the source, they may not have the money in the following year with which to pay their accrued taxes. Therefore, my amendment simply sets up a collection agency on every pay day and makes all salaries and all wages before they are paid to the individuals subject to a deduction of 20 percent.

The 20-percent deduction is not an additional tax; the 20-percent reduction is simply a remittance which is sent to the United States Treasury, and is a guaranty that the individual will pay his income tax. It also serves as a benefit to the taxpayer who might not be acquainted with the fact that income taxes must be paid. When the money thus collected is sent to the Treasury there it is credited to the accrued income tax due by the individual according to the tax return which he should have sent in on or before March 15 of that year. An adjustment will be made at the end of the period for taxes due for the previous year by making a refund to the taxpayer for overpayment or the collection of balance due. He has not had to pay twice; it has not been a doubling-up system; nobody has been relieved of his accrued tax liability, and the Government gets all the money that is due it. It is simply a fair, equitable tax, and, as I have already said, this system, with the exception of the withholding feature, has been approved by the majority of Members of both Houses of Congress since 1913. Now, in a time of fever and excitement, it seems to me it is inopportune to upset anything so substantial and fair and equitable as the system which is now in effect.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand the Senator's amendment, by providing for a withholding tax of 20 percent, beginning on July 1, the Treasury will begin receiving the same money it would receive under the committee bill or the Ruml plan. Is that not correct?

Mr. O'DANIEL. It is absolutely correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. There will be no difference in the receipts of the Treasury?

Mr. O'DANIEL. Absolutely none.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then, what the Senator's proposal would do would simply be put the taxpayer on a pay-as-you-go basis insofar as beginning on July 1, just as the committee bill would do, but it would not permit any abatement or cancelation of liability now due by taxpayers.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is absolutely correct. In other words, my amendment would prevent the Government from remitting or canceling about $9,000,000,000 of tax debts to certain individuals, who are not likely to be the same individuals who may be called upon later, in case of tax increases, to pay the money back to the Government.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think the amendment the Senator has offered absolutely forces the issue, and draws the distinction, whereby we can actually put the taxpayer on a pay-as-you-go basis, if that is what we are really trying to do, and we can do that without having to do what is being proposed in the committee bill, forgive a large percentage of taxes and tax liability to the Government, in order to get on a pay-as-you-go basis. Therefore I intend to support the Senator's amendment.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I thank the Senator from Arkansas, and I wish to say that his statement is absolutely correct. Everyone knows that if the Ruml-Carlson bill should be agreed to, and if the accrued tax liability should be canceled, the amount of money involved must be raised by some other form of taxation, by increase of income taxes or through some other process. I am firmly convinced that the additional money to be collected when the taxes are increased will come from an almost entirely different set of individuals from those who will profit by the cancelation or abatement of their accrued income-tax liability for 1942 or 1943.

I am satisfied that some of the large corporations which were strongly in favor of the Ruml-Carlson plan at one time are awakening to the realization, if there shall be forgiveness of the taxes to those to whom they will be forgiven by the enactment of the Ruml-Carlson bill, corporation taxes will of necessity have to be increased in order to make up the money that will be given away, or abated, or canceled by the Government.

I understand that at the present time there are millions of people who possibly have not yet gotten on the income tax rolls, but if we keep going in the direction in which we are now headed, before we get through every citizen who earns any money will be contributing to the income tax fund, and they will realize all too late that the enactment of the Ruml-Carlson plan will cause increased tax burdens to fall upon their shoulders, and, as stated by the Senator from South Carolina, upon the shoulders of the boys who are fighting overseas to preserve the profit system, which we might be tearing down if the proposed Ruml plan should be enacted.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WILEY. As I understand the Senator's plan, it is that the present law shall remain inviolate, and that, commencing July 1, 20 percent of all salaries and wages shall be deducted at the source.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is correct.

Mr. WILEY. If that be so, the tax that is collected this year pays the 1942 tax, and the balance is arrived at in January or March 1944?

Mr. O'DANIEL. In March 1943. It pays the 1942 tax as determined March 15, 1943. It applies on the accrued tax.

Mr. WILEY. Then we could not use the word "current."

Mr. O'DANIEL. It depends on what we are talking about. If we are talking about current payments, we could use the word "current."

Mr. WILEY. I am not saying this facetiously; I mean that the taxpayer is always 1 year behind in the final settlement.

Mr. O'DANIEL. He is always paying in the current year for the tax which accrued during the preceding year.

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. O'DANIEL. The same as in the case of an ad valorem tax on real estate and personal property.

Mr. WILEY. The condition remains just as it is now, then?

Mr. O'DANIEL. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. Except that there is to be collection at the source of wages and salaries, and the final settlement is to be made in the March following:

Mr. O'DANIEL. In December of each year.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I gladly yield.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand, every proposal which has been made, with the exception of the bill reported by the committee, contemplates a double payment in 1 year in whole or in part, and to that extent is a hardship.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is as I understand it.

Mr. OVERTON. In order to avoid a double payment in whole or in part, the committee has suggested in its bill that there be an abatement of 1 year's taxes, which, insofar as the individual is concerned, applies to either the 1943 or the 1942 tax. What the Senator's amendment proposes is that there be no abatement of taxes whosoever, that there be no double payment in any 1 year, and the theory which everyone appears to be agreed upon, that there should be a withholding tax, is embodied in the amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is correct.

Mr. OVERTON. It carries with it the unobjectionable feature of every amendment, and does away with the objectionable phases of all of them. Is not that correct?

Mr. O'DANIEL. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish to ask the Senator a question on a personal basis. I have paid my 1942 taxes in full. Under the Senator's proposal, how would the withholding tax which he has in mind be applied with reference to me?

Mr. O'DANIEL. In the first place, I wish to congratulate the Senator for being in the class of people who are able to pay in full. If my amendment shall be adopted, deductions beginning July 1 will be made from the Senator's salary on the basis of 20 percent, those deductions will be sent to the United States Treasury, and will be credited to the Senator's account of his taxes for 1942, and at the end of 1943 the Treasury will reimburse the Senator for any overpayment, which, of course, in this case would amount to the deductions which are made from his salary from July 1 until December 31, 1943.

Mr. GILLETTE. These deductions would go to reimburse me for what I have paid on the 1942 tax?

Mr. O'DANIEL. Yes, the Senator would be reimbursed for the full amount of the overpayment.

Mr. DOWNEY. But that apparent difficulty, Mr. President, would be true only in the first 6 months' period. I mean, if the distinguished Senator continued to have his taxes deducted the following year, then the following year he would not have any rebate, the deductions would then be applied to taxes in the next year.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Yes; without doubt, if the amendment shall be agreed to and the bill become law, then the installment payments of those drawing salaries and wages may cease. The deductions will apply, although both the installments and the deductions could continue, if there were no objection on the part of the taxpayer, and in that event the result would be that at the end of the year a refund of the overpayment would be made.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think some of us are assuming something which does not exist. If the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] has paid his taxes on March 15 of this year, for the tax which accrued for the year 1942, he has discharged the tax for 1942, and has acquitted himself with his Government. Beginning July 1 of this year the deductions are made from the salary check of the Senator from Iowa. They would be applied on the taxes which would accrue during the year 1943. That is my assumption, since the proposal of the Senator from Texas does not abate any year's taxes, or any taxes at all. Am I correct in that?

Mr. O'DANIEL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BONE. The Senator used the date 1942, which the Senator from Iowa has been using, and I saw Senators smile, and I knew there was a misapprehension. In other words, the Senator from Texas does not propose to abate any taxes, but if a Senator or anyone else has paid his taxes on March 15 for 1942, he has acquitted himself of any obligation to the Government. Then on July 1, 1943, he begins to have deductions from his salary check, which are applied on the tax which will be due for the year 1943. Am I correct in that?

Mr. O'DANIEL. The Senator is correct, and I thank the Senator—if I inadvertently used the wrong year in the debate. I do not want to have a misunderstanding.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, the Senator from Iowa was informed, in answer to the question he propounded, that instead of his taxes paid after July being applied on 1943 taxes, they would be refunded to him. Obviously they cannot be refunded to him and be applied on the 1943 taxes at the same time. I should like to have that question cleared up.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I shall be glad to attempt to do so. In the case of the Senator from Iowa, he has already paid his taxes which accrued during 1942. If my amendment shall be adopted, and I hope it will, and the bill, as thus amended, should be enacted, beginning July 1 payments will be deducted from the Senator's salary check each month, and those payments will be remitted to the Treasury of the United States, and there they will be held to the credit of the Senator's account. At the end of 1943 the Treasury will figure up the amount of those payments, plus the amount the Senator remitted on March 15, and, of course, the sum total will exceed the amount of his 1942 tax, and the amount that it exceeds the 1942 tax will be refunded to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. That is exactly the way I understood the Senator's explanation in the first instance, but after that the other proposition was injected, and the statement was made that the taxes paid after July would be applied on the 1943 taxes. Now another Senator says, "Of course they will."

Mr. O'DANIEL. They will not be applied on 1943 taxes unless the Senator should make a special request that the money be retained by the United States Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I wish to refer to something that has been referred to before, but to point out a different meaning, or at least a meaning which I have not heard expounded on the Senate floor. What I refer to appears on page 13 of part I of the hearings of the Finance Committee on this bill. Mr. Paul made this statement:

> From the above table it is clear that while all three bills are more generous to the higher income groups than to lower income groups, the Ruml-Carlson plan is much more extreme in this effect. This may be perhaps clearer from the following illustrations.

What follows is highly important, I will say. Mr. Paul's testimony continues:

> A person with an income before taxes of $2,000 whose actual income after taxes is $1,860, under the Ruml-Carlson bill, would have $140 added to his $1,860, or slightly less than 4 weeks' actual income.
> A person with $5,000 income before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $4,254 would have $746 added by the Ruml-Carlson bill, or slightly less than 9 weeks' actual income.

Then Mr. Paul refers to the $10,000 bracket, the $50,000 bracket, and the $100,000 bracket. He says they all increase in proportion—or out of proportion I might say. His testimony continues:

> The person with $100,000 income before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $35,940 would have $64,060 added, or about 20 months' actual income.
> The person with $1,000,000 before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $146,000 would have $854,000 added, or about 6 years' actual income.

Mr. President, while, of course, it can be seen from that statement that the Ruml-Carlson plan is absolutely inequitable and unfair, and favors those in the higher brackets, yet the point I should like to make is that the person with an income of $1,000,000 could retire from business after he had had his taxes abated, and by the abatement or cancelation of his taxes would profit to the extent of $854,000; he could retire from business with that $854,000, which was due the Government until the time the Ruml-Carlson plan was enacted into law, if it shall be enacted, and he could retire for 6 years, without taking the risk of any business transaction whatever; for his earnings, which he had retained by virtue of the cancelation of his accrued tax bill, would be exactly the same amount for 6 years as though he had continued operation and had earned $1,000,000 in each of those 6 years, and had taken all the risks and performed all the work involved.

So, Mr. President, what we are actually doing is plowing under, one might say, those men who have ability to create earnings of $1,000,000. Goodness knows we need more of that kind of men in this country, because when a man makes $1,000,000 he now turns into the Treasury $854,000; we need more million-dollar earners; but by adopting the Ruml plan we are resorting to the same philosophy that was involved in plowing under every fourth row of cotton and killing the cattle and little pigs. We are creating an incentive for those who have the ability to earn $1,000,000 to retire from the field of making profit for 6 years, because they can make just as much each year during those 6 years as they could by remaining in business and making $1,000,000 profit during each one of the 6 years.

Mr. President, so I say that the Carlson-Ruml bill in every phase, in every way we look at it, is unsound, is unfair, is inequitable.

In my opinion, if the bill shall be passed, there will, in calmer moments later, be many regrets on the part of those who subscribe to the enactment of such iniquitous legislation. When the boys come home from war and look up the record and find in it the names of men who made enormous war profits during 1942 and 1943, and who while the soldiers were away from this country fighting and dying were permitted by the Ruml plan to add to their capital the amount of the accrued taxes which were due in 1942 or 1943, their reaction will hardly be a pleasant one. I do not intend that the boys who look up that record shall find that the junior Senator from Texas was a party to the enactment of such legislation, but rather that they shall discover that the junior Senator from Texas was opposed to it.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his suggestion?

Mr. GUFFEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to propound an inquiry to the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] who is in charge of the bill. A number of Senators find it necessary to be out of the city on official business tomorrow, and some on Sunday. I wish to know the program and plan the distinguished Senator has in mind with respect to the bill; whether the Senate shall be in session this evening, or tomorrow, or shall recess from tonight until Monday. I desire to follow the pleasure of the Senator in every way, and shall assist in every way I can to obtain an early disposition of the measure.

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to make the announcement that I shall ask the Senate to stay in session this evening until we shall finish action on the bill. The bill ought to be finished today, if it passes in any form which carries withholdings at the source. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue will not have any time to spare after the passage of the bill by the Senate and final action upon it, whether by signature of the President or otherwise, even if it were to be enacted and become law very early next week. I therefore hope that the Senate will be prepared to remain in session tonight until action on the bill has been concluded. I hope that we may have votes as rapidly as we can, of course, consistent with due consideration of the measure.

Mr. McNARY. Then, Mr. President, I understand plainly that the Senate is to stay in session until the bill is passed?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything about the pending legislation because I am not a member of the committee, and tax philosophy is so intertwined and interwoven that on most propositions one who does not serve on the committee is at great disadvantage in discussing the philosophy of any tax bill. However, in my humble judgment, there has emerged from the discussion a clear-cut principle or clear-cut policy which we must or must not embrace, depending on how we vote on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL]. We are told by the Secretary of the Treasury that new taxes to the extent of about $16,000,000,000 are desirable. We know that frequently the Government is endeavoring to put over loans for designated amounts, such as $12,000,000,000 or $15,000,000,000 in order to obtain the cash required to finance its program.

So, therefore, our future economic or, let us say, governmental financial stability depends upon two things: The ability of the Government to borrow, on the one hand; and the Government revenue derived from taxation, on the other hand. Those two things must go along hand in hand and must provide sufficient money to enable us to successfully prosecute the war. The failure of either one of them to produce a total sum sufficient to enable the Government to meet its obligations would bring disaster; for, under the bill heretofore passed by the Congress, in the emergency, the Secretary of the Treasury would simply walk over to the Federal Reserve bank, would place the Government's I O U there, and would take out enough billions of money to make up the difference. Of course, so long as public confidence is back of the loans, our bonds are always good. But the moment we depart from the foundation of public confidence behind Government obligations, to a certain extent the financial integrity of our Government is called into question.

At the other end of the Avenue we have set up an economic stabilizer, a czar, if you please, in the person of Mr. Byrnes, our former colleague. His job, we are told, is to "hold the line," to keep prices from increasing, to keep salaries and wages from going up beyond some intangible level of the past. I know his job is a difficult one.

Then, too, we have drafted the manpower of the country. Directly, through the Selective Service System, we have drafted the manpower needed for our armed forces. Indirectly, through directives of the War Manpower Commission and of other agencies, we are compelling and inducing people to go to the farms or into essential industries.

So, under the facade or the disguise—which would be a better term—of not drafting, in effect we are drafting all manpower, and largely all womanpower, either through the medium of the Selective Service Act, for the armed forces, or, through various other media, for work in the various civilian industries essential to the war.

What is the measure now before us, in the light of the background I have briefly sketched? Is it to share the burden? Is it to make equality of sacrifice? I cannot see how it is, for, no matter what one may say, the following elements stand out starkly in the tax problem: For a number of years—the years during the conduct of the war—the national income will be abnormally high. So long as the war lasts, more persons will work at wages which are abnormally high, and therefore during a number of years the national income will be far greater than the normal national income. Let us assume for the sake of argument or illustration that the national income during each of 4 war years is $160,000,000,000; let us assume that will be the national income in 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945. Likewise, let us assume that on the last day of the year 1945, hostilities will cease, and the War Production Board, the Army, the Navy, and the other agencies of the Government will immediately dispatch telegrams to Henry Ford, to General Motors, to Chrysler, to Glenn Martin, to United Aircraft, to the Baldwin Locomotive Works, to shipyards, and to everyone else, reading substantially as follows: "Stop all production forthwith"—because there will be no need for tanks or shells or guns or other munitions of war the moment hostilities cease. What will happen then?

The 20,000,000 men and women in the war plants will be without work, at least temporarily. The national income, which will have been away above normal, will drop off sharply. What will that mean, in terms of the pending bill? It will mean that if we start to collect income taxes on the basis of this year's earnings, instead of collecting income taxes during this year on the basis of 1942 earnings, the income of one of the great war years will not be used by the Government as a basis for fixing taxation.

Mr. President, we cannot get away from that point. So, if the war ends on December 31, 1945, instead of collecting income taxes on 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945, when the income is at a high level, under the Ruml plan we will collect on the basis of only 1943, 1944, and 1945 incomes—3 great years. The income for the year 1946, which will be a depression year, will, in effect and in actuality, form a substitute for the income for the year 1942, which we shall have waived.

So, instead of having a basis of $130,000,000,000 worth of actual earnings on which to siphon revenue into the Treasury, we shall take a $60,000,000,000 or a $70,000,000,000 year of earnings as the basis of which to siphon earnings into the Treasury, and over that 4-year or 5-year period we shall lose the ability to levy taxes on income actually earned, to the extent, let us say, of $50,000,000,000 or $60,000,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a few questions?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. In the first place, while presumably we shall lose that year as a basis for income taxation, it is to be presumed that thereafter the national income will begin to increase again, and that during every subsequent year we shall gradually obtain more revenue than we now are obtaining under the existing plan, until by the time we get back to the level of normal incomes before the war—and I feel perfectly confident that we shall do that in time—we shall regain that loss.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, Mr. President; I do not think so. I agree in part with what the Senator from Ohio has said, except I say that the great income year 1942 will be forever lost.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield for just a moment further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator to let me explain why I partly differ with him. Because if that year is excluded as a basis for levying taxes, it can be made up only by some following year which, according to all human measurements, in the average can never be so great as the average war year.

Mr. TAFT. No, Mr. President; I do not agree with the Senator at all. In the first place, the Senator must remember that it is the year 1942 which we are excluding. In fact the amount excluded is less than the 1942 total tax because of the windfall provision. The 1942 national income is approximately $110,000,000,000. In 1943 it will be much greater. Presumably, in 1944 it will be nearly $150,000,000,000; and from the increased taxes, we shall get all that we are giving up under the present plan, because we shall be levying the taxes on a larger income.

It seems to me to be perfectly reasonable to assume that we shall gradually get back to a $110,000,000,000 year, which the Senator says is bigger than any other year. When we are through we shall be exactly where we started.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, we shall not, for this reason: Let us take a 10-year period. We start with the war years. They are confessedly far above normal years. They will probably average $40,000,000,000 more than the average income of America from 1935 to 1940. If we take the year 1942 as a big year, the year 1943 as a big year, the year 1944 as a big year, and the year 1945 as a big year, we have 4 big years. Then we take 4 years of sloping off—the years 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1949, and then we have 2 good years on the end. At the end of 10 years, what is the result? We have lost one of our biggest years forever.

Mr. TAFT. No; we have replaced it by the average. If the average comes back to $110,000,000,000, we shall not have lost a cent.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not agree with the Senator. If that philosophy is sound, let me say to the Senator that if he will give me his entire earnings this year, he can make them up in the next 9 years.

Mr. TAFT. Not at all. That comparison has no relation to the subject which I am discussing. The question is whether the Government would receive as much money under the Ruml plan as under the other proposal. I say that it would over a period of 10 years. I say that it would receive more. Whenever the income rises over that of the previous year, it would receive more. Whenever the income goes down, it receives less. It seems to me obvious that if we start with $110,000,000,000 for 1942, if by 1952 we are back to $110,000,000,000, we shall have collected exactly the same number of dollars as we would have collected if we were to continue the present system in effect. It seems to me perfectly clear. I do not see any answer to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator usually does not see anything in an argument with which he is not in accord.

Mr. TAFT. It is purely a mathematical question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not for a moment concede that the Senator's premise is correct, but I am trying to understand his point of view. If the Senator will quit talking generalities and deal with actual years, I think I can convince him that the basis for his entire assumption is not sound. Let me illustrate.

Let us take, for example, a 5-year period, 3 war years and 2 post-war years. Under the Ruml plan 1 of the war years would be eliminated, and 1 post-war year would be substituted in its place to make up the 5-year period. Am I correct in that?

Mr. TAFT. Entirely so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then we have 3 post-war years and 2 war years, in accordance with the Ruml plan, as against 3 war years and 2 post-war years in accordance with the plan of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TAFT. Let me suggest——

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment. That is a 5-year period. Now let us take a 10-year period. In a 10-year period we would have 4 good years, 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945. Then we will take 6 post-war years, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, and 1952. Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that the last 2 of the post-war years are fairly good years. What do we get in that picture? In that 10-year picture we get the elimination of a war year for a post-war year.

Of course, it may be said that time is infinite, which it is. If we go on down the corridor of time, there will always be the possibility that at some time in the future, time being infinite, we shall reach the point where it does not make any difference. But, Mr. President, the debt which we are building is not infinite. The income which the American people are making is not permanent. Everyone knows that it is abnormal. To say that 5 or 10 years from now we shall be back in a period of prosperity equivalent to 1942 is to assume that a group of political magicians will be conducting the affairs of all the countries which are now bankrupt. To adopt such a theory is to discount entirely the tremendous economic and depressive effect of a debt of $250,000,000,000 on the shoulders of all businesses and persons in this country.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to add a word?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. The point I am making, to take the Senator's own statement, is that, in effect, if we eliminate a $110,000,000,000 year, when we get back to another $110,000,000,000 year, which, under the Ruml plan, would be substituted, by that time the income would be equalized and we should be in exactly the same position. We would have eliminated a $110,000,000,000 year at one end and added a $110,000,000,000 year at the other end. When we were through the total would be the same.

The Senator suggests that we will not get back to another $110,000,000,000 year.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to call attention to the fact that in 1929 we had a higher income than we had at any time during the World War.

So far as the $210,000,000,000 debt is concerned, if it means anything, it means inflation. It means, therefore, that our income is far more likely to be high 10 years from now than if there were no such debt. So it seems to me that the Senator's argument that the Ruml plan would result in a reduction of income over a 10-year period is not sound.

I should like to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I see the Senator's point of view, and I take issue with him specifically on the proposition that there is going to be a $110,000,000,000 income in the country in 1952, for these reasons:

First of all, the world is impoverished. Secondly, when we had our high income in 1929 our debt was small. Taxes were small. Furthermore, during the period from 1920 to 1929, under the aegis of this Government, loans totaling $16,000,000,000 were made to small countries. During that period we had the greatest year of foreign trade the Nation has ever seen. We had total exports of nearly $5,000,000,000 a year. Why? Foreign countries were buying our exports with the money we were lending them. When those loans washed out, as they did in 1929, we did not have real prosperity. We had an illusion of prosperity.

This money is owed to our own people. Those debts were owed by foreign governments. So the concussion of having sent wealth out of the country, which could never come back, brought on, in part, the depression, whereas in the present situation the money is actually owed to our own people, and we do not repudiate our debts. Therefore, it means that the people will have less income with which to buy than they normally would have if taxes were not so heavy. They must lay something aside.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator permit one further question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator has pictured a condition in which the national income continues to increase until the end of 1945, when he assumes the war will end, and then there will be a sudden drop.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. What seems perfectly obvious to me is that even if the Government loses a large part of its income in 1946, it should lose it. We should never impose war taxes, based on 1945, on an income which is very much less in 1946.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree.

Mr. TAFT. So, to the extent that the Ruml plan would result in a reduction of the income of the Government in the very year in which national income is reduced, it seems to me to be a sound taxation policy, and one which should be supported by the Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can see the Senator's point of view, but I do not agree with it for this reason: First of all, the Senator says that a reduction in the national income will be brought about largely because the war is over. I agree to that. That is the reason why I am opposing the Ruml plan, because it is obvious that when the war is over the national income will be less. That is why the Senator's argument is refuted, in large measure, by his own utterances, because he himself has just said that following the war the Government income will be less.

Mr. TAFT. No; I was merely accepting the Senator's assumption. That was all.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said that when the war is over the Government income should be less. I agree that it will be less.

Mr. TAFT. I said that if the national income were less, I thought the Government income should be less.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. Therefore, is that the time to collect taxes? The debt will still be there. It will be greater then than it is now. Is not the time to collect taxes to pay that debt while the people are in a position to pay the taxes to liquidate it? Every time we postpone the payment of that debt, we make it more difficult for the rich man, in finality, as well as the poor man, to pay the debt. There is demagoguery back of the Ruml plan in its last analysis. I predict that if it is adopted it will cost the wealthy more money in the long run than if they were put on a pay-as-you-go basis in accordance with the income of the people and their ability to pay based on that income.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I think the Senator from Maryland has very ably defended his position.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope so.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I congratulate him on the address which he has made. However, in the debate between the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Ohio, it seems to me that one phase of the subject has been overlooked. The interest of the Government has been discussed, but the individual interest has been overlooked.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming to that.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I thank the Senator, but I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that after we get through these years of prosperity and then through the years of depression, and possibly get back to prosperity, the class of citizens now paying an income tax will not be the same class of individuals who will profit by the adoption of the plan proposed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just look at the situation from the standpoint of sheer logic and facts, and logic should play some part in the final determination of this issue. There is no Senator who knows when the war will end. It may still be in progress 5 years from now. It may be in progress 10 years from now. I personally am inclined to take an optimistic view. I believe that at some time prior to 5 years from now the war will be over. However, there are many sound thinking persons high up in the Army and Navy who say there is no immediate prospect on the horizon for a cessation of the war.

Mr. President, what will the debt be when the war is over? It is pretty certain that it will be in the neighborhood of $250,000,000,000. That is $7,500 for every family in America, rich and poor, high and low, black and white. There will also be the State debts, the city debts, the county debts, and perhaps our own debts on top of them all. If the debt is to be greater 3 years from now than it is at the present time, what is the philosophy of the proposal now before us? It is to pay off the debt when it is greater, and when we shall have less income, rather than to pay it off when it is small and when we have more income. That is just inescapable.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Maryland made a statement in the early part of his remarks with respect to what may occur when the war is over insofar as Ford, Chrysler, the shipyards, and other industries producing implements of war are concerned.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I take it that the Senator means that millions upon millions of individuals will then be out of work.

Mr. TYDINGS. Temporarily.

Mr. LUCAS. Temporarily, at least.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. If they should temporarily be out of work, or if they could not obtain the high wages they had been receiving in the defense plants, I wonder what would happen to many millions of these defense workers insofar as their taxes for the particular year were concerned. How would they pay them?

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the plan proposed by the Senator from Texas a 20 percent withholding tax would be collected currently.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would be used to pay their income taxes for the preceding year.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. Let us assume that in 1945 they will have a year of tremendously high income, as well as in 1944, 1943, and 1942.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. However, in 1946, after the war is over, I estimate that 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 of the 40,000,000 taxpayers will not be able to pay the high taxes assessed against them in 1945.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Government will have collected the tax currently while the taxpayers were earning it.

Mr. LUCAS. The Government will be collecting in 1946 while the taxpayer is receiving no wage.

Mr. TYDINGS. No. As I understand the philosophy of the amendment of the Senator from Texas——

Mr. LUCAS. Then I am wrong.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a minute. Let us assume that 1945 will be the last year of the war, that on December 31, 1945, hostilities will have ceased, and unemployment will commence on the 1st day of January. That was the proposal of the Senator. All during 1945 20 percent of the worker's income was impounded while he was employed.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. That money would be available in 1946 to pay the income tax on earnings during 1945. Am I correct?

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would be used to pay off the income tax in the year in which the income was earned.

Mr. LUCAS. Oh, no.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would not be paid until 1946, but the Government would have the money with which to pay it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in just a moment. What is the Senator's interpretation of it?

Mr. LUCAS. I am trying to ascertain the correct interpretation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me state the question again. If the amendment of the Senator from Texas should be adopted, it is my understanding that all during the year 1945, from all these workers who are steadily employed, from every salaried man there would be collected monthly by the Government a 20 percent withholding tax. At the end of 1945 the worker would make up his income tax return on the basis of 1945's earnings. The Senator disagrees with that, does he?

Mr. LUCAS. I am trying to find out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Either agree or disagree. Otherwise I cannot tell what is in dispute.

Mr. LUCAS. Wait a moment. I am trying to obtain some information. The Senator seems a little excited over the situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not excited, but the Senator propounded a question, and I stated the case, and then he shook his head.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad to yield. Perhaps the Senator from Texas can clear up the matter.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope someone may be able to do so.

Mr. O'DANIEL. As I understand, under my amendment the withholding tax for 1945 would be sent into the Treasury and there it would be applied on the accrued tax for 1944.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. Under the amendment of the Senator from Texas there would be withheld in 1945 the tax which was assessed in 1944 and due in 1945. Is that correct?

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. In 1946, when the great war is over, and millions of men have returned home, and are without work, who will pay the taxes in 1946 which will have been levied on the high wages earned by persons in the defense plants during 1945?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I am glad to answer the question of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to have the Senator do so.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I have heretofore answered the same question during the debate today. I presume the Senator from Illinois was not in the chamber at the time.

Mr. LUCAS. I am sorry; I may have been out at that particular moment.

Mr. O'DANIEL. If we should come to the situation referred to by the Senator from Illinois, and the income of the taxpayer or individual in 1946 should fall off, or if he did not have any money and was unable to pay his 1945 income tax, certainly we could find nowhere in the United States a more worthy individual who would be entitled forgiveness or cancelation of his income tax for 1945.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is my understanding.

Mr. O'DANIEL. And that would be the time when the United States should forgive taxes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I still have the floor, and that is not my argument at all.

I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Illinois. This is my proposition: If under the aegis of the Ruml plan there is forgiveness of the taxes for 1942, which is a big year, and the Government does not collect any taxes in that earning period because it substitutes 1943 in its place, then I want it understood that even if the condition envisaged by the Senator from Illinois comes to pass, the Government has lost a good year, under his plan, as against a bad year, under the plan of the Senator from Texas. So that no real damage is done if the assumption of the Senator from Illinois is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator will yield further, I maintain that an unusual amount of damage is done to millions upon millions of workers in 1946, if a heavy tax bill for 1945 is hanging over their heads. In 1946 we may find men going from one town to another attempting to get jobs, and not able to find them. Finally the tax collector finds an automobile parked in some spot, and he annoys and harasses the owner, and continues to try to collect the $75 or $125 that is due and owing under the previous year's tax, which the man made and spent. The very reason why I am for the Ruml plan is that I want to keep the Government from annoying and harassing millions upon millions of people in the post-war era.

Mr. TYDINGS. The reason why I am not for the Ruml plan is that I know the man referred to will be 10 times as much harrassed if the integrity of our financial system is not kept strong.

Senators, as this debate takes place, I am carried back to the year 1937. There are a good many in this body now who were in the Senate at that time, but there are some new Members. Perhaps some of my older colleagues will remember that I had the temerity and the effrontery on six succeeding Monday mornings to line this Chamber with charts showing all sorts of deficits, income-tax proposals, and similar things, and I made a plea morning after morning for six successive Monday mornings that we levy more taxes; that, as we were getting out of the depression somewhat, we should try to get the country, in those peacetimes, on a sounder basis.

I remember that from the year 1930 to the year 1940, a 10-year period, the Government deficits amounted to $27,000,000,000, an average of $2,700,000,000 a year. I remember I looked up the total cost of the Army and the Navy, including everything, during that 10-year period, and it amounted to $11,000,000,000. We spent $16,000,000,000 more during the 10-year period than we took in, without counting a single penny for the Army or the Navy.

Always this anticipated prosperous year was coming, in the future, just as my good friend, the Senator from Ohio, rose only a few moments ago and talked about the $110,000,000,000 year of the future. So in those days people talked about $100,000,000,000-income year that was coming in the future.

We tried everything that could be thought of to hasten it. We tried pump priming. There was a $4,000,000,000 appropriation in 1 year in an attempt to get the machinery going at rapid speed. There were subsidies to farmers, and everything else of the kind, in an effort to start again the economy machine.

I now hear the same bewitching song, "Don't bother to collect as much taxes as you can get now," when the people are making the largest income in history, and when the debt is skyrocketing. "Put it off."

Five or 10 or 15 or 20 years from now the national income will be $150,000,000,000 or $200,000,000,000. I hope those who make that prediction will prove to be right. There is a big backlog of unfilled orders, for steel rails, cars, clothing, machinery, shoes, farm implements. But do not underestimate the fact that this is an impoverished world. Do not underestimate the fact that our responsibility to the world, at least under present leadership, will not cease when the armistice is signed. Do not lose sight of the fact that there will be a tremendous rehabilitation program, that sheer self-interest will cause many a man reluctantly to vote away the money of the people of this country in order to go to the aid of the diseased and the mentally and physically handicapped of other countries.

A few days ago I made an investigation and found that in Belgium, for example, the food allowance is 900 calories a day. Physicians say a healthy body should have 2,700 calories a day. The people of Belgium have for years been getting one-third of what they need, but now the allotment has been dropped to 800 calories a day. Look in Life Magazine for this last week, at the picture of the little Greek boy, whose legs are so thin they look like a crane's legs. He had nothing at all on his bones but skin. Do Senators realize that under the aegis of the Swedish and the Swiss Red Cross we are sending to Greece 15,000 tons of supplies a week, and that without them the people would starve by the thousands? Does any one tell me that, sketching the conditions in this brief and incomplete way, when the war is over life is going to move along for all of us as it did in the past?

There is not a man on this planet whose imagination is sufficiently vivid even to begin to comprehend the after effects of the war, and let us make no mistake about it. I read in the press only a few days ago a statement that the Lend-Lease Administrator said he was running out of funds. We appropriated some $16,000,000,000 or $18,000,000,000 to him, as I recall, and the end of that is in sight.

I wrote to the officials of the Army and the Navy in the last couple of months—I have had quite a large correspondence with the Secretary of War—asking what in addition to lend-lease, what in addition to the visible expenditures of this Government, we had spent in foreign countries in a military way. Do Senators realize that we have spent nearly $2,000,000,000 in building installations in some 30 or 40 countries scattered all over the globe? We have done that. The Army alone has spent nearly $1,400,000,000, and there is no report under lend-lease or anywhere else of that expenditure.

Mr. President, do you realize that the coordinator of Latin-American affairs has spent $21,000,000 for health and sanitation in Central and South America? I am not criticizing any of these expenditures, I am merely stating that right now we do not know the total of what the war is going to cost.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to conclude but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying. I am wondering whether I am correct in drawing an illustration I wish to suggest, because this is the way it appeals to me: Suppose a farmer has this year the best crop he ever had in his life, and decides that he will not pay his bills this year, but will wait 6 or 7 years, and perhaps have more money with which to pay. Is that about what the Senator has in mind?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is not wholly a far-fetched analogy of the present situation.

It does not take any intelligence at all to solve the question which confronts us, because there are certain fundamental truths which no amount of oratory or speech making can overcome. The first one is that this is the biggest year, so far as income earning is concerned, in the history of this Republic, and what does the pending amendment propose to do? It proposes to wipe that out as a basis of taxation, and to substitute some year in the future which we are told will approximate this year—and God only knows whether it will or not.

What hardship lies in paying taxes one year after they are due, particularly if the Government during that year, through the withholding tax, provides the money to pay the taxes? There may be some slight evening up, I will concede, under the Ruml plan. When one year is balanced against another, for all intents and purposes one might, according to some philosophy, call the Ruml plan a substitute. But in any case a post-war year is being substituted for a war year. We cannot get away from that. Anyone who says the national income in a post-war year will equal the income of 1942 or 1943 is, in my opinion, a dreamer.

Mr. President, we cannot have a debt of $250,000,000,000 and have low taxes. Taxes are a burden on the purchasing power of the people. Taxes are a burden on the advancement of free enterprise. Taxes are a burden on private initiative. The rich man, looking ahead, will want all the taxes possible collected now, because when the day when everyone receives large incomes shall pass there will be only a few of the comparatively large incomes left, and what targets they will be for the taxation of the future. There are many who are in favor of the Ruml plan who have not thought the subject through. Now is the time, right now, to collect.

Mr. President, I started out in my own general way in favor of the Ruml plan. Pay-as-you-go appealed to me. I should like to have it even yet, but I cannot take it at the price of waiving a whole war year and substituting in its place a post-war year as a basis for the collection of taxes.

Mr. President, I submit it is simply pure common sense to say that there is no immediate prospect in this Republic for the national income in any of the post-war years in your lifetime or mine equaling the national income of 1942, 1943, or 1944, when everyone is working at the highest wages in all history, not only working for our own needs, but working for the people all over the face of the earth. When the war is over we shall not be supplying people all over the face of the earth to the extent we now are. As we have made demands on the mothers and fathers of this country, as we have made demands upon the wives and the little children for their sons and fathers to go forth and to die, it seems to me not to be the part of patriotism, it seems to me not to be the part of good judgment, it seems to me not to be the part of intelligent self-interest on the part of anyone to cast aside as a basis for Federal taxation a year when the national earnings are the greatest in the history of our country, and to substitute some will-o'-the-wisp, as yet undisclosed, unknown year in the future, to take its place, when we know that great unemployment is bound to come after this war, and that all the world's hardships, now covered over, now behind the walls of war, will break out to command our attention and the burdens of government will be very heavy indeed, and the national financial structure be less strong to weather the storm than it now is.

Mr. President, although I started out in a vague way to be for the Ruml plan, I could not in good conscience feel that I would have kept the faith with those who are making the great sacrifice during this period of time if I were to wipe out these great incomes—by great I do not mean large ones, I mean great in the sense that everyone is enjoying them—and not vote to provide that the Government shall receive taxes from them now rather than in the future.

Mr. President, I have no quarrel with any Senator who thinks otherwise. I did not intend to say anything in the debate, but, after listening to the debate, and finding what, in my opinion, is the essence of the whole dispute, I cannot cast my vote in any other way than I have stated I shall cast it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I shall not trespass very long on the time of the Senate, and, because of the importance of having this measure passed at the earliest possible moment, I probably should not say any more than I have heretofore said in the course of questions and answers exchanged between me and Senators who have spoken on the bill. But, after listening to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] whose amendment is before the Senate, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] discuss this very important measure, I feel that I must say a word or two.

In the beginning, I should like to say that I do not know whether anyone is "demagoguing" on this measure or not, but, so far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, there is a great principle involved, and upon that principle I stand or fall. That principle is placing the taxpayers of America upon a pay-as-you-go basis.

The Senator from Texas admitted in the colloquy which took place in the Senate today that his proposal would not place the taxpayers of America upon a pay-as-you-go basis. That is the issue with respect to the bill. If Senators believe in a theory or a philosophy which is new in the field of taxation they can vote for it, and if they do not they can vote against it. I regret that every Senator could not have heard the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] discuss this very question.

Mr. President, under the amendment now before the Senate we cannot get away from the question which I posed a moment ago, insofar as the year 1946 is concerned, assuming that the war ends the last of December 1945.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I am sorry I did not hear all the argument on this point, because I am quite convinced that the taxpayers of this country will be current in the payment of their taxes this year. Statistics produced today show that less than 1 percent of the taxpayers are in default of payment of taxes due March 15, this year. Let us consider the case of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE]. He paid his taxes for 1942. So from July of this year until January next year he will have 20 percent deducted from his salary. That deduction of salary for 6 months will be applied on 1943 taxes. Those who are behind in their payments——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator——

Mr. WILEY. I should like to have the Senator clarify the situation presented by that case.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not know that I can clarify it. I think I am in more of a muddle now than I was when I rose to my feet. There is no question that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas does not place the taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go basis. I do not think the Senator will deny that. That is all there is to the question.

What will happen in 1946 when the President of the United States tells Ford and Chrysler and the shipbuilders, and so forth, in line with the example which was given by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], that the factories must stop making munitions of war? Then millions of men employed in those factories will go—where? They will go back to the farms, they will go back to the small cities, they will go back to their own friends and neighbors. They will go everywhere. What will be hanging over them in 1946? It will be the tax bill assessed against them in 1945. All the employer can do in 1946 is to collect by way of a tax on whatever he may be making to apply upon the 1945 assessment; and in millions of millions of cases that collection will be absolutely nothing. In other words, if the amendment of the Senator from Texas shall become the law of the land, after the war is over that debt anxiety will hang over the heads of millions upon millions of defense workers.

Mr. President, that is one of the things in which I am tremendously interested at the moment. I am attempting to look far down the mountainside at the post-war conditions which our Nation will have to go through. In the post-war period we cannot afford to have millions of men with debt liabilities hanging over their heads. It will be hard enough to get along without having the tax collectors hanging around and annoying millions of men here and there and everywhere else—levying upon this automobile, upon this bedstead, upon this set of furniture, and upon that set of furniture in order to collect a tax which was assessed in 1945, when the man was making perhaps the highest income he ever made in the course of his career. That is the danger which exists in attempting to write into the law the kind of withholding tax the Senator from Texas wants the Senate to adopt.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, the pending proposal coming from the committee is an insurance against having a bankrupt citizenship some day; is that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in my opinion the Senator is 100-percent correct.

We have to look to the future of our citizens and of our country, and we cannot afford to enact any type of legislation which will have a tendency to bankrupt, or which will bankrupt, any citizen or a great portion of the citizens of the country, especially at that particular time. Mr. President, it seems to me to be as clear as anything can be that we cannot under any circumstances afford to adopt such an amendment as that offered by the Senator from Texas.

Now to go back to the beginning, let me say that it is merely a question of principle as to whether we want to put the people of the country on a pay-as-you-go basis or whether we want to leave the system as it is at the present time. We do not need any law such as the amendment of the Senator from Texas would embody. I should prefer to leave the system as it is, rather than to place a withholding tax on the people under the system and arrangement contemplated in the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Illinois has just referred to a pay-as-you-go basis. I should like to state that during the debate I have heard various Senators refer to the amendment as an amendment which would put the country on a pay-as-you-go basis. Would the amendment of the Senator from Texas do that?

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, it would not. The amendment of the Senator from Texas would not put the country on a pay-as-you-go basis in any way whatever. For instance, as to 1944 incomes, it would withhold from salaries and wages a certain amount to be applied to the assessment for 1945.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator and I were both correct a moment ago, and I think our disagreement was occasioned by a different interpretation of what was involved. Let me see if I cannot straighten it out.

My contention is that the withholding tax is taken out of earner's wages as he earns them. The Senator's contention was that even though they are taken out while the wage earner is earning the big salary, they are applicable to the salary earned in the preceding year.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct; and when I inadvertently disagreed with him as to that phase of the matter I was in error.

However, I still maintain that the 20-percent withholding tax is an effort on the part of the Government to place the worker or the salaried man, regardless of what his salary may be, in such a position that he will be able to pay his income taxes at the time when he is making the high income.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator's observation in this way: A great deal has been said about what we shall lose and what we shall forgive in connection with the pending bill; but, Mr. President, as the Senator from Georgia so correctly stated, we have the power to write a tax bill that would take care of any amount of money the Treasury might lose in connection with the Ruml plan.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. We have the right to take care of any amount the Treasury might lose; but we do not have the right to put the same amount back on the same persons, do we?

Mr. LUCAS. That may be true; the Senator may be correct; but, insofar as the collection of taxes is concerned, we can assess in taxes all that the people can stand; we can take it all, if it is necessary to do so, in order to carry on the Government in this crisis.

Mr. President, nothing will be lost by the Ruml plan; but as I stand on the floor of the Senate, I say that even if the Treasury should lose something, the result of putting the people of America on a pay-as-you-go basis would be worth it. I am speaking now in the light of the post-war era; because that will be the time when we shall need the best possible morale on the part of our people in order to keep the wheels of the American way of life turning; and we cannot afford to have tax snoopers or tax collectors going around in 1946 harassing and annoying men who forgot to pay their taxes, and making bad citizens out of them, at a time when we shall need all the good citizens we can possibly have. Our citizens will continue to be good citizens if we let them pay their taxes at the time when they have the money with which to pay them. That is what would be done by the Ruml plan.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I understand that the Senator's proposition is that we should forgive the 1942 taxes because sometime in the future there might be a bad year when the wage earners of the country could not pay their taxes. Is that the Senator's point—that we should forgive the 1942 taxes in order to have taxes on a current basis in the poor years?

Mr. LUCAS. That is one of the arguments which has been made, and I judge from the remarks made a moment ago by the Senator from Maryland, when he spoke about factories shutting down and employment decreasing and the difficulties the country would have to go through that that was the point he made. Mr. President, I take up that point and discuss it. I hope the country will stay on a national-income basis of $150,000,000,000 or $160,000,000,000 forever, so far as I am concerned. I hope the time will never come when a million of our men will be out of employment.

I do not base the argument on those considerations at all; I base it on the fact that people ought to be on a pay-as-you-go basis, so that we shall have the tax money in our pockets when the time comes, and not have tax collectors going around, annoying the people.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is the argument the Senator made, is it not?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The Senator's argument was that for 1942, the year in which our people had the greatest income of any in our history, we should forgive $9,000,000,000 of taxes because of a rainy day the Senator sees in some future year.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, I cannot possibly see so far ahead as can the Senator from Utah, Mr. President.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is the argument the Senator makes, and I ask him to stay with it.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, I shall stay with it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. Like the Senator from Maryland, I, too, started out against the Ruml plan. Yesterday I heard the argument made by the able senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the chairman of the Committee on Finance. It seems to me that the point is whether we want to put the American taxpayers on a basis on which they can pay their taxes as they earn them—on a current basis. The Senator from Georgia said that if we decide to do that, 30,000,000 of the 44,000,000 American taxpayers will be able to pay their taxes currently, out of salaries and wages. He went further, and said:

> I would not hesitate to abate 100 percent of the tax if I believed it was necessary in order to put the American taxpayer on a current basis with his Government, and I would do so under the firm conviction that that was the best course for the Government to pursue, and was certainly the best course for the taxpayer, if the Government should follow it.

Mr. President, from all the debate which has occurred, I take it that no Senator will say he does not want to put the taxpayers on a current basis. Of course, we have different ideas of how to do it. The chairman of the committee wants to do it on a 75-percent basis, because he thinks we should carry over 25 percent of the taxes. However, as he said—and I repeat it, because what he said convinced me—there is no such thing as forgiving the taxes owed to the Government. I quote the Senator's statement:

> Forgiving! What does it amount to when the Government can in any one year impose any tax on its people that it wants to impose? This is not a question of debtor and creditor. If, as a creditor, the Senator from Alabama forgives me something, he cannot make me pay it next year unless I become indebted to him again. In the narrow, technical sense only, is there the relationship of debtor and creditor between the Government of the United States and the taxpayer, because the Government has the absolute power to change, modify, shift, or increase its tax rates so as to meet its necessities.

Mr. President, all of us owe the Government; we owe it for everything we have—and that is the basis of obligation—and the Government can take everything we have if the Government needs it.

So far as giving back anything is concerned, we are not proposing to do any such thing. The Government can assert its right to have all the taxes it needs for any purpose, either now or at any time in the future.

Mr. President, I would not support the amendment of the Senator from Texas, because it would put us on a temporary pay-as-you-go basis, from July 1 to the end of the year, and then from the 1st of January to the 1st of July we would still be on the present basis and would be liable for 1942 taxes.

As the Senator from Georgia said yesterday, the average taxpayer is, perhaps, a soldier boy now in the Solomons, and I know some of them who made $15,000 or $20,000 a year before the war, but now make $50 a month. How are they going to pay taxes? Are we going to permit their homes to be taken, and liens to be established on their property? Millions of people in the United States cannot pay taxes now. There are too many of them to put in jail. Are we going to force them into bankruptcy? The Senator from Georgia convinced me that we ought to put them on a pay-as-you-go basis, wipe out the obligation, and start over again.

I wished to add these remarks to the statement of my friend, because it seems to me that that is the proper basis for our action.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kentucky. That is all there is to this problem. It is as simple as A B C. The question is whether or not we want to place the taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go plan. There is no answer to the great argument which was made yesterday by the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long. I wish to make a very brief statement.

There is an old saying in Washington that, "If you do not like the weather in Washington, just wait a while." [Laughter.] That is almost true of the proposals to change the tax law. We have so many amendments that if we will only sit around and wait a while, the proposal we want will come along and we can get on the band wagon.

The proposal I like more than any other has come along in the form of the O'Daniel amendment. I have made a long study of all these proposals. I am a member of the Finance Committee, and I have listened to the testimony and arguments pro and con on all of them. I find that so far all the proposals have some very definite weaknesses, and all of them have elements of strength. Some of them are more attractive than others.

The proposal which the junior Senator from Texas is making has its weaknesses. I will admit that I have been greatly disturbed by the arguments made by the chairman of the Finance Committee to the effect that the time has come when we must put the taxpayers on a current basis. Of course, the proposal made by the Senator from Texas would not put them on a current basis. We would not catch up the year we would be behind. We simply would not be 2 years behind. That is the difficulty, unless we have a withholding tax. A withholding tax would not catch up the year we are already behind, but it would make it impossible for us to get 2 years behind. That is its virtue.

If we are to make our taxes current, we can do one of two things: We can skip a year, or we can double up and pay 2 years' taxes in 1, or spread the payment of 1 year's taxes over a period of years.

We had before us the Ellender plan, which did not skip a year, but doubled up the taxes. Then we had the Connally plan to skip half a year and double up the remaining half a year. We have the plan of the Senator from Georgia, to skip 75 percent of the 1942 taxes, and bring forward, 25 percent of the 1942 tax. Then there is the Ruml plan, to skip a whole year and not double up anything.

There are two proposals before the Senate not to double up taxes. It seems to me that it is absolutely impossible, with the heavy load the taxpayer is carrying at the present time, to double up his taxes. Neither of the two plans to which I refer would double up any taxes. I like the O'Daniel proposal best of all.

Strange as it may seem, I select the Ruml plan as the next best. I voted against the Ruml plan in committee. I started out very much opposed to it. I felt that we ought to go along as we had been doing for 30 years, and not worry very much about making our taxes current, and enact a withholding tax so as not to get 2 years behind. No one would be hurt very much. In the matter of property taxes we expect to be a year behind. There is no proposal before the Congress at the present time to make corporation taxes current. They will still be a year behind. Even though we should adopt the Ruml plan and make personal income taxes current, the majority of income taxes would not be made current, because corporation taxes would not be current. I know, of course, that corporations subject to examination by a certified public accountant are compelled to carry a balance to take care of their taxes. I know that most of our heavy personal taxpayers do the same thing. It seems to me that the Treasury could greatly assist in keeping taxes current by working out a system of bonds to sell to the people on an installment plan a year ahead. The people could buy the bonds, and at the end of the year the bonds could settle the tax account. It seems to me that the Treasury could work out something of that kind and make it as attractive as possible, even though a discount were allowed on the bonds, so that taxpayers could become current by making installment payments.

Of course, under the O'Daniel plan, any taxpayer who wished to become current could become current simply by setting aside a certain sum of money. It seems to me that the Treasury should encourage him to do so.

As I say, I have been greatly impressed by the statement of the chairman of the committee as to the necessity of becoming current. I was greatly impressed by the statement which he read today from the high-finance officer of Canada on the same subject. I was quite impressed in committee by the following colloquy between the chairman and Mr. Paul, the expert from the Treasury:

> Mr. PAUL. If you once adopt a current collection system, then all the increases would go along with the other taxes, and the taxpayers would be current, but the number of dollars taken out of their pockets would be greater.

Senator TAFT. Unless they had to borrow money to pay the taxes. Then they would not be current.

Mr. PAUL. They are current so far as the Government is concerned.

This is what the chairman said:

If you are to get $16,000,000,000 more money out of the taxpayer, take it out of the stream of earnings or of income, you have got to get most of the taxpayers current or they cannot stand it.

Mr. Paul replied:

I agree with you.

So the Treasury believes that taxes should be made current. There is no question about that. It was brought out more forcefully in some questions which I asked the Treasury representative.

As I say, I should prefer to go along as we have been operating for 30 years, and as I believe we could go along for 30 more years, remaining a year behind. I am reminded that last October—I believe it was about the middle of October—Congress enacted a tax bill which was made retroactive to the first of the calendar year in which it was enacted. I believe that if we look up the record we shall find that most tax measures are made retroactive for many months. So there is not such a great problem in making taxes current as we might think. I shall support the O'Daniel amendment, and if that is defeated, I shall support the Ruml plan.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as a member of the Finance Committee, I wish very briefly to state my position on the pending bill. I will not discuss the pending amendment.

Mr. President, practically all proposals that have been made preceding the reporting of the pending bill by the Finance Committee have agreed that there is no better or more sensible plan of taxation than the pay-as-you-go system. The Treasury Department has indicated the desirability of eliminating for the great mass of taxpayers the 1-year lag which now exists in our present system of individual income-tax payment. In other words, everyone appears to favor relating tax payments to the year of income, and letting income and the payment of taxes go up and down together.

The system under which we have been operating has not been particularly objectionable in the past because incomes were low and taxes were comparatively low.

With the tremendous increase in the income of taxpayers, and the number of taxpayers, and with the war causing wide and abnormal fluctuations in income, and with the prospect of a strong decline in the current income of many taxpayers, the Government is likely to lose heavily because many taxpayers will be unable to pay taxes a year after their large incomes have disappeared. Taxpayers cannot pay taxes past due after they have spent their incomes. It is best for the taxpayers, and most advantageous to the Treasury to have taxes paid on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Assuming that the soundest tax system is one in which the tax liability is geared to current income, as we practically all agree, the only question is, How are we going to accomplish it?

It is my judgment, after studying the various proposals, that the fairest way to accomplish this objective is to treat all taxpayers alike, by providing that all taxpayers will be placed under this system, without any distinction as to the amount of tax paid or the income received.

The tax rate system now in operation is based upon the principle that persons are taxed on their ability to pay. This well-established graduated system of taxing incomes will continue, and when increased taxes are to be levied in the future this plan will be continued.

Suggestions have been offered and bills and amendments have been presented that seeks to differentiate between various classes of taxpayers. All these proposals either seek to increase the present taxes out of line with the present graduated tax system or to increase the tax burdens rather substantially in the case of certain taxpayers for this privilege. Under these proposals increased current taxes must be paid, and a substantial carry-over tax will have to be levied in the future, which will be a serious handicap to many taxpayers, and in many instances will exceed their income.

I have no objection to increasing the taxes on incomes in all tax brackets on the basis of ability to pay, but I do not favor this being incorporated in a bill intended to put all taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go basis or penalizing some of the taxpayers and not all, for adopting a system of collecting taxes on the current income basis. Any system other than treating all taxpayers alike is discriminatory and in the nature of a penalty in the form of additional taxes on certain taxpayers.

A bill containing new tax rates on incomes is soon to be presented to Congress. At that time the rates must be increased and they should be increased along the lines of the graduated scale already fixed in our tax laws. I favor substantial increases in the estate and gift taxes, as well as graduated increases on the incomes of all taxpayers who are now, under the law, obliged to pay income taxes.

Mr. President, I have concluded the prepared concise statement of my views, reached after studying all the proposals which have been submitted. I inquire, why not treat all taxpayers alike, in view of the fact that we are primarily considering changing to a system of having taxes paid upon a current basis? I do not believe any other claim can be justified. The poor man, the man with a small income, would be placed on a current basis. It is desirable for him and it is desirable for the Treasury, but it is proposed by some that those in the higher brackets shall be discriminated against and shall be asked to pay something for the privilege of being put upon a current basis. I cannot follow such a theory of class distinction, much as my sympathies go to the hard-pressed small taxpayers of this country. If we desire to get more taxes from taxpayers who are in the higher brackets, let us impose heavier taxes upon them and heavier rates, and let us increase the taxes upon estates. In the case of deceased persons with more than $60,000 a graduated estate tax is levied. Let us meet the problem of determining what the Public Treasury may need in increased taxes by dealing with the rates and by increasing the estate and gift taxes.

Let us now enact a law such as the committee has recommended which will put everyone on a current basis without discrimination, without going into the question of rates; and when the rate bill shall come before us for consideration if the most prosperous of our people can afford it let us increase their rates, even though they may have to go into their capital to pay the cost of this war. But do not punish, penalize, or persecute them when we are undertaking here only to change from an antiquated tax system which may have been all right in the past to a modern pay-as-you-go tax system which would give the people of this country an opportunity to pay their taxes currently.

Mr. President, what would you think of paying the pew rents in your church a year after you occupied the pew?

Who would think of paying the rent for the tenement which he occupies in the following year when he does not know what his financial condition or his income may be?

It seems to me to be clear, definite, and just that the course for us to pursue is to put the taxpayers of this country on a current tax basis, and to leave the question of rates, the question of discrimination, and the question of penalties, as well as every other question, for consideration when the rate bill shall come before us. Therefore I shall support the Finance Committee bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the vote of the Senate on this amendment. I desire only to say that in observing the course of the debate on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] to the substitute proposed by his colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], I have been reminded of a certain story told by a former President of the United States, that great American, Woodrow Wilson.

We all recall that this afternoon the Senator from Texas made a so-called explanation of his amendment. At the end of the remarks of the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] rose and made a 15- or 20-minute speech. At the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Maryland the Senator from Texas said, "The Senator from Maryland is absolutely correct, and I thank the Senator for his explanation."

Later, when the Senator from Maryland took nearly an hour in his own time to explain his conception of the amendment of the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Texas repudiated it, but when the Senator from Maryland first rose and injected his explanation of the amendment of the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Texas said, "The Senator from Maryland is eminently correct, and I thank the Senator."

Whereupon the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], my dear friend, rose and beat his breast, tore his hair, and screamed for nearly an hour in the time of the Senator from Texas, enunciating an essentially different theory of the amendment of the Senator from Texas than that which had been expounded by the Senator from Maryland.

The Senator from Washington reduced me to tears, as he always does when he reaches the heights of oratory. I am always sensible to the fiery eloquence of the Senator from Washington. His eloquence is always fiery. As I have said, he reduced me to tears, as he did nearly every other Senator. However, his theory was essentially different from that which had been expounded by the Senator from Maryland. At the conclusion of his remarks, the Senator from Texas said:

> I thank the Senator from Washington. He has completely explained and expounded my theory of the amendment, and I thank him for his eloquence.

Then the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] rose. He had a different theory, which he expounded at some length, with great vehemence and very ably. If I had not heard the other explanations which had been made, as well as the explanation of the Senator from Texas himself, I might have arrived at some conclusion as to what was the purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The Senator from Utah proposed an entirely different theory in explanation of the amendment of the Senator from Texas, and after he had concluded the Senator from Texas rose and said:

> I thank the Senator very sincerely. He has completely and adequately explained my amendment.

Then the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] stuck his oar in and gave an entirely different explanation than any which had theretofore been made. Various other Senators, including the Senator who now occupies the chair [Mr. HATCH], made explanations. The Senator from Texas thanked each one, and said. "That was a complete and adequate explanation of my amendment."

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall yield in a moment.

Mr. President, that would have been all right if the Senator from Maryland had not insisted on further expounding his theory of the amendment of the Senator from Texas. When he put the Senator from Texas on the stand as a witness in his own behalf, the Senator from Texas repudiated the explanation of the Senator from Maryland, saying that he did not understand the amendment in the same way as did the Senator from Texas.

I am now glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The only one of his colleagues the Senator left out was the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who explained the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There were so many witnesses, so many testifying, the Senator from Texas agreeing with so many, that I may have lost track of one or two, perhaps three or four, in the course of the remarks.

What I started out to say was——

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I believe the Senator from Arizona was in on it, too. I did not mean to leave him out. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCFARLAND. I merely desire to remind the Senator from Missouri that we are talking about the Ruml plan.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; we are now talking about a plan which cannot be named.

Mr. MCFARLAND. But we are "rumbling" a great deal, anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; we are talking about the plan which was introduced, at least, by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL], but the Senator from Maryland, the Senator from Arizona himself, the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Louisiana, and several other Senators have had a say in putting their own construction on the amendment, and no one has yet been able to tell the Senate exactly what it means.

Mr. President, as I have said, I do not desire to detain the Senate from a vote on the amendment, but I do wish to say that the debate on it reminds me of only one thing I have ever heard about in my life, and that is a famous story told by that great American, Woodrow Wilson, concerning a fellow who went to see his "gal" and stayed kind of late. He finally came out and mounted several horses and rode off in all directions. [Laughter.] So the present status of the O'Daniel amendment is that its proponents have mounted a number of different horses and ridden off in a number of different directions. Therefore, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Ferguson	Nye
Austin	George	O'Daniel
Bailey	Gerry	Overton
Ball	Gillette	Radcliffe
Bankhead	Green	Reed
Barbour	Guffey	Revercomb
Bilbo	Gurney	Robertson

Connally	Maybank	Wheeler
Danaher	Mead	Wherry
Davis	Millikin	White
Eastland	Moore	Wiley
Ellender	Murdock

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] to the committee amendment, as amended. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). Referring again to my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote, and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent conducting hearings in the West on behalf of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. WALLGREN] are out of the city conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate National Defense.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is absent on official business for the Special Committee To Study and Survey Problems of Small Business Enterprises. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is detained on important public business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. MCNARY. The junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] was called from the Chamber on official business. He has a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. If the Senator from Idaho were present he would vote "nay." I am not advised how the Senator from Florida would vote if present.

I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. Both of these Senators are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—29

Bone	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Caraway	La Follette	Scrugham

So Mr. O'DANIEL's amendments to the committee amendment, as amended, were rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Georgia wishes to offer a perfecting amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I have one other amendment to offer, Mr. President. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 100, after the period in line 20, it is proposed to insert "That portion of the compensation which is received or accrued in the taxable year 1942 (if the tax for such year is less than that for the taxable year 1943), or in the taxable year 1943 (if the tax for such year is equal to or less than that for the taxable year 1942), and which under section 107 of the Internal Revenue Code is, for the purposes of that section, attributed to the base year, shall for the purposes of this subsection be excluded in computing the surtax net income for the taxable year 1942 or 1943, as the case may be, and be included in computing the surtax net income for the base year."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not think there can be any valid objection to the amendment from the standpoint of equity. All the amendment means is that, under section 107 of the Internal Revenue Code, a taxpayer—for instance, an author who has worked for a number of years, more than 3, 36 months or more—in the production of a particular work, and who receives in 1 year more than 80 percent of the compensation for that work, may spread or prorate the compensation over the period of time in which the actual creative work was in progress—in other words, the time when the bonus or royalty or fee or what not was being earned.

All the amendment means is simply that with respect to the second windfall provision if an unusually large fee or compensation has been received by a person who has spread the work represented by the fee over a period of 3 years or more, in determining his base year income, plus $10,000 which is provided under the second windfall provision, it shall be taken into account if such income is attributable to a base year, for the purpose of increasing the base or normal year's income.

That is all the amendment would do, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Would the amendment apply to extra earnings, all of which were earned and accrued during the year 1942?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; only if the period in which they were earned went back into 1938, 1939, or 1940, and only if the work extended over a period of at least 3 years or more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment to the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am not going to make a speech, a statement which ought to draw some applause. [Loughter.] The amendment I have offered is what is known as the House Ways and Means Committee bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The one reported on what date?

Mr. CONNALLY. Reported on April 30, let me say to the Senator from Missouri, if that date has not yet permeated his intellect. I hammered it into it some time earlier in the day. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am always glad to accept the Senator's designation of the bill on which we are asked to vote. However, I think he should always specify the date—either January 5, February 15, April 15, or April 30—the various dates of the House Ways and Means Committee bill and the Doughton bill; because there are various versions, and we should be able to tell which one is meant.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is right; the Ruml plan shot it in the pants so often that every time it scratched it had to get a new place to scratch. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, my plan is the current-payments plan, the same as is the Finance Committee plan or the Ruml plan. My plan provides for withholding at the source, the same as does the Finance Committee plan and the Ruml plan. Under my plan, people who want to withhold can withhold, and can do so on the basis of the same rates of exemption which applied for 1941. My plan provides for a 3-year period for payment of the tax.

However, my plan would forgive only $4,500,000,000, instead of the $9,000,000,000 which would be forgiven under the Ruml plan. The forgiveness would be distributed more fairly under my plan than under any of the other plans of which I am aware, because under my plan all the forgiveness would not be given to the large taxpayers.

For instance, under my plan a man with an income of $1,000,000 would get a rebate of $121,000. Under the House plan he would get a rebate of $189,000; under the plan of the Senator from Georgia he would get a rebate of $624,000; and under the Ruml plan he would get a rebate of $854,000.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up any more of the Senate's time, and I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment. The amendment has been printed in the RECORD earlier in today's proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to the committee amendment, as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. If the Senator from Kentucky were present he would vote "yea." I transfer my vote to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS], and will vote. I vote "nay." If the Senator from Indiana were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has asked me to state that on the amendment he is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES]. If the Senator from Virginia were present, he would vote "yea"; and if the Senator from New Jersey were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is absent conducting hearings in the West on behalf of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. WALLGREN] are out of the city conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is absent on official business for the Special Committee to Study and Survey Problems of Small Business Enterprises. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is detained on important public business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Florida would vote "nay," and the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Virginia would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nevada would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, referring to my previous announcement, if the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] were present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 50, as follows:

So Mr. CONNALLY's amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I assume that we have now reached the stage of voting on the substitution of the Senate committee plan for the bill as it passed the House. Unless Senators wish to present other amendments, I should like to go directly to that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 88, at the beginning of line 17, it is proposed to strike out through line 14, on page 104, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 5. Current payment of basic tax not withheld at source.

(a) In general: The Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out sections 58, 59, and 60, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 58. Declaration of estimated basic tax by individuals.

"(a) Requirement of declaration: Every individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien subject to withholding under section 143 (b)) shall, at the time during the taxable year prescribed in subsection (d), make a declaration of his estimated basic tax for the taxable year if his gross income from sources other than wages (as defined in section 1621)—

"(1) in case such individual is single or married but not living with husband or wife; can reasonably be expected to exceed $100 for the taxable year and his gross income to be such as will require the making of a return for the taxable year under section 51; or did exceed $100 for the preceding taxable year and such individual either was required to make a return under section 51 for such preceding taxable year or would have been so required if he had been single during the whole of such preceding taxable year; or

"(2) in case such individual is married and living with husband or wife; can when added to the gross income which can reasonably be expected to be received by husband or wife from such sources, reasonably be expected to exceed $100 for the taxable year and the aggregate gross income of such husband and wife can reasonably be expected to be such as will require the making of a return under section 51; or did, when added to the gross income of such husband or wife from such sources for the preceding taxable year, exceed $100 for such preceding taxable year and such individual would have been required to make a return under section 51 for such preceding taxable year if he had been married and living with husband or wife during the whole of such preceding taxable year.

"(b) Contents of declaration: In the declaration required under subsection (a) the individual shall state—

"(1) the amount by which his estimated net income for the taxable year exceeds the greater of the following:

"(A) the amount of his estimated wages as defined in section 1621, the withheld tax on which is allowable as a credit for such taxable year under sections 35 and 466 (e);

"(B) the amount of his estimated aggregate amount of the credits for the taxable year allowable under section 25 (b);

"(2) the amount equal to 20 percent of the amount determined under paragraph (1), which for the purpose of this chapter shall be held and considered to be the estimated basic tax for the taxable year."

The declaration shall also contain such other information for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this chapter as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe, and shall contain or be verified by a written statement that it is made under the penalties of perjury.

"(c) Joint declaration by husband and wife: In the case of a husband and wife living together, a single declaration under this section may be made by them jointly, in which case the liability with respect to the estimated basic tax shall be joint and several. No joint declaration may be made if either the husband or wife is a nonresident alien. If a joint declaration is made but a joint return is not made for the taxable year, the estimated basic tax for such year may be treated as the estimated basic tax of either the husband or the wife, or may be divided between them.

"(d) Time and place for filing: The declaration required under subsection (a) shall be filed on or before the 15th day of the third month of the taxable year, except that if the requirements of subsection (a) are first met after such date, the declaration shall be filed on or before the 15th day of the last month of the quarter of the taxable year in which such requirements are first met. An individual may make amendments or revisions of a declaration filed under this subsection, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. If so made, such amendments or revisions shall be filed on or before the 15th day of any quarter of the taxable year subsequent to that in which the declaration was filed and in which no previous amendments or revisions have been made or filed. Declarations and amendments and revisions thereof shall be filed with the collector specified in section 53 (b) (1).

"(e) Extension of time: The Commissioner may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing declarations, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe with the approval of the Secretary. Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than 6 months.

"(f) Persons under disability: If the taxpayer is unable to make his own declaration, the declaration shall be made by a duly authorized agent or by the guardian or other person charged with the care of the person or property of such taxpayer.

"(g) Signature presumed correct: The fact that an individual's name is signed to a filed declaration shall be prima facie evidence for all purposes that the declaration was actually signed by him.

"SEC. 59. Payment of estimated basic tax.

"(a) In general: The estimated basic tax shall be paid in four equal installments except that

"(1) if the declaration is filed (otherwise than pursuant to an extension of time) after the fifteenth day of the third month of the taxable year, the estimated basic tax shall be paid in equal installments the number of which is equal to the number of quarters remaining in the taxable year (including the quarter in which the declaration is filed); and

"(2) if any amendment or revision of a declaration is filed, the remaining installments shall be ratably increased or decreased, as the case may be, to reflect the increase or decrease, as the case may be, in the estimated basic tax by reason of such amendment or revision; and

"(3) at the election of the individual, any installment of the estimated basic tax may be paid prior to the date prescribed for its payment.

Payment of the estimated basic tax shall be considered payment on account of the tax for the taxable year.

"(b) Assessment: The estimated basic tax shall be assessed only to the extent paid.

"SEC. 60. Special rules for application of sections 58 and 59.

"(a) Farmers: In the case of an individual whose estimated gross income from farming for the taxable year is at least 50 percent of the total estimated gross income from all sources for the taxable year, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 58 (d), the declaration for the taxable year may be made at any time on or before the fifteenth day of the last month of the taxable year.

"(b) Application to short taxable years: The application of sections 58, 59, and 294 (a) (3), (4), and (5) to taxable years of less than 12 months shall be as prescribed in regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

"(c) Application to taxable years beginning in 1943: If the taxable year is the calendar year 1943, the 15th day of September 1943 shall be substituted for the 15th day of March for the purposes of section 58 (d). If the taxable year begins in 1943 after January 1, the date which shall be substituted for the 15th day of the third month of the taxable year for the purposes of section 58 (d) shall be prescribed by regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary."

(b) Additions to tax: Section 294 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to additions to tax in case of nonpayment) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(3) Failure to file declaration of estimated basic tax: In the case of a failure to make and file a declaration of estimated basic tax within the time prescribed, there shall be added to the tax $10 or an amount equal to 10 percent of the tax, whichever is the greater.

"(4) Failure to pay installment of estimated basic tax: In the case of the failure to pay an installment of the estimated basic tax within the time prescribed, there shall be added to the tax $2.50 or 2½ percent of the tax, whichever is the greater, for each installment with respect to which such failure occurs.

"(5) Substantial underestimate of estimated basic tax: If 16 percent in the case of individuals other than farmers exercising an election under section 60 (a), or 13⅓ percent in the case of such farmers, of the net income in excess of the amount of wages as defined in section 1621 (the withheld tax on which is allowable as a credit under sections 35 and 466 (e)), or the amount of the credits against net income allowable under section 25 (b), whichever is the greater, exceeds the estimated basic tax, there shall be added to the tax an amount equal to 6 percent of such excess."

(c) Penalties: Section 145 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to criminal penalties) is amended (1) by inserting after "return" wherever appearing therein the words "or declaration", and (2) by inserting before "tax" wherever appearing therein the words "estimated basic tax or".

(d) Payment of tax: Section 56 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Installment payments.—

"(1) Corporations, estates and trusts, etc.: In the case of (A) a corporation, (B) a trust, (C) an estate, or (D) a nonresident alien subject to withholding under section 143 (b), the taxpayer may elect to pay the tax in four equal installments, in which event the first installment shall be paid on the date prescribed for the payment of the tax by the taxpayer, the second installment shall be paid on the 15th day of the third month, the third installment on the 15th day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on the 15th day of the ninth month after such date.

"(2) Other individuals: In the case of all other individuals, the taxpayer may elect to pay the tax in four installments in which event the first installment shall be an amount equal to the sum of the following:

"(A) the basic tax;

"(B) one-fourth of the amount by which the tax imposed by this chapter computed without regard to the credit provided in section 466 (e) exceeds the basic tax.

The amount of the first installment as computed hereunder shall be reduced by the sum of the amount of the credit allowable under sections 35 and 466 (e) plus the amount of estimated basic tax paid during the taxable year and in case such sum is equal to or in excess of the amount of the first installment as computed hereunder, but is less than the tax imposed by this chapter (computed without regard to the credit allowable under sections 35 and 466 (e)) such sum shall constitute the amount of the first installment. The amount of an installment other than such first installment shall be one-third of the difference between the tax imposed (computed without regard to the credit allowable under sections 35 and 466 (e) and the amount of such first installment. The first installment shall be paid on the date prescribed for the payment of the tax by the taxpayer, and the balance of the tax shall be paid in three equal installments, the second installment on the 15th day of the third month, the third installment on the 15th day of the sixth month, and the fourth installment on the 15th day of the ninth month, after such date.

"(3) Definition of basic tax: For the purposes of paragraph (2) of this subsection the term 'basic tax' means—

"(A) in the case of a taxpayer making a return under Supplement T, the sum of (i) the tax imposed under section 400, (ii) the tax imposed under section 450 (adjusted for the credit allowable under section 453) and (iii) any additions to the tax for which the taxpayer is liable under the provisions of section 294 (a) (3), (4), and (5).

"(B) in the case of all other taxpayers to which paragraph (2) of this subsection is applicable, the sum of (i) the normal tax imposed under section 11, (ii) an amount equal to a percentage of the surtax net income at the first bracket rate of surtax, (iii) the tax imposed under section 450 (adjusted for the credit allowable under section 453), and (iv) any additions to the tax for which the taxpayer is liable under the provisions of section 294 (a) (3), (4), and (5).

If any installment is not paid on or before the date fixed for its payment, the whole amount of the tax unpaid is to be paid upon notice and demand from the collector."

(e) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1942.

SEC. 6. Relief from double payments in 1943.

(a) Effective date: This section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning in 1942 but shall not take effect until September 1, 1943.

(b) In general: In the case of an individual who makes a return for a taxable year beginning in 1942, the tax imposed under chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code shall, in lieu of that otherwise imposed, be the tax computed without regard to this section less an amount equal to the sum of the normal tax plus 13 percent of the surtax net income for such year.

(c) Supplement T taxpayers: In the case of an individual who makes a return for the calendar year 1942 under Supplement T, the liability for the tax imposed under section 400 of the Internal Revenue Code for such year is canceled and discharged.

(d) Short taxable years: The provisions of this section shall not apply to any taxable year which consists of a period of less than 12 months.

(e) Reduction where credit for foreign tax: In computing the amount by which the tax is reduced under subsection (b) the tax imposed under chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code shall be the tax imposed under said chapter prior to its diminution by credit available to the taxpayer under sections 31 and 131 of such chapter. In computing the net tax liability for any such taxable year the amount of such credit shall be computed after taking into account the reduction in tax effected by this section.

(f) Individuals excluded: The provisions of this section shall not apply to (A) an estate, (B) a trust, (C) a nonresident alien subject to withholding under section 143 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code.

(g) Refund or credit of reduction in tax: The amount by which the tax is reduced under subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall, if the taxpayer elects to pay the tax installments, be prorated to the four installments of such tax. The amount so prorated to the installments of the tax falling due after September 1, 1943, shall be applied in reduction of each such installment.

(h) Treatment of payments prior to September 1, 1943, of amounts by which 1942 tax reduced: Any payment (other than interest and additions to the tax) made prior to September 1, 1943 (or on or after such date pursuant to any extension of time granted by the Commissioner before such date), of an amount by which the tax imposed under chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code is reduced under subsection (b) or (c) of this section for a taxable year beginning in 1942 shall be held and considered as a payment on account of the estimated basic tax for the taxable year beginning in 1943. In the case of any extension of time for the payment of such tax granted by the Commission prior to September 1, 1943, payment of the portion thereof which, if such extension had not been granted, would have been payable under section 56 (b) prior to September 1, 1943, shall be paid notwithstanding subsections (b) or (c) of this section.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is intended to bring the House bill into line with the Senate committee amendment on the two subjects covered by the amendment, namely, relief from doubled payments and current payment for basic taxes not paid at the source. The author of the bill in the House thought that the Senate committee provision on these two subjects was preferable to the House bill, and in order to have the issue presented squarely on the subject of double payments, whether they should be made in part or entirely, and on the subject of current payments of basic taxes not paid at the source, this amendment is proposed, substituting for sections 4 and 5 of the House bill sections 5 and 6 of the Senate committee bill.

In brief, Mr. President, this is what is known as the Robertson bill, which, as we all know, passed the House and is the basis of the pending measure.

At this late hour I shall not enter upon a detailed discussion of the provisions of that bill. I think it is unfortunate that this issue has not had more attention, and has not been more fully considered by this body before reaching the stage of a final vote.

Mr. President, as we all know, there are two fundamental subjects in question. One of them is the importance of the collection of the tax at its source—the pay-as-you-go or pay-as-you-earn plan—at the same time bringing as many taxpayers as possible into a position of currency, so that they will not be liable for obligations carried over to make their payments current. In order to save time, I wish to take the liberty of reading a rather brief statement——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, before the Senator does so, will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I understand the purpose of the Senator's amendment, the Senator is proposing, in essence, the House bill, the so-called Robertson bill—not the Ways and Means Committee bill in the House, but the bill finally passed by the House—as a substitute for the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the effect of it. The Senator understands that the House bill cannot be displaced without a vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand. The Senator will give me credit for understanding that the Senate committee amendment would have to be adopted to displace the House bill. However, if I understand what the Senator is proposing to do, as I see it, it is the somewhat redundant proposition of offering the House bill as a substitute for the Senate committee amendment to the House bill. If so, let me say that I welcome that issue, because we did not find a single member of the Finance Committee, Democrat or Republican——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to allow me to make my statement, rather than to make an argument.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator can cut me off at any time he desires to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not wish to cut the Senator off.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was about to say that not a single Senator on the Finance Committee ever raised his voice in favor of the bill to which the Senator refers, and I am glad to have the issue raised here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That raises the issue as to whether we will pass the measure reported by the Senate committee, which is known generally as the Ruml plan, or whether we will stand by the bill which was passed by the House, with the changes in the House bill which I have indicated by my amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand, the Senator from Alabama is not doing exactly what I gained the impression the Senator from Missouri thought he was doing. He is not trying to obtain a preliminary vote on the House bill as it passed the House, as against the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What the Senator is trying to do, if I correctly understand, is to take the so-called improvements which the Senate committee has made in the withholding features of the House bill and embody the fundamental principle of the House bill in connection with those improved withholding features. Is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly correct. With that preliminary statement, we may understand that the vote about to be taken is on a choice between two programs because the amendment proposes to substitute fundamentals not contained in the Senate committee bill with respect to the amount to be paid, the method of payment, as well as the time of collection.

Mr. President, I am not an expert, as all Senators know, nor a technician on tax questions, but one of the authors of the bill made a statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 3, 1943, a portion of which, merely for explanation of the provisions of the bill, I read:

> Under the plan the gentleman from Rhode Island, Representative FORAND, will offer tomorrow—

That is the one now pending before us—

> 90 percent of the taxpayers are put on a completely current basis and approximately 99 percent are put in a position of at least 75 percent currency. This degree of currency is achieved without any doubling up of tax payments or any interruption of the flow of tax money into the Treasury. Moreover, the great inequities resulting from the complete forgiveness of a year's tax liability contemplated in the Ruml-Carlson bill are avoided. Tax forgiveness under H. R. 2577 operates equitably to confer on all taxpayers an equal amount of tax reduction for 1942 in proportion to their respective net incomes, whereas the eventual benefit which would result from the tax forgiveness under the Ruml-Carlson bill would be heavily weighted in favor of persons with large incomes.

The statement continues:

> The plan of H. R. 2577 is, briefly, as follows: Individual income tax liability would be divided into two parts, the great bulk payable currently, and the balance payable in the year following the receipt of income. The amount paid currently, whether it be by withholding and collection at the source or by quarterly payments of estimated liability on the basis of an annual declaration, would approximate the basic tax for which all taxpayers are liable, namely, the 6 percent normal tax, plus the surtax at the first bracket rate of 13 percent, and the net Victory-tax liability. The balance of the tax liability not covered by the current collection at the source or quarterly payments would be payable as under existing law in the year following the receipt of income. In order to achieve this currency the basic tax on 1942 individual income would be canceled. This would avoid doubling up of payments, since the portion of tax liability canceled for 1942 is comparable to that part of the 1943 tax which is collected currently. That part of the first two 1943 quarterly payments—on 1942 incomes corresponding to the basic tax for that year—would be considered a payment with respect to 1943 liabilities.

He then proceeds to state the advantages of the plan which, to my mind, are sound, but I shall not detain the Senate longer by reading them. I recognize that there is very little interest in those particular points. Senators have made up their minds.

Mr. President, it is evident—and it has been so stated on both sides of the Chamber, and we are here at this late hour because of that general understanding—that unless there be great speed in getting the pending bill to the White House, or whatever bill may be passed and approved, we may as well abandon the whole effort. It will be too late, as stated by the senior Senator from Michigan, and I think by the senior Senator from Georgia. At least, we have been so assured on the highest authority, and we all believe it to be true. We are therefore gladly waiting here now to complete action upon the bill.

What is the situation from the realistic standpoint? The Ruml plan was before the House on two occasions. It was defeated both times. The last time it was defeated by a close vote, but it was defeated. There will be conferees on the House side. No one is authorized to speak for them, but we are familiar with the public declarations which have been made by those who will be conferees. We know of his hostile attitude from many expressions of the great chairman of the committee who will be the head of the House conferees. In the attitude he is likely to assume on the subject, he has the endorsement and support of the Members of the House who took action upon the bill which is now pending before the Senate.

As realistic, practical, and sensible men should we expect any quick action which will bring about an agreement in the House upon the bill, for a complete and satisfactory abatement of a year's tax? If the conferees of the House do not accede to the Senate's attitude, is there any reason to believe that a vote in the House would force them to vote against the previous action of the House on the subject?

On the other hand, it is likely that the Senate conferees will not readily recede from the position taken by the Senate if it shall vote for 100-percent abatement. Then where shall we stand? Everyone recognizes the importance of having a pay-as-you-go law.

According to the Treasury Department, if my amendment shall be agreed to by the House conferees, the Government would receive in 1943 the same amount of money it would receive under the present law. So there would be no reduction in the income of the Treasury. The adoption of my amendment would result in placing 90 percent of all taxpayers upon a current basis; 6 percent would be placed almost on a current basis. Practically 96 percent would be placed upon the pay-as-you-go basis. Here is a compromise that was worked out on the House side after not only weeks, but months of serious and earnest effort by the members of the Ways and Means Committee and by the votes in the House itself upon the various phases of pay-as-you-go legislation.

The House would not vote for the complete abatement of a year's tax; it would not vote for the committee bill presented by the Ways and Means Committee, which provided for some abatement, but not nearly so much as the other bill. So this is the only bill on which a majority vote in the House could be secured, after literally months of trial and effort, and then it was passed by a vote of 313 to 85. That is the support the bill I am now advocating finally had in the House, after various other bills had been presented and rejected.

Is it important enough to get on a pay-as-you-go basis to make some concessions in the amount to be abated? Most of us, certainly a majority in the Senate, believe that there should be substantial abatement. There are strong reasons for it. The people were not advised in time that this program was going to be imposed upon already existing taxes to enable them to adjust their finances and adjust their savings accounts accordingly. Millions of voters who never before paid taxes were brought under the operation of the tax. So there are equitable reasons, in the interest of the taxpayers, for not forcing double payments upon them. There are economic reasons why it should not be done. So I stand firmly for the idea that there should be substantial abatement if we are to impose additional burdens and bring about the payment of taxes now in addition to the taxes already levied for 1942.

What amount should it be? The Ruml advocates say 100 percent. The Senator from Texas, with a large support behind him, says not a dime. All agree we should get on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Should we stand in stubbornness, should we take a position that this desirable result must be accomplished in the way that each individual stands for or shall not be accomplished at all?

I heard the views expressed by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], for whom I have the greatest respect. He said that he preferred no abatement or complete abatement, and was not entirely satisfied as between them. He is a man of ability, a member of the committee, a man of sincerity and of good judgment. If Members of the Senate occupy a position of "all or none" in the matter of abatement, in order to bring about a pay-as-you-go system, how can we expect to accomplish real legislation on the subject? I have pointed out the difficulty which would come in the conference on the bill, if it should get to conference. The political issue has also been raised in the debate. We heard the distinguished Senator from Washington and the distinguished Senator from Texas, and perhaps others—whether they said it or not, we know they have thought it—raise the question as to what the people were going to do in the next election to those who voted for the Ruml program, with its complete abatement.

We have not heard the matter made a political issue on the other side of the aisle, but we have seen Senators on that side vote practically as a unit for the Ruml plan. We have seen the Republicans in the House vote practically as a unit for the Ruml plan. I am not criticizing them for it. I believe in responsible party Government, and if the Republican Party desire to take a position, as they have evidently done in this matter, without declaring it, and if they feel that is the right position for them to take, and that is a philosophy which is consistent with their political principles, I have no criticism of them for taking the position; but they have taken it, and no one will deny it. We have seen all sorts of publications about the Republican leadership in the House and elsewhere calling upon the Republican Party to acquiesce in the Ruml plan. They have that right.

Who knows what is going to happen after we send the Ruml plan to the White House? I have no right to speak for the President, and I have heard nothing from him or from any person who has any right to speak for him on the Ruml plan, but it has been intimated and stated in various quarters that if the Ruml plan went to the President he was likely to veto it. I do not know whether he would or not. We know the possibility of such action on his part. When he reads or hears of the speeches made here, about those who have made millions getting away without paying any tax, I do not know what he will do. If he vetoes the bill, where will we stand with reference to getting on a pay-as-you-go basis? Every sensible man knows the President's veto could not be overridden. Not so long ago I tried to have overriden a veto having to do with another subject, and found it was not so easy to accomplish. But certainly with the votes in the House about evenly divided, and with not two-thirds of the Members of this body supporting the Ruml plan, could anyone think, with any reasonable expectations, that a veto could be overridden?

Then the issue would go into the election. That result may be desired by our friends across the aisle, I do not know. There are some able men, some smart men, some fine politicians, over there, and they may seek such an issue on which to go to the country. But I think it is unhappy and unfortunate to have a political party division on a fundamental tax question, on the principles of which we are in complete accord. The difference is as to the amount of abatement to the different taxpayers in order to bring about the desired result.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator states that our friends across the aisle are in favor of the Ruml plan, and so far have voted practically as a unit on various amendments, with a view to adopting the Ruml plan.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has not the Senator been so impressed?

Mr. OVERTON. I have been, and I am impressed by another fact which I should like to call to the attention of the Senator. There was an amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] which I supported, and which I think the Senator from Alabama supported.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did.

Mr. OVERTON. That amendment removed all objectionable features; that is, under the amendment there would be no double taxation, and there would be no abatement. It incorporated a feature which all agreed upon——

Mr. BANKHEAD. It would treat all alike.

Mr. OVERTON. It provided for collection at the source or withholding taxes. That amendment was voted down. Does not the Senator think it is just as well for us to surrender now to the Republican Party, as we are probably going to do in 1944 anyway?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; we will not surrender.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not know about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; we will not surrender, but we certainly have a political issue here, according to the declarations of other people.

I regret that sort of an issue. It has been raised, first, by declaration, and will be completed by vote when we finish our action in the Senate. It may be completed further if the Senate conferees shall ever succeed in pushing the bill past the House conferees, and having it sent to the White House. But, Mr. President, I should like to know how any Senator who understands the true situation thinks that can be done? The House was divided on the question by a very close vote. A majority of the Members of the House have always voted against the Ruml plan. The House bill before us was adopted by a vote of 333 to 85. I should like to know what Senator really thinks the Senate conferees will succeed in wresting a conference report from the House conferees which carries with it the Ruml plan, and will even get it started to the White House? No, Mr. President; this question will again be tied up in conference.

I wanted to expedite this proposed legislation as much as possible, but I have agreed to expedition with the full knowledge that the haste is a false haste, that, in my opinion, the Senate conferees are not going to obtain a favorable report for their plan from the House conferees during this week.

Mr. President, I am not seeking to tie up the conferees. I am not bitterly opposed to the large abatement contained in the so-called Ruml bill, though I think it goes entirely too far, but I have been in favor of a substantial abatement all the way through from beginning to end. I favored this plan 6 or 8 weeks ago. I declared for it at a luncheon meeting of the Alabama delegation 6 or 8 weeks ago. So I am taking no new position with respect to the matter. I have been bewildered, as other Senators have been, by this debate. I have been rather confused and made uncertain. If it were not for the fact that the Ruml plan was so completely rejected by the House, and that a majority of the conferees who will act on the part of the House will be supported by a majority of the House Members who are bitterly opposed to that plan, it is possible I would not have pursued the subject to the extent I am now pressing it. But I beg of the Senate to act on this question without political feeling. I beg of the Members of the Senate, who realize the importance of establishing a pay-as-you-earn basis, to give up personal and individual views to the extent of working out a compromise such as the House worked out and adopted by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. President, if Senators believe they can secure a favorable conference report and get the measure signed, or if through pride of opinion or by reason of political party allegiance, they persist in going ahead, as all indications show they are determined to do, then there is of course no recourse, unless the issue shall go to the American people.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks tables 3 and 4 taken from Representative ROBERTSON'S address to the House, which appear on page 3851 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, on my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to argue the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama. I rise to thank him for presenting the issue in this shape, because it enables me to record the vote which I am under my conscience compelled to record. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it is really the bill as passed by the House, perfected or modified to incorporate all the changes which were made by the Senate Finance Committee in connection with the withholding provisions and soldier and sailor relief. That is my understanding.

Mr. President, the bill as passed by the House does what I tried so earnestly to prevent in the Senate. It forgives 76 percent or nearly 77 percent of the aggregate tax liability of individual income-tax payers. Unfortunately, it forgives some 40,000,000 taxpayers wholly, and it leaves some 4,000,000 or more under the old system with respect to their liability above the first bracket, so that the 4,000,000 taxpayers who pay from 60 to 65 percent of the total income taxes paid by all individuals in the United States annually will have to make out two returns; they will be partly on a past year, partly on a current year basis, but they will lack being upon a current basis.

The House bill starts at the bottom and makes taxpayers up to married men with four children who have incomes of $4,600 a year entirely current. It forgives 100 percent of those below that figure. It leaves an upper bracket liability for the past year upon all the taxpayers of the country who earn more than that amount.

Not only that, Mr. President, but all the 4,000,000 taxpayers who pay 60 to 65 percent of the total income taxes of this country will be required to file a return for the preceding year, and make adjustments therein of their basic liability for that year, and also they will be required to estimate their income for the current year in order to pay the basic rate for the current year. It is a complicated and, I think, a most unjust provision.

Mr. President, when I presented my amendment, which I sincerely regret was not accepted by the Senate, I tried to say that I was willing to do what the House had done in forgiving 75 percent, but to apply the forgiveness equally among all taxpayers, and not to engage in a preferential treatment of one group as against another group of taxpayers. If there is any reason on earth for making 40,000,000 American taxpayers current by forgiving them 100 percent, that same reason will compel any fair-minded man to say that the other 4,000,000 American taxpayers should likewise be made current by an equality of treatment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator recognizes, I am sure, that the House bill abates uniformly to every taxpayer the same tax, that is 6 percent normal tax and 13 percent surtax.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, I realize that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does that all the way up.

Mr. GEORGE. It begins at the bottom and——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Goes all the way up.

Mr. GEORGE. No. It does not go very far. It does exactly what I suggested. It forgives 100 percent in the case of 40,000,000 taxpayers, and it forgives in reducing percentages to the 4,000,000 taxpayers who pay 60 percent of the total income taxes of the country.

No principle of equity of tax treatment is involved in the amendment because our taxes are levied on a progressive system and on a progressively ascending and rapidly ascending scale. If we are to cut off anything, the cut should be made through all the brackets, so as to leave all on a basis of equality.

More than that, Mr. President, referring to the much-controverted questions of forgiveness and of how the Treasury is to be treated, the proposal would cancel within $900,000,000 of the amount which would be canceled by the Senate Finance Committee plan—by the Ruml plan, if you please, with the two windfall provisions; and for the next fiscal year it would bring into the Treasury $1,989,000,000 less than would the Ruml plan, as embraced in the Senate Finance Committee proposal.

Mr. President, the Government can be unjust, through discrimination in conferring benefits upon its citizens, as well as through its decision to impose unequal burdens upon citizens. I do not believe in injustice, and I do not want to treat the American taxpayers in that way.

I am very happy that the Senator from Alabama has presented this issue in the way he has presented it, so that the question comes directly on the acceptance of the bill as it passed the House, modified to include amendments made by the Senate Finance Committee to the noncontroversial sections and provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, I believe that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I stated from memory that under the House bill the forgiveness would be 54 percent. My attention has been called to the fact that it would be 76 percent—not 100 percent, as in the Ruml plan, but 76 percent.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, yesterday when I addressed the Senate on the amendment offered by myself. I stated that I would not vote for the cancelation or abatement of any taxes. When the Connally substitute was voted upon by the Senate a short time ago I voted for the substitute because I felt it was the lesser of two evils. I propose to vote for the pending amendment because I feel that it is the lesser of two evils. If the pending amendment is agreed to—and I think that is very doubtful—I expect to vote "nay" when the vote is finally taken on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to the committee amendment, as amended. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Mr. President, again referring to my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I am advised that if the Senator from Kentucky were present he would vote "yea." I transfer my pair with him to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS], and will vote. I vote "nay." If the Senator from Indiana were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent conducting hearings in the West on behalf of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. WALLGREN] are out of the city conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is absent on official business for the Special Committee to Study and Survey Problems of Small Business Enterprises. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is detained on important public business.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada would vote "nay," and the Senator from Virginia would vote "yea."

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS]. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea," and the Senator from Florida would vote "nay."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to state that on this vote he is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES]. If the Senator from Virginia were present, he would vote "yea," and if the Senator from New Jersey were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—27

Bankhead	Hayden	Murdock
Bilbo	Hill	Russell
Caraway	Kilgore	Shipstead

So Mr. BANKHEAD'S amendment to the committee amendment, as amended, was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the question of adoption of the committee amendment simply raise the question over again on which we have just had a yea-and-nay vote? Should not the last roll call be on the bill, and not on the committee amendment? Are we not wasting time?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, we are not wasting time, because the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] modified his amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary inquiry is directed to the Chair.

The Chair will state to the Senator from Ohio that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was not identical with the House provision.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Referring again to my pair, I am advised that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] would vote "nay" if he were present. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] who, if present, would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when the name of Mr. THOMAS of Idaho was called). If the junior Senator from Idaho were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

So the bill H. R. 2570 was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) this act may be cited as the "Current Tax Payment Act of 1943."

(b) Meaning of terms used: Except as otherwise expressly provided, terms used in this act shall have the same meaning as when used in the Internal Revenue Code.

SEC. 2. Collection of tax at source on wages.

(a) In general: Chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to employment taxes) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subchapters:

"SUBCHAPTER D—COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX AT SOURCE ON WAGES

"SEC. 1621. Definitions.

"As used in this subchapter—

"(a) Wages: The term 'wages' means all remuneration (other than fees paid to a public official) for services performed by an employee for his employer, including the cash value of all remuneration paid in any medium other than cash; except that such term shall not include remuneration paid—

"(1) for services performed as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States, other than pensions and retired pay includible in gross income under chapter 1, or

"(2) for agricultural labor (as defined in section 1426 (h)), or

"(3) for domestic service in a private home, local college club, or local chapter of a college fraternity or sorority; or

"(4) for casual labor not in the course of the employer's trade or business; or

"(5) for services by a citizen or resident of the United States for a foreign government or for the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines; or

"(6) for services performed by a nonresident alien individual, other than a resident of a contiguous country who enters and leaves the United States at frequent intervals; or

"(7) for such services, performed by a nonresident alien individual who is a resident of a contiguous country and who enters and leaves the United States at frequent intervals, as may be designated by regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary; or

"(8) for services for an employer performed by a citizen or resident of the United States while outside the United States (as defined in section 3797 (a) (9)) if the major part of the services for such employer during the calendar year is to be performed outside the United States; or

"(9) for services performed as a minister of the gospel.

For the purpose of paragraph (8) services performed on or in connection with an American vessel (as defined in section 1426 (g)) under a contract of service which is entered into within the United States or during the performance of which the vessel touches at a port in the United States, or on or in connection with any vessel as an employee of the United States employed through the War Shipping Administration, shall not constitute services performed outside the United States.

"(b) Pay-roll period: The term 'pay-roll period' means a period for which a payment of wages is ordinarily made to the employee by his employer, and the term 'miscellaneous pay-roll period' means a pay-roll period other than a weekly, biweekly, semimonthly, monthly, quarterly, semiannual, or annual pay-roll period.

"(c) Employee: The term 'employee' includes an officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term 'employee' also includes an officer of a corporation.

"(d) Employer: The term 'employer' means the person for whom an individual performs or performed any service, of whatever nature, as the employee of such person, except that—

"(1) if the person for whom the individual performs or performed the services does not have control of the payment of the wages for such services, the term 'employer' (except for the purposes of subsection (a)) means the person having control of the payment of such wages; and

"(2) in the case of a person paying wages on behalf of a nonresident alien individual, foreign partnership, or foreign corporation, not engaged in trade or business within the United States, the term 'employer' (except for the purposes of subsection (a)) means such person.

"(e) Single person: The term 'single person' means a person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that such person is single, or is married and not living with husband or wife, and is not the head of a family.

"(f) Married person: The term 'married person' means a person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that he is married and living with husband or wife.

"(g) Married person claiming all of personal exemption for withholding: The term 'married person claiming all of personal exemption for withholding' means a married person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that for the purposes of this subchapter such person claims all of the personal exemption and that for the purposes of this subchapter his spouse is claiming none of the personal exemption.

"(h) Married person claiming half of personal exemption for withholding: The term 'married person claiming half of the personal exemption for withholding' means a married person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that for the purposes of this subchapter such person claims half of the personal exemption and that for the purposes of this subchapter his spouse is claiming not more than half of such exemption.

"(i) Married person claiming none of personal exemption for withholding: The term 'married person claiming none of the personal exemption for withholding' means a married person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) making no claim with respect to the personal exemption for the purposes of this subchapter.

"(j) Head of family: The term 'head of a family' means a person with respect to whom a withholding exemption certificate is in effect under section 1622 (h) stating that he is the head of a family.

"(k) Dependent: The term 'dependent' means a person included in a withholding exemption certificate in effect under section 1622 (h) as a person dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the employee and either under 18 years of age or incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

"SEC. 1622. Income tax collected at source.

"(a) Requirement of withholding: Every employer making payment of wages shall withhold and collect upon such wages a tax equal to the greater of the following:

"(1) 20 percent of the excess of each payment of such wages over the family status withholding exemption allowable under subsection (b) (1) (A), or

"(2) 3 percent of the excess of each payment of such wages over the Victory tax withholding exemption allowable under subsection (b) (1) (B).

"(b) Withholding exemption.—

"(1) In computing the tax required to be withheld under subsection (a), there shall be allowed as a withholding exemption with respect to the wages paid for each pay-roll period—

"(A) in computing the tax required to be withheld under subsection (a) (1), a family status withholding exemption determined in accordance with the following schedule:

"Family status withholding exemption

"Pay-roll period	Single person	Married person claiming whole of personal exemption for withholding or head of family	Married person claiming half of personal exemption for withholding	Married person claiming none of personal exemption for withholding	Each dependent, other than the first dependent in the case of the head of a family
Weekly	$12	$24	$12	0	$6

Daily or miscellaneous (per day of such period)	1.70	3.40	1.70	0	.85

"(B) in computing the tax required to be withheld under subsection (a) (2), a Victory tax withholding exemption determined in accordance with the following schedule:

"Pay-roll period:	Victory tax withholding exemption
Weekly	$12.00
Biweekly	24.00
Semimonthly	26.00
Monthly	52.00
Quarterly	156.00
Semiannual	312.00
Annual	624.00
Daily or miscellaneous (per day of such period)	1.70

"(2) If wages are paid with respect to a period which is not a pay-roll period, the withholding exemption allowable with respect to each payment of such wages shall be the exemption allowed for a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days in the period with respect to which such wages are paid.

"(3) In any case in which wages are paid by an employer without regard to any pay-roll period or other period, the withholding exemption allowable with respect to each payment of such wages shall be the exemption allowed for a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days (including Sundays and holidays) which have elapsed since the date of the last payment of such wages by such employer during the calendar year, or the date of commencement of employment with such employer during such year, or January 1 of such year, whichever is the later.

"(4) In any case in which the period, or the time described in paragraph (3), in respect of any wages is less than 1 week, the Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may authorize an employer, in computing the tax required to be withheld, to use the excess of the aggregate of the wages paid to the employee during the calendar week over the withholding exemption allowed by this subsection for a weekly pay-roll period.

"(5) In determining the amount to be withheld under this subsection, the wages may, at the election of the employer, be computed to the nearest dollar.

"(c) Wage bracket withholding.—

"(1) At the election of the employer with respect to any employee, the employee shall deduct and withhold upon the wages paid to such employee a tax determined in accordance with the following tables, which shall be in lieu of the tax required to be withheld under subsection (a):

If the pay-roll period with respect to an employee is weekly

If the number of dependents is in excess of the largest number of dependents shown, the amount of tax to be withheld shall be that applicable in the case of the largest number of dependents shown reduced by $0.15 for each dependent over the largest number shown, except that in no event shall the amount to be withheld be less than 3 per centum of the excess of the product of the median wage in the bracket in which the wages fall and the number of days in the period (or if the wages paid are $30 or over, of the excess of the wages) over the product of $1.70 and the number of days in the period, computed, in case such amount is not a multiple of $0.05 to the nearest multiple of $0.05.

"(2) If wages are paid with respect to a period which is not a pay-roll period, the amount to be withheld shall be that applicable in the case of a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days in the period with respect to which such wages are paid.

"(3) In any case in which wages are paid by an employer without regard to any pay-roll period or other period, the amount to be withheld shall be that applicable in the case of a miscellaneous pay-roll period containing a number of days equal to the number of days (including Sundays and holidays) which have elapsed since the date of the last payment of such wages by such employer during the calendar year, or the date of commencement of employment with such employer during such year, or January 1 of such year, whichever is the later.

"(4) In any case in which the period, or the time described in paragraph (3), in respect of any wages is less than 1 week, the Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may authorize an employer to determine the amount to be withheld under the tables applicable in the case of a weekly pay-roll period, in which case the aggregate of the wages paid to the employee during the calendar week shall be considered the weekly wages.

"(5) In determining the amount to be withheld under this subsection, the wages may, at the election of the employer, be computed to the nearest dollar.

"(d) Tax paid by recipient: If the employer, in violation of the provisions of this subchapter, fails to withhold and collect the tax under this subchapter, and thereafter the tax against which such tax may be credited is paid, the tax so required to be withheld and collected shall not be collected from the employer; but this subsection shall in no case relieve the employer from liability for any penalties or additions to the tax otherwise applicable in respect of such failure to withhold and collect.

"(e) Nondeductibility of tax in computing net income: The tax withheld and collected under this subchapter shall not be allowed as a deduction either to the employer or to the recipient of the income in computing net income for the purpose of any tax on income imposed by act of Congress.

"(f) Refunds or credits.—

"(1) Employers: Where there has been an overpayment of tax under this subchapter, refund or credit shall be made to the employer only to the extent that the amount of such overpayment was not withheld and collected under this subchapter by the employer.

"(2) Employees: For refund or credit in cases of excessive withholding, see section 322 (a).

"(g) Included and excluded wages: If the remuneration paid by an employer to an employee for services performed during one-half or more of any pay-roll period of not more than 31 consecutive days constitutes wages, all the remuneration paid by such employer to such employee for such period shall be deemed to be wages; but if the remuneration paid by an employer to an employee for services performed during more than one-half of any such pay-roll period does not constitute wages, then none of the remuneration paid by such employer to such employee for such period shall be deemed to be wages.

"(h) Withholding exemption certificates: Every employee receiving wages shall furnish his employer a signed withholding exemption certificate relating to his status for the purpose of computing the withholding exemption, or if the employer exercises his election under section 1622 (h) (relating to wage bracket withholding), for the purpose of computing the amount to be withheld under such subsection. In case of a change of status, a new certificate shall be furnished not later than 10 days after such change occurs. The certificate shall be in such form and contain such information as the Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary, by regulations prescribe. Such certificate—

"(1) If furnished after the date of commencement of employment with the employer, shall take effect with respect to the first payment of wages made on or after the first status determination date which occurs at least 30 days from the date on which such certificate is furnished to the employer, except that at the election of the employer such certificate may be made effective with respect to any previous payment of wages made on or after the date of the furnishing of such certificate. For the purposes of this paragraph the term 'status determination date' means January 1 and July 1 of each year.

"(2) If furnished on or before the date of commencement of employment with the employer, shall take effect as of the beginning of the first pay-roll period ending, or the first payment of wages made without regard to a pay-roll period, on or after the date on which such certificate is furnished to the employer.

A certificate which takes effect under this subsection shall continue in effect with respect to the employer until another such certificate furnished by the employee takes effect under this subsection. If no certificate is in effect under this subsection with respect to an employee, such employee shall be treated, for the purposes of the withholding exemption, or in case the employer exercises his election under section 1622 (c) (relating to wage bracket withholding), for the purpose of computing the amount to be withheld under such subsection, as a married person claiming none of the personal exemption for withholding.

"(i) Overlapping pay periods, and so forth: If a payment of wages is made to an employee by an employer—

"(1) with respect to a pay-roll period or other period, any part of which is included in a pay-roll period or other period with respect to which wages are also paid to such employee by such employer, or

"(2) without regard to any pay-roll period or other period, but on or prior to the expiration of a pay-roll period or other period with respect to which wages are also paid to such employee by such employer; or

"(3) with respect to a period beginning in one and ending in another calendar year,

the manner of withholding and the amount to be withheld under this subchapter shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary under which the withholding exemption allowed to an employee in any calendar year shall approximate the withholding exemption allowable with respect to an annual pay-roll period.

"(j) Withholding on basis of average wages: The Commissioner may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, authorize employers (1) to estimate the wages which will be paid to any employee in any quarter of the calendar year, (2) to determine the amount to be withheld and collected upon each payment of wages to such employee during such quarter as if the appropriate average of the wages so estimated constituted the actual wages paid, and (3) to withhold and collect upon any payment of wages to such employee during such quarter such amount as may be necessary to adjust the amount actually withheld and collected upon the wages of such employee during such quarter to the amount required to be withheld during such quarter without regard to this subsection.

"SEC. 1623. Liability for tax.

"The employer shall be liable for the payment of the tax required to be withheld and collected under this subchapter, and shall not be liable to any person for the amount of any such payment.

"SEC. 1624. Return and payment by governmental employer.

"If the employer is the United States, or a State, Territory, or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more o the foregoing, the return of the amount withheld and collected upon any wages may be made by any officer or employee of the United States, or of such State, Territory, or political subdivision, or of the District of Columbia, or of such agency or instrumentality, as the case may be, having control of the payment of such wages, or appropriately designated for that purpose.

"SEC. 1625. Receipts.

"(a) Requirement: Every employer required to withhold and collect a tax in respect of the wages of an employee shall furnish to each such employee in respect of his employment during the calendar year, on or before January 31 of the succeeding year, or, if his employment is terminated before the close of such calendar year, on the day on which the last payment of wages is made, a written statement showing the wages paid by the employer to such employee during such calendar year, and the amount of the tax withheld and collected under this subchapter in respect of such wages.

"(b) Statements to constitute information returns: The statements required to be furnished by this section in respect of any wages shall be furnished at such other times, shall contain such other information, and shall be in such form as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe. A duplicate of such statement if made and filed in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall constitute the return required to be made in respect of such wages under section 147.

"(c) Extension of time: The Commissioner, under such regulations as he may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary, may grant to any employer a reasonable extension of time (not in excess of 30 days) with respect to the statements required to be furnished to employees under this section.

"SEC. 1626. Penalties.

"(a) Penalties for fraudulent receipt or failure to furnish receipt: In lieu of any other penalty provided by law (except the penalty provided by subsection (b) of this section), any person required under the provisions of section 1625 to furnish a receipt in respect of tax withheld pursuant to this subchapter who willfully furnishes a false or fraudulent receipt, or who willfully fails to furnish a receipt in the manner, at the time, and showing the information required under section 1625, or regulations prescribed thereunder, shall for each such failure, upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"(b) Additional penalty: In addition to the penalty provided by subsection (a) of this section, any person required under the provisions of section 1625 to furnish a receipt in respect of tax withheld pursuant to this subchapter who willfully furnishes a false or fraudulent receipt, or who willfully fails to furnish a receipt in the manner, at the time, and showing the information required under section 1625, or regulations prescribed thereunder, shall for each such failure be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $50.

"(c) Failure of employer to file return or pay tax: In case of any failure to make and file return or pay the tax required by this subchapter, within the time prescribed by law or prescribed by the Commissioner in pursuance of law, unless it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect, the addition to the tax shall not be less than $10.

"(d) Penalties in respect of withholding exemption certificates: Any individual required to supply information to his employer under section 1622 (h) who willfully supplies false or fraudulent information, or who willfully fails to supply information thereunder which would require an increase in the tax to be withheld under section 1622, shall, in lieu of any penalty otherwise provided, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 1627. Other laws applicable.

"All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the tax imposed by section 1400 shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this subchapter, be applicable with respect to the tax under this subchapter.

"SUBCHAPTER E—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1630. Verification of returns, etc.

"(a) Power of Commissioner to require: The Commissioner, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, may require that any return, statement, or other document required to be filed under this chapter shall contain or be verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury, and such declaration shall be in lieu of any oath otherwise required.

"(b) Penalties: Every person who willfully makes and subscribes any return, statement, or other document, which contains or is verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury, and which he does not believe to be true and correct as to every material matter, shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to the penalties prescribed for perjury in section 125 of the Criminal Code.

"SEC. 1631. Use of Government depositaries in connection with payment of taxes.

"The Secretary may authorize incorporated banks or trust companies which are depositaries or financial agents of the United States to receive any taxes under this chapter in such manner, at such times, and under such conditions as he may prescribe; and he shall prescribe the manner, times, and conditions under which the receipt of such taxes by such depositaries and financial agents is to be treated as payment of such taxes to the collectors."

(b) Technical amendments.—

(1) Amendment to section 34: Section 34 of the Internal Revenue Code (cross-reference) is amended by striking out "453, 454, and 466 (e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "453 and 454."

(2) Amendment to section 322: Section 322 (f) of the Internal Revenue Code (cross-reference) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Tax withheld at source: For refund or credit in case of withholding agent, see section 143 (f). For refund or credit in case of employer required to withhold tax on wages, see section 1622 (f)."

(c) Expiration date for withholding at source on wages under subchapter D of chapter 1: Section 476 of the Internal Revenue Code (prescribing the expiration date for the taxes imposed by such. D) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 476. Expiration date.

"The tax imposed by part I of this subchapter shall not apply with respect to any taxable year commencing after the date of cessation of hostilities in the present war. The tax imposed by part II of such subchapter shall not apply with respect to any wages paid after June 30, 1943."

(d) Effective date: The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect July 1, 1943, and shall be applicable to all wages paid on or after such date.

SEC. 3. Credit for tax withheld at source.

Section 35 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the credit for tax withheld on wages) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. Credit for tax withheld on wages.

"The amount withheld and collected as tax under subchapter D of chapter 9 during any calendar year upon the wages of any individual shall be allowed as a credit to the recipient of the income against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year beginning in such calendar year. If more than 1 taxable year begins in any such calendar year such amount shall be allowed as a credit against the tax for the last taxable year so beginning."

SEC. 4. Refunds.

(a) Excessive withholding, etc.: Section 322 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to excessive withholding) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Excessive withholding: Where the amount of the tax withheld at the source under part II of subchapter D or subchapter D of chapter 9 exceeds the taxes imposed by this chapter against which the tax so withheld may be credited under section 35 or 466 (e), the amount of such excess shall be credited against any income tax or installment thereof then due from the taxpayer, and any balance thereof shall be refunded immediately to the taxpayer.

"(3) Credits against estimated tax: The Commissioner is authorized to prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary, regulations providing for the crediting against the estimated tax for any taxable year of the amount determined by the taxpayer or the Commissioner to be an overpayment of the tax for a preceding taxable year."

(b) Presumption as to date of payment: Section 322 (e) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to presumption as to date of payment) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) Presumption as to date of payment: For the purposes of this section, any tax actually withheld and collected at the source during any calendar year under part II of subchapter D or under subchapter D of chapter 9 shall, in respect of the recipient of the income, be deemed to have been paid by him on the 15th day of the third month following the close of his taxable year with respect to which such tax is allowable as a credit under section 35 or section 466 (e); except that in the case of a nonresident alien individual, it shall be deemed to have been paid by him on the 15th day of the sixth month following the close of such taxable year. For the purposes of this section, any amount paid as estimated tax for any taxable year shall be deemed to have been paid not earlier than the 15th day of the third month following the close of such taxable year."

(c) Delegation of authority to collectors to make refunds: Section 3770 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to authority to make refunds) is amended (1) by striking out "(4)" at the beginning of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof "(5)"; and (2) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

"(4) Delegation of authority to collectors to make refunds: The Commissioner is authorized to delegate, with the approval of the Secretary, to collectors any authority, duty, or function which the Commissioner is authorized or required to exercise or perform under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this subsection, or under section 322 or 1027, where the amount involved does not exceed $1,000."

(d) Overpayments: Section 3770 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to authority to make credits and refunds) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(c) Rule where no tax liability: An amount paid as tax shall not be considered not to constitute an overpayment solely by reason of the fact that there was no tax liability in respect of which such amount was paid.

"(e) Cross-reference: The last subsection of section 3771 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to interest on overpayments) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Estimated tax and tax withheld at source: For date of payment in respect of estimated tax and of tax withheld at source on wages, see section 322 (e)."

(f) Review of allowance of interest: Section 3790 of the Internal Revenue Code (prohibiting administrative review of Commissioner's decisions) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "In the absence of fraud or mistake in mathematical calculation, the allowance or nonallowance by the Commissioner, of interest on any credit or refund under the internal revenue laws shall not, except as provided in chapter 5, be subject to review by any other administrative or accounting officer, employee, or agent of the United States."

SEC. 5. Current payment of tax not withheld at source.

(a) In general: The Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out sections 58, 59, and 60 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 58. Declaration of estimated tax by individuals.

"(a) Requirement of declaration: Every individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien) shall, at the time during the taxable year prescribed in subsection (d), make a declaration of his estimated tax for the taxable year if—

"(1) his gross income from wages (as defined in sec. 1621)

"(A) in case such individual is single or married but not living with husband or wife: can reasonably be expected to exceed $2,700 for the taxable year; or did exceed $2,700 for the preceding taxable year; or

"(B) in case such individual is married and living with husband or wife: can when added to the gross income which can reasonably be expected to be received by such husband or wife from wages (as so defined) reasonably be expected to exceed $3,500 for the taxable year; or did when added to the gross income of such husband or wife from wages (as so defined) for the preceding taxable year, exceed $3,500 for such preceding taxable year; or

"(A) in case such individual is single or married but not living with husband or wife: can reasonably be expected to exceed $100 for the taxable year and his gross income to be such as will require the making of a return for the taxable year under section 51; or did exceed $100 for the preceding taxable year and such individual either was required to make a return under section 51 or 455 for such preceding taxable year or would have been so required if he had been single during the whole of such preceding taxable year; or

"(B) in case such individual is married and living with husband or wife: can when added to the gross income which can reasonably be expected to be received by husband or wife from such sources, reasonably be expected to exceed $100 for the taxable year and the aggregate gross income of such husband and wife can reasonably be expected to be such as will require the making of a return under section 51 or 455; or did, when added to the gross income of such husband or wife from such sources for the preceding taxable year, exceed $100 for such preceding taxable year and such individual would have been required to make a return under section 51 or 455 for such preceding taxable year if he had been married and living with husband or wife during the whole of such preceding taxable year.

"(b) Contents of declaration: In the declaration required under subsection (a) the individual shall state—

"(1) the amount which he estimates as the amount of tax under sections 11 and 12, or 400, as the case may be, and section 450, for the taxable year, without regard to any credits under sections 32, 35, and 466 (e);

"(2) the amount which he estimates as the credits for the taxable year under sections 32, 35, and 466 (e); and

"(3) the excess of the amount estimated under paragraph (1) over the amount estimated under paragraph (2), which excess for the purposes of this chapter shall be held and considered the estimated tax for the taxable year.

The declaration shall also contain such other information for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this chapter as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe, and shall contain or be verified by a written statement that it is made under the penalties of perjury.

"(c) Joint declaration by husband and wife: In the case of a husband and wife living together, a single declaration under this section may be made by them jointly, in which case the liability with respect to the estimated tax shall be joint and several. No joint declaration may be made if either the husband or wife is a nonresident alien. If a joint declaration is made but a joint return is not made for the taxable year, the estimated tax for such year may be treated as the estimated tax of either the husband or the wife, or may be divided between them.

"(d) Time and place for filing: The declaration required under subsection (a) shall be filed on or before the 15th day of the third month of the taxable year, except that if the requirements of subsection (a) are first met after such date, the declaration shall be filed on or before the 15th day of the last month of the quarter of the taxable year in which such requirements are first met. An individual may make amendments or revisions of a declaration filed under this subsection, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. If so made, such amendments or revisions shall be filed on or before the 15th day of the last month of any quarter of the taxable year subsequent to that in which the declaration was filed and in which no previous amendments or revisions have been made or filed. Declarations and amendments and revisions thereof shall be filed with the Collector specified in section 53 (b) (1).

"(e) Extension of time: The Commissioner may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing declarations and paying the estimated tax, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe with the approval of the Secretary. Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than 6 months.

"(f) Persons under disability: If the taxpayer is unable to make his own declaration, the declaration shall be made by a duly authorized agent or by the guardian or other person charged with the care of the person or property of such taxpayer.

"(g) Signature presumed correct: The fact that an individual's name is signed to a filed declaration shall be prima facie evidence for all purposes that the declaration was actually signed by him.

"(h) Publicity of declaration: For the purposes of section 55 (relating to publicity of returns), a declaration of estimated tax shall be held and considered a return under this chapter.

"SEC. 59. Payment of estimated tax.

"(a) In general: The estimated tax shall be paid in four equal installments except that—

"(1) if the declaration is filed (otherwise than pursuant to an extension of time) after the 15th day of the third month of the taxable year, the estimated tax shall be paid in equal installments the number of which is equal to the number of quarters remaining in the taxable year (including the quarter in which the declaration is filed); and

"(2) if any amendment or revision of a declaration is filed, the remaining installments shall be ratably increased or decreased, as the case may be, to reflect the increase or decrease, as the case may be, in the estimated tax by reason of such amendment or revision; and

"(3) at the election of the individual, any installment of the estimated tax may be paid prior to the date prescribed for its payment. One installment of the estimated tax shall be paid at the time of making the declaration, and an installment thereof shall be paid on the 15th day of the last month of each succeeding quarter of the taxable year. Payment of any installment of the estimated tax shall be considered payment on account of the tax for the taxable year.

"(b) Assessment: The estimated tax shall be assessed only to the extent paid.

"SEC. 60. Special rules for application of sections 58 and 59.

"(a) Farmers: In the case of an individual whose estimated gross income from farming for the taxable year is at least 80 percent of the total estimated gross income from all sources for the taxable year, in lieu of the time prescribed in section 58 (d), the declaration for the taxable year may be made at any time on or before the 15th day of the last month of the taxable year.

"(b) Application to short taxable years: The application of sections 58, 59, and 294 (a) (3), (4), and (5) to taxable years of less than 12 months shall be as prescribed in regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

"(c) Application to taxable years beginning in 1943: If the taxable year is the calendar year 1943, the 15th day of September, 1943, shall be substituted for the 15th day of March for the purposes of section 58 (d). If the taxable year begins in 1943 after January 1, the date which shall be substituted for the 15th day of the third month of the taxable year for the purposes of section 58 (d) shall be prescribed by regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In either case installments of the estimated tax for such taxable year payable after September 1, 1943, shall be ratably decreased to reflect the payments on account of a taxable year beginning in 1942 which are treated as payments on account of the estimated tax for a taxable year beginning in 1943."

(b) Additions to tax: Section 294 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to additions to tax in case of nonpayment) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(3) Failure to file declaration of estimated tax: In the case of a failure to make and file a declaration of estimated tax within the time prescribed, there shall be added to the tax an amount equal to 10 percent of the tax.

"(4) Failure to pay installment of estimated tax: In the case of the failure to pay an installment of the estimated tax within the time prescribed, there shall be added to the tax $2.50 or 2½ percent of the tax, whichever is the greater, for each installment with respect to which such failure occurs.

"(5) Substantial underestimate of estimated tax: If 80 percent of the tax (determined without regard to the credits under sections 32, 35, and 466 (e)), in the case of individuals other than farmers exercising an election under section 60 (a), or 66⅔ percent of such tax so determined in the case of such farmers, exceeds the estimated tax (increased by such credits), there shall be added to the tax an amount equal to such excess, or equal to 6 percent of the amount by which such tax so determined exceeds the estimated tax so increased, whichever is the lesser. This paragraph shall not apply to the taxable year in which falls the death of the taxpayer."

(c) Penalties: Section 145 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to criminal penalties) is amended (1) by inserting after "return" wherever appearing therein the words "or declaration", and (2) by inserting before "tax" wherever appearing therein the words "estimated tax or."

(d) Payment by installments: Section 56 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to installment payments) is amended by striking out "The" at the beginning thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "Except in the case of an individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien), the."

(e) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1942.

SEC. 6. Relief from double payments in 1943.

(a) General rule: The liability of any individual (other than an estate or trust and other than a nonresident alien) for the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code for the taxable year 1942 shall be discharged as of September 1, 1943, except that (1) interest and additions to such tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as, and as a part of, the tax under such chapter for the taxable year 1943, and (2) this subsection shall not apply in any case in which the taxpayer is convicted of any criminal offense with respect to the tax for the taxable year 1942 or in which additions to the tax for such taxable year are applicable by reason of fraud.

(b) Special rule where 1942 tax greater than 1943 tax: In the case of a taxpayer any part of whose tax for the taxable year 1942 is discharged under subsection (a), if such tax (determined without regard to such subsection, without regard to interest and additions to such tax, and without regard to credits against such tax for amounts withheld at source) is in excess of the tax for the taxable year 1943 (determined without regard to this section, without regard to interest and additions to such tax, and without regard to credits against such tax for amounts withheld at source), the tax for the taxable year 1943 shall be increased by such excess; except that if such taxpayer is in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time during the taxable year 1942 or 1943, the tax for the taxable year 1943 shall not be increased by any portion of such excess which is attributable to earned net income (as defined in section 25 (a) (4), as determined under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(c) Special rule where increased income.—

(1) Tax for 1942 less than that for 1943: In the case of a taxpayer whose tax for the taxable year 1942 is discharged under subsection (a), and (in cases in which the tax for such taxable year, determined in the same manner as under subsection (b), is less than that for the taxable year 1943, similarly determined) whose surtax net income for the base year plus $10,000 is less than that for the taxable year 1942, the liability discharged under subsection (a) shall be limited to an amount equal to a tentative tax computed as if the portion of the surtax net income for such taxable year which is not greater than the sum of the surtax net income for the base year plus $10,000 constituted both the surtax net income for such taxable year 1942, and the net income for such taxable year after allowance of all credits against net income;

(2) Tax for 1942 not less than that for 1943. In the case of a taxpayer whose tax for the taxable year 1942 is discharged under subsection (a), and (in cases in which the tax for such taxable year, determined in the same manner as under subsection (b), is equal to or greater than that for the taxable year 1943, similarly determined), whose surtax net income for the base year plus $10,000 is less than that for the taxable year 1943, the liability discharged under subsection (a) shall be limited to an amount equal to a tentative tax for the taxable year 1943 computed as if the portion of the surtax net income for such taxable year which is not greater than the sum of the surtax net income for the base year plus $10,000 constituted both the surtax net income for the taxable year 1943, and the net income for such taxable year after allowance of all credits against net income.

The portion of the liability which is not discharged under subsection (a) by reason of paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be discharged, but the tax for the taxable year 1943 shall be increased by an amount equal to such portion. The portion of the liability which is not discharged under subsection (a) by reason of paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be discharged, but the tax for the taxable year 1943 shall be increased by the excess of such portion over the amount by which the tax for such taxable year is increased under subsection (b). For the purposes of this subsection "base year" means any one of the taxable years 1938, 1939, or 1940, to be selected by the taxpayer. The amount by which the tax for the taxable year 1943 is increased by reason of this subsection shall not be held or considered to be a part of the tax for such taxable year for the purposes of sections 58, 59, 60, and 294 (a) (3), (4), and (5) of the Internal Revenue Code. That portion of the compensation which is received or accrued in the taxable year 1942 (if the tax for such year is less than that for the taxable year 1943), or in the taxable year 1943 (if the tax for such year is equal to or less than that for the taxable year 1942), and which under section 107 of the Internal Revenue Code is, for the purposes of that section, attributed to the base year, shall for the purposes of this subsection be excluded in computing the surtax net income for the taxable year 1942 or 1943, as the case may be, and be included in computing the surtax net income for the base year. This subsection shall be applied in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(d) Extension of time for payment of increase in 1943 tax under subsection (c): At the election of the taxpayer, made under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, the Commissioner shall, except as hereinafter provided, extend the time for the payment of the portion of the tax for the taxable year 1943 equal to the increase therein under subsection (c), in which case such portion shall be paid in four equal annual installments, the first of which shall be paid on the fifteenth day of the fifteenth month following the close of the taxable year, and of the remaining installments one of which shall be paid on the last day of each succeeding 12-month period, except that any installment may be paid prior to the date prescribed for its payment. The Commissioner may condition the extension upon the furnishing by the taxpayer of a bond in such amount, not exceeding the amount of such increase, with such surety or sureties, as the Commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of such amount in accordance with the terms of the extension. If the time for the payment of such portion is extended, there shall be collected, as a part of the tax, interest on each installment at the rate of 4 percent per annum for the period beginning with the date prescribed for the payment of the tax for such taxable year and ending with the date on which such installment is paid or the date on which it is payable, whichever is the earlier. If any installment is not paid on or before the date on which it is payable, it and the remaining installments shall be paid upon notice and demand from the Collector. If any installment is not paid on or before the date on which it is payable, there shall be collected, as part of the tax, interest on such installment at the rate of 6 percent per annum for the period beginning with the date on which such installment is payable and ending with the date on which it is paid.

(e) Rules for application of subsections (b) and (c): The credit against the tax imposed by Chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code for the taxable year 1943 allowed by section 31 of such chapter (relating to taxes of foreign countries and of possessions of the United States), shall be determined without regard to subsections (b) and (c). Sections 105, 106, and 107 of such chapter (relating to limitations on tax) shall be applied without regard to subsections (b) and (c). If the taxpayer either for the taxable year 1942 or for the taxable year 1943 makes a joint return with his spouse, the taxes of the spouses for the taxable year for which a joint return is not made shall be aggregated for the purposes of subsections (b) and (c), and in case the taxable year for which a joint return is not made is the taxable year 1943, the liability for the increase in the tax for the taxable year 1943 under subsections (b) and (c), shall be joint and several.

(f) Special rule where taxpayer dies in taxable year 1942: If the individual dies during the taxable year 1942, subsection (a) shall not apply.

(g) Treatment of payments on account of 1942 tax: Any payment (other than interest and additions to the tax) made on account of the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code for the taxable year 1942 upon a taxpayer any part of whose liability for such tax is discharged under subsection (a) shall be considered as payment on account of the estimated tax for the taxable year 1943. In the case of any extension of time for the payment of such tax granted by the Commissioner prior to September 1, 1943, payment of the portion thereof which if such extension had not been granted would have been payable under section 56 (b) prior to such date shall be made notwithstanding subsection (a), but the foregoing provisions of this subsection shall apply to any such payment. In case the taxpayer becomes delinquent, prior to September 1, 1943, in the payment of such tax or any installment thereof, subsection (a) shall not relieve the taxpayer of his liability for the tax, but the foregoing provisions of this subsection shall be applicable to payment of such liability. If any payment on account of the tax imposed by such chapter for the taxable year 1942 is made pursuant to a joint return made by husband and wife for such taxable year, and such payment is considered as a payment on account of the estimated tax for the taxable year 1943, such payment may be treated as a payment on account of the estimated tax of either the husband or the wife for such taxable year or may be divided between them.

(h) Use of term "taxable year": For the purposes of this section the terms "taxable year 1938," "taxable year 1939," taxable year 1940," "taxable year 1942," and "taxable year 1943" mean, respectively, the taxable year beginning in 1938, 1939, 1940, 1942, and 1943, respectively; and "taxable year" as applied to the taxable year 1942 or 1943 shall not include any period of less than 12 months unless occasioned by the death of the taxpayer or unless there is no taxable year of 12 months beginning in such calendar year.

SEC. 7. Additional allowance for members of armed forces.

(a) In general: Section 22 (b) (13) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to additional allowance for military and naval personnel in computing net income) is amended to read as follows:

"(13) Additional allowance for military and naval personnel: In the case of compensation received during any taxable year and before the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the President, by a member of the military or naval forces of the United States for active service in such forces during such war, so much of such compensation as does not exceed $1,500."

(b) Effective date: The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1942.

SEC. 8. Abatement of tax for members of armed forces upon death.

Chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting after section 404 the following new supplement:

"SUPPLEMENT U—ABATEMENT OF TAX FOR MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES UPON DEATH

"SEC. 421. Abatement of tax for members of armed forces upon death.

"In the case of any individual who dies on or after December 7, 1941, while in active service as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States and prior to the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the President, the tax under this chapter (including interest, additions to the tax, and additional amounts) attributable to earned net income (as defined in section 25 (a) (4)) received or accrued by him shall not be assessed, and if assessed, the assessment shall be abated, and if collected shall be credited or refunded as an overpayment, in the following amounts and for the following taxable years:

"(1) if such individual entered upon such service before the commencement of the taxable year beginning in 1943:

"(A) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for the taxable year in which falls the date on which he entered upon such service or September 16, 1940, whichever date is the later;

"(B) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all subsequent taxable years during which he was in such service; and

"(C) that portion of the tax so attributable for the taxable year last preceding the date on which he entered upon such service or September 16, 1940, whichever date is the later, which bears the same ratio to the total tax so attributable as the number of quarters in the taxable year described in subparagraph (A) subsequent to the date on which he entered upon such service or September 16, 1940, whichever date is the later, bears to four; or

"(2) if such individual entered upon such service during the taxable year beginning in 1943:

"(A) that portion of the tax for the taxable year beginning in 1943, reduced by the increase under section 6 (c) of the Current Tax Payment Act of 1943, which bears the same ratio to the total tax so reduced as the number of quarters in such taxable year subsequent to the date on which he entered upon such service bears to four, to the extent that such portion is so attributable; and

"(B) the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all subsequent taxable years during which he was in such service; or

(3) if such individual entered upon such service after the close of the taxable year beginning in 1943, the entire amount of the tax so attributable for all taxable years during the whole of which he was in such service. The computations required by this section shall be made in conformity with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. For the purposes of this section, a fractional part of a quarter shall be disregarded unless it exceeds 15 days, in which case it shall be considered a quarter."

SEC. 9. Assistant commissioners.

Subchapter B of chapter 39 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER B—ASSISTANT COMMISSIONERS

"SEC. 3905. Appointment.

"There shall be in the Bureau of Internal Revenue two Assistant Commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 3906. Duties.

"The Assistant Commissioners shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Commissioner or required by law."

SEC. 10. Extension of time in connection with release of powers of appointment.

Section 403 (d) (3) of the Revenue Act of 1942 is amended by striking out "July 1, 1943" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "March 1, 1944"; and section 452 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1942 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Release before March 1, 1944.—

"(1) A release of a power to appoint before March 1, 1944, shall not be deemed a transfer of property by the individual possessing such power.

"(2) This subsection shall apply to all calendar years prior to 1944 and to that part of the calendar year 1944 prior to March 1, 1944."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed with the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be authorized to make corrections in the section numbering and lettering, and in the cross references, and to correct any typographical errors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. VANDENBERG, and Mr. DAVIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am so out of sympathy with the action taken by the Senate that I ask to be relieved from service on the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has that right, and the Chair appoints in place of the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it adjourn until Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

Col. Robert Wood Johnson for temporary appointment as brigadier general, Army of the United States, under the provisions of law; and Sundry citizens for appointment under the War Manpower Commission in various States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Are there further reports of committees?

LYNN R. EDMINSTER

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I report favorably the nomination of Lynn R. Edminster, of Illinois, to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission for the term expiring June 16, 1949. This is a reappointment, and there are especially strong reasons why the nomination should be confirmed at once. The nominee is from the State of Illinois, and has been recommended by both the Senators from that State. No objection has been heard, and since this is a reappointment, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nomination.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER If there is no objection, the clerk will state the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Lynn R. Edminster to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission.

The nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Sumner T. Pike to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the Public Health Service nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the postmaster nominations be confirmed en bloc, with the exception of the nomination of John F. Leonard to be postmaster at Marmarth, N. Dak. At the request of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] I ask that that nomination be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination of John F. Leonard will be passed over, and without objection, the other postmaster nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Capt. Laurance T. DuBose to be rear admiral.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Rear Admiral Charles P. Snyder to be placed on the retired list with the rank of admiral.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified forthwith of all confirmations of today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ENGLEBRIGHT, OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate resume consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair) laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives (H. Res. 235), which were read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 13, 1943.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT, a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the absence of the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] due to illness, on his behalf I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 151) were read, considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT, late a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That a committee of four Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Under the second resolving clause the Presiding Officer appointed the Senators from California [Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], the committee on the part of the Senate to join with the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I wish to say that in the death of Mr. Englebright, California has lost one of its most highly respected, able, and popular Representatives. His death will be deplored by all. It was a great shock to all of us who have known him. It is my intention to proceed to California myself for Mr. Englebright's funeral.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I move that the Senate do now adjourn as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and at 7 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m., the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, until Monday, May 17, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 14, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, what wilt Thou have us do? Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth. We would be eager to Thy call and strong to comprehend Thy purpose. We thank Thee for this beautiful world, for the flowers at our feet and for the stellar clusters in the firmament, for the birds that sing in the sunshine and for the worlds that roll in light, for the breath of zephyr and for the blast of storm-wind, over all is the majesty of Thy everlasting law.

For all our families, united or separated, we ask our Father's care; grant that all homes may be sanctuaries of love and happiness. Stimulate all our people with those masculine virtues—the obligations of freedom, the spirit of charity and the sense of personal responsibility. Give strength to men who are beset by sharp temptations and to loving women seeking spiritual beauty for home and world.

Dear Lord, a capable and loved Member has passed through the valley and shadow of death; the presiding spirit of a happy home has gone beyond the veil of earth; from his honest and intrepid soul came a character which all men delighted to honor. Comfort all to whose lips has come the cup of a great sorrow and give them peace. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE HONORABLE HARRY LANE ENGLEBRIGHT

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires at this time to recognize Members who were not here yesterday afternoon, and who desire to speak on the life and character of our late colleague.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow that I heard last night of the death of our colleague from California, HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT. I regret that I was not present late last evening when the announcement was made on the floor of the House. I want the RECORD to show, however, that I join with his many friends both in and out of Congress in expressing my sorrow at his passing and my sympathy for his wife and son. The friendship between us and our wives began when I came here, for we lived at the same place for several years, and the friendship became more intimate as time wore on.

HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT was a man of the highest character, the finest of principles, a man who knew and understood the value of true friendship. I shall miss him more than I know how to express.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, in the passing of HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT this body, the country, and particularly the people of the Second Congressional District of California, have suffered a distinct loss.

Harry and I were elected to Congress at the same time to fill unexpired terms. He was elected to fill a vacancy in a district once represented by his distinguished father for a number of years.

He represented the mining sections of the State of California. His district embraced nearly one-fourth of the entire State. It has the largest geographical area of any district in Congress.

He was born and grew to manhood in the section he so well represented. He knew the problems of his people—the miners, the mine owners, and operators.

He fought a great battle for the conservation of the huge redwood and pine forests of the State. The Mariposa grove of giant redwoods, the largest and oldest living things upon this earth, is in his district.

So devoted was he to the interests of the people he represented that the order closing the gold and other mineral mines of his district for the duration of the war bore heavily upon him. Some of these mines extending to a depth of a full mile into the bowels of the earth are threatened with destruction, for when once flooded with water they will be irrevocably lost, and the miners who have followed this work for generations will have lost their means of livelihood. As a mining engineer, HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT knew this as well, or perhaps better, than any man in this Nation.

The men who own and operate those mines and the men who were engaged in this hazardous employment have lost a true and sincere friend.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. TOLAN].

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, Hon. HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT died yesterday and we were all deeply shocked and grieved at his passing. An intimate and personal friend of mine for many years I deem it a personal loss.

Harry was one of the kindest, finest, and gentlest gentleman I have ever known in my life. His high position as minority whip for many years required him to assemble Members for roll and quorum calls and to acquaint Members with pending legislation. These duties made him one of the best known and most loved Member in the House.

I never heard him say an unkind word of another. Harry is gone. We will follow him, but while here, his life will be an inspiration to us in determining how best to carry on.

Harry called hundreds of Members to hundreds of roll calls. He has answered his last call. Who knows but what he is not with us today in spirit for he is certainly entitled to the privilege of the floor to whisper advice from realms eternal.

Our deepest affection and sympathy go out to his loving wife, Grace, and his son, Jackson, who is now with the armed forces somewhere in the Pacific. They have the consolation to know that no finer or lovable husband and father ever walked this old earth of ours than HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, it was with deep regret and profound sorrow that I learned of the sudden death of our colleague, the Honorable HARRY LANE ENGLEBRIGHT. Each of us who had the privilege of being one of Harry's friends, and his friends were legion, has suffered a keen personal loss. It will not be possible to fill the void that has been caused by his untimely passing.

I well recall how HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT took me under his wing when I first came to Congress, a freshman in every sense of the word. His kindly advice and sound counsel were extremely helpful in guiding me along the proper course. I had the honor of serving for 4 years as an assistant to him in the minority whip organization, and I shall never forget that privilege.

Many Members have spoken of his courteous and gentlemanly ways. What finer tribute can be paid to any man than to say that he was a true gentleman and a loyal and devoted friend. He served his people, his State, and his country with honor and distinction. To his family we extend our sincerest sympathy. The Congress has lost a real statesman and I have lost a friend.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the passing of HARRY LANE ENGLEBRIGHT, California lost one of her most distinguished sons, the Nation an outstanding leader, and thousands of individuals like me a very dear friend.

In all truth and sincerity he loved his fellow man. His was the smile and the clasp of friendship. He needed no assurances, made no demands, exacted no promises. It was enough for him to grant the favor, to do the kindly deed, to extend the helping hand. He labored for his country and all its people in a large way, but in a very definite and active way he served each one of his constituents as legislator, patriot, and friend. Heedless of his personal welfare he labored faithfully to the last.

No Member of Congress, House or Senate, has ever been held in higher esteem, more beloved, or highly respected by his colleagues than HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT. By reason of his passing, the people of California and the Nation have suffered a great loss. We join in sharing the grief of his family and extend to them our deepest sympathy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The unexpected death of my colleague and valued friend, HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT, on Thursday, May 13, 1943, was a public loss to his district, to the Congress, and to the country, and a great personal sorrow to me. I extend to his devoted wife and talented son my sincerest sympathy.

I served with him for almost 18 years in the House. For many years we have both been members of the Committee on Flood Control. For almost 8 years I have been chairman and HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT has been the ranking minority member of the committee. Our relations have always been most cordial. No chairman ever had a more cooperative member of his committee. Our lots have fallen in similar places through the years, and I numbered him among my closest associates.

HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT was an unusual man. He was a gentleman to the manner born. I have never known a more agreeable Member of the House. He possessed the qualifications of a good Representative. He was industrious in his office and committee work, and attentive in the sessions of the House. He was jealous of the interests of the district he represented and was devoted to the service of the people who elected and reelected him as a Member of the House of Representatives for nine terms. He was effective in the committee and in his contacts on the floor of the House. He thus secured excellent consideration for the district and the people he served.

Our lamented colleague was a friendly man. All entertained for him good will and kindly feelings. He loved his fellow man, and no Member in the years of my service has been more highly personally esteemed by his colleagues.

HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT lived the good life of his time. He loved his State, and he loved his Nation. He was a patriot. He was devoted to his friends and loyal to every trust. The House and the country can ill afford to spare such a man as he. He will be long remembered by his constituents and by his colleagues.

PROGRAM FOR RECRUITING AND TRAINING NURSES

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2664) to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is the bill that was introduced by our colleague the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mr. BULWINKLE. This is the bill that was introduced by her.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman explain the bill to the House?

Mr. BULWINKLE. This bill, Mr. Speaker, provides for the training of nurses for the armed forces, for governmental activities, and for civilian hospitals. We are badly in need of some 65,000 nurses. They have to be trained. It is hard to get these girls to go into the nursing profession with the WAVES, the WAAC's, and industry offering them so much more money. This bill provides for their training at the expense of the Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And I understand it was reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Gladly.

Mr. JENKINS. I should just like to make this statement: There is probably no person in America better qualified to speak on this problem or who has had more experience with reference to it than the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON], and I am glad the committee has unanimously supported her bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of assuring a supply of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated sums sufficient to carry out the purposes of this act. Such sums shall be used for making payments to schools of nursing or other institutions which have submitted, and had approved by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service (hereinafter referred to as the Surgeon General), plans for nurses' training, for making payments under section 4, and for all necessary expenses of the Public Health Service in administering the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. A plan for training of nurses may be limited to student-nurse training, or to postgraduate or refresher-nursing courses, or may include both. A plan submitted by any institution may be approved only if it provides—

(a) That no student or graduate nurse will be included under the plan unless in the judgment of the head of the institution such nurse will be available for military or other Federal governmental or essential civilian services for the duration of the present war, and such nurse so states in her application for inclusion under the plan;

(b) That nurses under the plan will be provided courses of study and training meeting standards prescribed by the Surgeon General;

(c) That the institution will furnish student nurses under the plan (without charge for tuition, fees, or other expenses) courses of study and training, uniforms, insignia, and maintenance in accordance with regulations of the Surgeon General;

(d) That the institution will pay student nurses under the plan a stipend at not less than the following monthly rates: $15 for the first 9 months of study; $20 for the following 15 to 21 months of combined study and practice, depending upon the curriculum of such institution;

(e) That the institution will either afford student nurses under the plan an opportunity to complete their course of training until graduation at such institution and will pay such student nurse a stipend at a monthly rate not less than $30 for the period following the period of combined study and practice and prior to graduation, or will transfer such student, after completion of the period of combined study and practice and prior to graduation, for training in some other institution, but only if such training may be credited toward graduation, and the institution to which the nurse is transferred agrees to pay her a stipend at a monthly rate of not less than $30 until graduation; and

(f) That where extramural credit toward graduation can be given under the law of the State in which the institution is located, such institution will make transfers to Federal hospitals, under the conditions specified in subsection (e), in any case where a student nurse desires such transfer and appropriate request for such transfer is made on behalf of such hospital.

SEC. 3. From the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay each institution, with a plan approved under section 2—

(1) with respect to items furnished student nurses thereunder, amounts determined by the Surgeon General to compensate such institution for—

(A) reasonable tuition and fees for the courses of study and training;

(B) reasonable maintenance provided pursuant to section 2 for the first 9 months of their course of study and training;

(C) uniforms and insignia, provided in accordance with section 2; and

(D) the minimum rate of stipend specified in section 2 for periods prior to completion of the course of combined study and training referred to in such section; and

(2) with respect to items furnished graduate nurses thereunder, amounts determined by the Surgeon General to compensate such institution for reasonable tuition and fees for postgraduate and refresher courses of study, and reasonable maintenance for graduate nurses undertaking postgraduate courses, or such portion of such amounts as may be determined in accordance with regulations of the Surgeon General.

SEC. 4. The Surgeon General is authorized, with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator, to enter into agreements with nonprofit organizations for the recruitment of student and graduate nurses for training and courses under plans approved pursuant to this act, and to compensate such organizations therefor, but in no case shall such compensation exceed the necessary cost, as determined by him, of rendering such service.

SEC. 5. Determinations under section 3 or 4 of amounts which any institution or organization shall receive shall be conclusive upon such institution or organization and upon any officer or agency of the Government.

SEC. 6. The method of computing and paying the amounts referred to in sections 3 and 4 shall be as follows:

(a) The Surgeon General shall from time to time, on a prepayment or reimbursement basis, estimate or make determination of the amount for each institution or organization, which amount shall be reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which he finds that unadjusted payments with respect to any prior period were greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to such institution or organization pursuant to section 3 or 4 for such prior period, and shall certify the amount so estimated or determined and so reduced or increased to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office pay the institution or organization at the time or times fixed by the Surgeon General the amount so certified.

SEC. 7. In lieu of payment therefor under section 3 the Surgeon General is authorized to procure and provide insignia for student nurses under a plan approved under section 2.

SEC. 8. The Surgeon General with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. Such rules and regulations shall be promulgated after conference with an advisory committee of not less than five members consisting of representatives of the nursing profession, hospitals, and accredited nurses' training institutions. The members of the committee shall be appointed by the Federal Security Administrator. The members of the committee shall not receive any compensation for their services on the committee, but shall be reimbursed for all necessary travel and subsistence expenses (or receive a per diem in lieu thereof not to exceed $10 to be fixed by the Federal Security Administrator) while away from their respective places of residence on the business of the committee.

SEC. 9. This act shall cease to be in effect upon the date of the termination of hostilities in the present war as determined by the President or upon such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate, except for purposes of (a) making computations, payments, and adjustments in payments with respect to recruitment, training, and courses prior to such date, and (b) making computations, payments, and adjustments in payments so as to permit continuance, after such date, of training and courses by graduate or student nurses who were receiving training or courses 90 days prior to such date.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD, and I ask also that the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] may have permission to extend her own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]?

There was no objection.

H. R. 2664

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes.

EVIDENCE OF NEEDS

A critical shortage of nurse personnel exists today. Unless the situation is remedied within the next few months, both the military and civilian populations will receive inadequate nursing care. Never before in the history of our country have nursing needs so far overshadowed the available supply. Together, the Army and the Navy are currently recruiting 3,000 nurses per month. Many civilian hospitals have been forced to close sections of their institutions because it has been impossible to secure sufficient personnel to care for the patients. Hospitals list nurses first among the most critical personnel shortages. Daily the war industries are requesting additional nurses to help keep their employees well and on the job. In some hospitals, the remaining nurses are attempting to care for twice as many patients as formerly. This is not safe for the patients nor for the nurses whose health will suffer unless they secure relief. Careful estimates of the military and civilian needs during the next fiscal year indicate that the services of at least 100,000 additional nurses will be needed to meet military needs and to maintain for the civilian population standards of nursing care which existed in 1941, and no one admits that those were ideal standards.

The Federal aid program—training for nurses, national defense—which was initiated 2 years ago has helped, but the scope of that program is entirely too limited to solve the present problem. It was based upon the incentive principle—only those schools which could increase their student admissions over peacetime levels were eligible. The measure specifically prohibited the payment of cash allowances to students and the amount of aid for tuition, maintenance, and instructional costs was limited. Two years ago the competition for womanpower was not so keen as it is today. War industries and the uniformed auxiliary services of the armed forces are recruiting many of the young women who were formerly interested in nursing. Therefore, the recruitment of satisfactory candidates for schools of nursing is becoming increasingly difficult.

Nurses are among the few groups which come to the Army trained for their work. Other workers are inducted and paid salaries and expenses during the learning period. For the most part, nurses have paid in cash for their education. At the same time they have been rendering a necessary nursing service in the hospital and have helped to replace graduate nurses who have joined the armed forces.

PROVISIONS OF H. R. 2326

This measure will stimulate recruitment by providing funds to pay her tuition and entrance fees; by furnishing her a distinctive outdoor uniform and insignia which will identify her as one who is rendering a necessary wartime service; by assuring the student an allowance for personal expenses throughout the training period. While the amount of money allowed for personal expenses is limited, it is recognized that the student nurse is being prepared for a lifetime career in a type of work for which there will be a continuing demand during the post-war period.

This measure will also relieve the need for additional nursing service in military and civilian hospitals by requiring that the period of combined study and practice be completed in not more than 30 months, thus making the student available for full-time nursing duty under supervision at an earlier date.

Reimbursement for maintenance by the Federal Government to the hospital or school of nursing is provided for the first 9 months of the training period when the student is participating very little in the nursing service of the hospital. Following this preliminary period the hospital will furnish complete maintenance. The institutions utilizing the services of the student at the completion of the program of combined theory and practice are required to pay the stipend and to furnish the maintenance during that period.

ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THIS BILL

At the hearings on this bill a number of representatives from Government and professional agencies appeared in its support, to quote from Dr. Parran, Surgeon General of the Public Health Service:

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that this proposal has been worked up very carefully by consultation with the various groups concerned—the professional organizations, training schools, the hospital authorities—and I think it fair to state that it represents the consensus of those who are best in position to know the needs and to know the possibilities of meeting these needs.

Brigadier General McAfee, Acting Surgeon General of the Army, testified as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I wish to express the approval of the Surgeon General and the Secretary of War of the provisions of this bill.

Naturally the Medical Department of the Army is vitally interested in the training of nurses in the interest of maintaining women in the nursing profession not only to furnish us our required number during the emergency, as long as it lasts, but after the emergency is passed.

We appreciate that there is great competition for women in industry and in the armed services, and that the salary, perhaps the glamor, has attracted from the number of young ladies entering training as nurses.

We believe that this bill will appeal to a large number, but it is directly in the interest of the war effort; identifies them with the war effort and also provides them with a profession which will develop into a career, and be useful to them after the war is passed.

At the present time, under our system of recruiting, we are almost current with our nurse requirements. We appreciate, however, that the local communities are making a marked sacrifice to keep this number up to our requirements, and we feel that there is a limit and that eventually the procurement of nurses from civil life will drop down to a point that will not furnish us what we need.

For this reason we feel that this bill will stimulate nursing and the study of nursing and make available to civil hospitals partially trained women who are in course of training and in that way in some sense relieve the situation in the immediate future. We also appreciate that during the post-war period there will be an unusual demand for nurses both in civil life, public health service, and in the care of veterans of this war, and we feel that it is a protective measure.

The director of nursing, Miss Anna D. Wolf, Johns Hopkins Hospital School of Nursing, Baltimore, Md., endorsed the proposed plan and stated:

In the past we have had very good response to recruitment in our school. * * * However, right now, during the past 4 months of this year, we have noticed a marked decline in both the applicants to the school and the requests for admission to the school and also from the standpoint of the type of student who is asking to be admitted. We have reason to feel that these facts are very significant in relation to the fact that we do not have in nursing a program to offer students similar to that which they may receive in almost any one of the other services of the Government or through industry.

Dr. Claude W. Munger, chairman of the Council on Government Relations of the American Hospital Association, presented a resolution of endorsement from his association. He emphasized the great increase in the use of hospital facilities in this country and the crying need of all hospitals for more nurses. He stated that—

If it were possible for the hospitals to keep and use for themselves the output of their schools of nursing, this bill and the appropriations necessary for it would not be necessary, of course, but the country wants and takes every nurse we can produce and we want our fighting men to have enough nurses, but, of course, the cost of the production of a nurse has to be the responsibility of the Government. I believe this situation is very urgent and the official board of my association, the American Hospital Association, feels the same.

Miss Stella Goostray, president of the National League of Nursing Education and chairman of the National Nursing Council for War Service, presented endorsements of H. R. 2326 from both of these organizations. Miss Goostray explained the program of the National League of Nursing Education in securing the adjustment of the nursing curriculum so that the last 6 months would be free for supervised nursing practice within civilian or military hospitals. She also emphasized the program of the National Nursing Council for War Service in returning inactive graduate nurses to active practice and in recruiting student nurses.

Endorsements were also presented by the United States veterans' facilities, the Catholic Hospital Association, and the National Organization for Public Health Nursing and a number of other professional and lay organizations.

Numerous letters and telegrams from representatives of hospital, nursing, and lay groups from the various sections of the country were read at the hearings and were placed in the record. These communications gave specific examples of acute nursing shortages and recommended the passage of this measure.

THE COST AND DURATION OF THE PROPOSED PROGRAM

In her introductory remarks the gentlewoman from Ohio, Representative BOLTON, author of H. R. 2326, estimated that the total cost to the Federal Government for the entire period of training would be approximately $1,250 per student, and the annual cost of the program would be between sixty and sixty-five millions of dollars, depending upon the number of students who elect to become members of the Student War Nursing Reserve. She emphasized that enrollment in the Student War Nursing Reserve would be voluntary, but that those students who will receive the benefits must agree to serve in some type of necessary nursing work for the duration of the war and 6 months thereafter. The gentlewoman from Ohio, Representative BOLTON, also emphasized that this was a war emergency measure and that no additional classes will be admitted after the war is ended.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, America at war is facing a serious nursing shortage which threatens to undermine the health of our Nation unless immediate steps are taken to relieve the situation. Inasmuch as this is a condition stemming out of the war, surely it is not unreasonable to feel that the Federal Government should shoulder the responsibility for providing a solution to the problem.

At least 65,000 new student nurses are needed this year to replenish the ranks of graduate nurses who are being called in ever-increasing numbers to the armed forces and essential civilian services. We cannot hope to enroll 65,000 new student nurses without putting them on an equitable basis with students of other essential war professions, trades, and services. We have no right to expect to attract young women to nursing if they must pay the cost of this education while the Federal Government finances the education of students of medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, veterinary, chemistry, physics, and engineering. Nor can we expect to attract young women to nursing when they can go into either war industries or auxiliaries of the armed forces and immediately receive both salaries and subsistence while training.

The purpose of H. R. 2664 is to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, and also to provide refresher and post-graduate courses where they are needed to bring inactive graduate nurses back into active service for the war effort. The bill is an expansion of the present nursing-education program—training for nurses—national defense—of the United States Public Health Service. Although the present Public Health Service program has made a magnificent record, it has not proved adequate because, first, only students needing financial aid are eligible and, secondly, the appropriation has not been large enough to meet the demand. This enlarged program under H. R. 2664 will be administered by the United States Public Health Service, as the previous program has been, thereby assuring our student-nurse body the scientific guidance and experience of the able men and women of the United States Public Health Service. They will have the benefit of an advisory committee representing nursing, hospitals, and educational groups concerned—all of whom are wholeheartedly in favor of this new plan.

Provision is made in the bill for paying moderate stipends and maintenance to the student nurse throughout her training period. The course of study is to be reduced from 36 months to 24 or 30 months, depending upon the plan chosen by the individual school of nursing.

In return for these benefits the student nurse agrees that upon graduation she will serve her country where needed most, either in the armed forces or in essential governmental or civilian institutions, for the duration of the war. The act would cease to be in effect upon the termination of hostilities in the present war, except that women receiving training 90 days prior to the date of the cessation of the war will be permitted to complete their courses.

Those who fear we may be encouraging an oversupply of nurses for the postwar period should dispel those fears at once. As I look into the future, I believe nursing will be one of the most important activities, requiring an almost unlimited number of nurses; not only will the military, naval, and veterans' hospitals be carrying probably the heaviest load in their history, but the effects of total war will take an unpredictable toll here, and our rehabilitation programs will require highly skilled nurses; nor can we stop at our own frontiers—all the world will need the consecrated, intelligent care that only the professional nurse is equipped to give.

May I take this opportunity of thanking the House for its understanding response to this emergency and the expeditious handling of this bill.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ELLIOTT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a telegram from Mr. Loren H. Voch, director of the Wasco, Calif., Farm Center.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT]?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL—1944

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 2713) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 446), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

AMENDED REPORT ON S. 796 BY THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may have permission to file an amended report on the bill S. 796.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special orders for today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes and also that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] may also have permission to address the House for 30 minutes today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the President of the Ohio Canners' Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRIFFITHS]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GRIFFITHS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

RECORD OF NINETEENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA IN SECOND WAR-LOAN DRIVE

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the remarkable record and the outstanding achievement of the Nineteenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania in the recent second war-loan drive. The district subscribed for more than double its quota. Indeed, it exceeded doubling by more than $3,000,000. The chairmen in the three counties advise me that this great success was due to complete cooperation from the citizens of every city, borough, hamlet, and township in the three counties.

The allotted quota was $21,553,000; $46,203,582 was subscribed. It is entirely possible later returns will add to this huge sum.

In each of the three counties the allotment was far exceeded.

Cumberland County subscribed $5,160,516 when asked for $3,459,000—50 percent over.

Lebanon County bought $6,309,355, when asked for $4,309,000—50 percent over.

Dauphin $34,733,711, when asked for $13,785,000—about 2½ times the quota.

One of the ladies' divisions with a quota of $60,000 secured over $1,000,000.

In future as in past campaigns the United States of America can count on the Nineteenth District of Pennsylvania doing more than it is asked to do, not only in war-loan drives but in all phases of the war effort.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1943

Mr. CANNON of Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 2714) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 447), which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DILWEG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, May 18, after the disposition of the legislative business of the day and other special orders, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article written by Dr. Charles Wachtl, editor of the Polish Star, published in Philadelphia, on Polish-Russian relations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an essay entitled "Youth Fights for Its Heritage," by Nelson Fisher, of the East Nashville High School.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING IN SMALL NEWSPAPERS

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, every Member of this body fully realizes the impossibility of small newspapers surviving much longer. With no automobile, gasoline, tire, machinery, and scarcely any dry goods or grocery advertisement, how can we expect them long to exist?

We all know that practically every newspaper in the United States has most patriotically donated hundreds of columns of space toward the war effort since Pearl Harbor. The great majority have contributed thousands of dollars in doing this even though they are operating at a loss.

Senator BANKHEAD has introduced a bill in the Senate to aid in the stabilization program and war effort by using paid newspaper advertising in connection with the sale of United States War bonds and for other purposes. Newspapers' stock in trade is their space. The Government pays liberally for everything else to carry on the war to a successful conclusion. Why discriminate against the newspapers? Publicity is most certainly a necessary item. I sincerely hope this body and the Senate in the near future will pass the Bankhead bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. BLACKNEY asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today after the disposition of the legislative business of the day and other special orders, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VURSELL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein excerpts from letters and telegrams recently received by me.

The Speaker. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. SIKES asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith two resolutions adopted by the Argricultural Producers Association of Geary County, Kans., on April 10, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am also interested in the question of increasing the price of crude oil. I am interested because I believe a reasonable increase in price will need be granted in order to provide a sufficient supply for the increased demand of our armed forces. I would like to have the attention, just for a moment, of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], chairman of the Small Business Committee of the House, who has done a great deal of work on this problem in an effort to help solve it.

Does he not think it might be well for a group of Representatives from this House to have a conference with Government officials dealing with this problem together with the President, and have the entire situation properly presented, so there might be a better understanding of the matter and with a view to getting action? I realize the gentleman has been doing considerable work on this problem. Does he not think it would be wise to take such action, in view of the importance of the question?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. PATMAN. There is a resolution pending now, introduced day before yesterday, which is intended to express the sense of the Members of the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House is not in order. I cannot hear the gentlemen; they seem to be carrying on a conversation between themselves.

The SPEAKER. Each of the gentlemen is standing in front of a microphone.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But they are only 6 or 7 feet apart and we cannot hear them.

Mr. PATMAN. When this resolution is passed by the House it will express the sense of the Members of the House on that question.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will what has just taken place appear in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. If it is not deleted by the Member making the statement. Members sometimes make statements on the floor that they do not care to have appear in the RECORD.

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to raise my voice along with my colleagues in pointing out the necessity for some action being taken soon to raise the price of crude oil. If oil, gasoline, and the other products coming from petroleum are not essential to the war effort, then I cannot feel that we have much of a war effort. I cannot agree with the reasoning of Mr. Brown as mentioned by the gentleman from Texas. It is very important, it is highly essential to the economy of our country that oil production go on, that new wells be developed, and that new fields be explored. I hope that some definite, positive, constructive action can be taken soon. The way to provide more oil is to raise the price. That is the way to aid in the discovery and development of new fields also.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there have been so many tears shed here for the oil producer that it is only proper that there be something in the RECORD on behalf of the oil consumer. I have already written to Mr. Prentiss Brown protesting any increase in the price of crude oil that might necessitate an increase in the price of fuel oil to the domestic consumer. In the past 4 or 5 years there has been an increase of 50 percent in the price of domestic fuel oil, which, in the opinion of those of us who use it in the large cities, has not been justified. We hope that Mr. Brown will not respond to any pressure from certain sections of the country to the extent that it would oblige him to increase the price of oil to the domestic consumer.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PETERSON of Florida addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a very significant letter I have received from Mr. Maurice L. Jones, published of the Johnston City (Ill.) Progress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF BITUMINOUS COAL ACT OF 1937

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed·

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. JENKINS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the gentleman from North Carolina is submitting this request in accordance with the decision of the Committee on Ways and Means this morning.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. It has for its purpose the extension of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days.

It will be recalled that on April 21 this House passed a resolution extending the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for 120 days. That resolution went to the other body and was there amended so that it provided for an extension of only 30 days. This resolution is for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the original resolution. The purpose is to give the Bituminous Coal Division permission to proceed unimpaired during this time, while our committee is considering the bill now before our committee and deciding whether or not we should recommend that the Bituminous Coal Act be extended for a period of 2 years or longer.

Mr. JENKINS. I reserved the right to object, Mr. Speaker, for the reason that no other minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means seems to be here at this instant. As I understand, the agreement made in the Committee on Ways and Means this morning was that a rule would be asked for, but I also understand that since that time it has developed that a rule probably is not necessary because it seems to be the opinion that the matter should be taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. FISH and Mr. SABATH rose.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. The Committee on Rules did consider the resolution and reported it, but we have waived the rule by unanimous consent, and the matter is now before this body for decision.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I wanted to make the same explanation as has been made by the gentleman from New York. We have reported a rule on this joint resolution, but in order to save time it has been agreed by nearly everyone who is interested in this needed legislation that we will not call up the rule, provided the request of the gentleman from North Carolina to consider the resolution now is granted.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I want to make this clear, that the understanding in the committee this morning was that this matter would be brought up a little later today. For that reason, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], our ranking Member on the committee, is not present. He is nearby, and will be here soon, but it strikes me that it is hardly necessary to delay this any further. As far as I know, if the gentleman from Minnesota were present, he would agree to the request made, as would also the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]. Under those circumstances, since I am the only minority member of the committee present, I do not think that I should object to the immediate consideration of the matter.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, the bill as it was originally reported out of the Committee on Ways and Means, when we considered the matter 30 days ago, provided for an extension of 90 days, to give the Committee on Ways and Means an opportunity to have hearings, and determine whether it is advisable to continue the Bituminous Coal Act. The 30 days have gone by, and because the Senate amended the act to 30 days, we accepted that amendment. That time is about to expire, and there is very much trepidation on the part of many people in the United States in respect to this act. There is very much doubt as to the advisability of continuing it. I am fearful that if we negative the action which we took and continue this for another 30 days beyond the date which was originally recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means, we are going to create a great deal of opposition to it. I think what the committee should do is to amend the resolution and make it 60 days, which will put it on the basis of the original resolution. I do not think there would be any objection to that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The original resolution passed the House on April 20 provided an extension of 120 days. The Senate amended that to 30 days. The 90 days provided in the present resolution would bring it to 120 days exactly, so that we are making it as it was originally passed by the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I stand corrected. So, the action is to be exactly in accordance with the position as it was originally recommended.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. It is necessary to take the additional 90 days in order to give the committee time to dispose of pending legislation, which will go to conference, and in the meantime hearings might be in order on permanent legislation, and the matter will be disposed of in proper order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. By adopting this resolution now we are not continuing it beyond the period originally recommended in the House.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill does exactly the same thing that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] who just preceded this discussion, objected to in regard to the matter of oil. The purpose of this legislation is to maintain an artificial price on coal for the benefit of the Nation upon the theory that we need the coal.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is to maintain a minimum and not a maximum. That is where the gentleman is wrong in his deduction.

Mr. POAGE. Just one minute. The purpose of the whole bituminous coal set-up is to maintain the price of coal, so that it be sufficient to keep the mines in steady operation. I am not objecting to what the gentleman is trying to do. It is to maintain a maximum price of coal in order that there may be a unified and continuous production of coal, and to prevent a disastrous break in coal prices, such as have occurred in years past, which have resulted in a lessened production of coal. The same thing applies to oil. I am willing to go along with you, to give support to the coal business, but we should also recognize that oil is absolutely essential to the welfare of this Nation, and that the producers of oil, just as the producers of coal, must have reasonable support in prices or else we will be faced with a disastrous failure to produce oil, which is just as essential as coal. All that I am trying to point out is that we need to deal with one industry just as we deal with the other, and that is, deal with them in even-handed justice, and not discriminate any against oil.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) section 19 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 (relating to termination of the act) is amended by striking out "May 24, 1943" and inserting in lieu thereof "August 24, 1943."

(b) Section 3527 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to termination of the bituminous coal taxes) is amended by striking out "May 23, 1943" and inserting in lieu thereof "August 23, 1943."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL BOATS FOR UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 229, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 2581, a bill authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft, district craft, and special boats for the United States Navy, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAMSPECK). The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. Pending that I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why this rule and this bill should not be disposed of in the next 20 or 30 minutes, or even less time than that. This is an open rule making in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 2581, which is a bill authorizing the construction of some million tons of auxiliary vessels for the Navy. Immediately following the adoption of this rule and the bill—and we all know they are going to be adopted—there will be an appropriation bill to be considered, when the money will be appropriated for the building of these ships. In other words, there is a three-way discussion of this matter, and in the final analysis you know and I know that, as much as we Members of Congress would like to keep our hands on the pursestrings and as much as we would like to direct the war, in the final analysis you and I have got to rely upon the judgment of the gentlemen who are the so-called "brass hats," who are directing the warfare. They say we must have these boats, which is a kind of a landing boat, and other auxiliary vessels. You and I do not know whether they have to have them or not, so we must take their word for it in the final analysis. But we do know that we are now planning great invasions of Europe and other Axis-held countries. We know we have to have small craft to make landings upon the shores of the enemy.

That is all there is to this proposition. We might quit there, but some of us like to talk, you know, when we get started. Before I close I just want to pay tribute to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. That might have been another argument that I could have made, because he has asked for it and said that we have it, in addition to the "brass hats." So I pay tribute to him and to the Naval Affairs Committee for the expeditious manner in which they handle their legislation. I also want to compliment the gentleman from Georgia and the committee for bringing in this bill. I said a moment ago that immediately following this there would be an appropriation bill that would appropriate this money. That is the way they have been getting these boats heretofore, but the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, backed up by his loyal membership, says that they should be authorized before the money is appropriated. In other words, to protect the legislative committees that we have heard so much about and to be sure that these matters get ample consideration.

So that this is more or less of an innovation, because we have an authorization for this expenditure, whereas heretofore we have not had it. So I salute the distinguished "admiral" from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], who has been so industrious in this matter.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. I also want to join the gentleman in saluting the distinguished "admiral" from Georgia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COLMER. I yield myself 1 additional minute in order that I may yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER], who always has some constructive suggestions.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I believe both of these measures will be passed unanimously, and I heartily agree with them. The gentleman has covered the matter, to a certain extent, about which I had intended to inquire. We are passing an authorization bill in the House today, and immediately following it we will pass an appropriation bill to cover that authorization, which shows that the House of Representatives, when it is in agreement, can act in a democratic way, according to the rules of the House and the law, and act quickly and with dispatch.

Mr. COLMER. And the House of Representatives is always in agreement when it comes to furthering the war effort.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is another one of the war measures. It comes before the House with a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules. It is just one of those minor bills that only authorizes the small amount of $1,700,000,000 to build barges and district craft for use at home and abroad. Naturally, having been endorsed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and his committee, it should pass the House unanimously and without a great deal of time spent in debate. However, I do believe that a bill that involves that enormous amount of money should not be passed without having some little consideration by the Congress even in wartime.

I hope that the O. W. I. will take some cognizance of this bill and will try to carry the word or send the information to the Nazis, to the Japanese, and to the Fascists that the Congress of the United States, by a practically unanimous vote, have passed a bill providing for 1,000,000 tons, a large amount of that tonnage in landing craft, aimed to land American troops in Europe, in Italy, and in Japan.

Mr. EBERHARTER. And that will land a great many.

Mr. FISH. Well, that ought to land enough. If I have any complaint about this bill, I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and to his distinguished colleagues, it is that it should have come in a year ago. These landing boats should have been built by this time, for the purpose of conducting a major offensive into Europe and the far Pacific by landing troops in Europe and in Japan. We have been in this war 17 months. In the last war the whole war was over in 19 months and finished by a great Allied victory.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In view of the statement made by the distinguished gentleman from New York, and to keep the record straight, I think I should call attention to the fact that heretofore there have been built 1,100,000 tons of landing craft, by direct appropriation, which was not specifically authorized by the Congress.

That is why the amphibious warfare has been able to be carried on in the invasion at Guadalcanal and on the African coast. We are now insisting that in the future they must come to the committee and come to the Congress to get authorization; but they have already build a large number by direct appropriation for which Congress merely authorized the money.

Mr. FISH. Is the gentleman at liberty to inform the House what percentage has already been built?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I could give the gentleman the number privately, but I prefer not to do it publicly.

Mr. FISH. I am perfectly satisfied as long as I know that in voting for this bill it means that we are providing landing barges in enormous quantities in order to carry the war to Italy, to Europe, and to Japan.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. So that the gentleman from New York and the House can understand what we are doing here today is to let the House and the country know that we are building a particular type of boat which heretofore was merely represented in the appropriation bill as dollars and cents; in other words, we are doing in an orderly manner that which we have heretofore done by direct appropriation without authorization.

Mr. FISH. And I hope the gentleman has some means of carrying that information over the radio through the O. W. I. to our enemy countries so that the people there will know what we are doing and that we propose to do our level best to have sufficient landing barges to invade these countries as soon as possible. That is the purpose of the bill, but I think it might undermine their morale if they knew it cost $1,700,000,000. That might put the fear of God into some of these warlike people and help break their morale, which is a very important feature when we are about to invade their countries.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The country and the world can understand that we intend by these boats to open up second fronts wherever it is necessary and wherever the military authorities deem it is important to do so.

Mr. FISH. And I hope it will even go as far as to open up a third front, fourth front, or even fifth and sixth fronts, if necessary.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. When I used the phrase "second fronts" it meant more than one place.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that half this money will be used for harbor craft and for district craft that will not be sent overseas but will be held in this country.

Mr. FISH. It is a part of the war effort. It includes many kinds and categories.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I am not certain.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have the list right here of all the categories.

Mr. FISH. Can the gentleman say what percentage will be district craft?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York I may say that 70 percent of the million tons is for landing craft, 30 percent for district craft. The major portion of it will be used outside of the continental limits of the United States for district craft.

Mr. FISH. So even the district craft, the 30 percent, will largely be used outside continental United States.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I am not certain about that. I challenge that statement, because there are no hearings printed, there is no evidence printed, and the testimony before the committee was not that any of those small craft would be sent out of the United States.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. The distinguished gentleman from Kentucky is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. He was present at the executive sessions that the committee held on this bill. He knows that those figures are accurate, because they were given by Navy Department officials.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I may observe further that this 30 percent of the entire appropriation which goes for district craft goes for craft which are themselves as necessary in their own way to the winning of this war as the actual landing boats. In order to make the record straight on that I just want to read into the RECORD what these district craft consist of.

Mr. FISH. Is that taken from page 2 of the report?

Mr. MOTT. This is taken from page 2 of the report, the first paragraph. I read:

> District craft, including craft of various designs and types which are used in districts, stations, bases, and operating areas at home and abroad. Among such types are tugs of several sizes, oil, gasoline, and water barges, lighters, seaplane wrecking derricks, aircraft rescue boats, aircraft fuel boats, plane rearming launches, plane personnel boats, and bomb target boats, as well as other special designs of craft and boats which are required in war operations at many locations in the continental United States and at practically every advanced base location.

So if we did not have these district craft of course our landing program would be a lopsided one and would not even be workable.

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. There is no opposition to this bill that I know of.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs has recently through its subcommittee referred to some 207 cases of Navy draft deferments and have severely criticised them. I have spoken repeatedly in this House and pointed out that there were 840,000 Government employees eligible for the draft, and I have pleaded with the Committee on Military Affairs to bring in some kind of legislation to get these men out of Government jobs into uniforms where they can be sent to the battle fronts like other Americans of like age instead of holding these soft jobs here in Washington. Yesterday's paper stated that the Under Secretary of the Interior, a gentleman I do not know at all, by the name of Abe Fortas, 32 years of age, has been given a deferment by the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I have never met Mr. Fortas, have never telephoned him, and know very little about him. All I know is that he is 32 years of age and, according to the press, has no children and a wife who is also in the Government service. Now, I am opposed to any deferment except for physical reasons, and I mean any kind of deferment. If we continue to give deferments to men under 38, to men 32 years of age, we will certainly undermine the morale of the people back home. We have a responsibility in this Congress. We voted for the war. We find now that there are 840,000 of these Federal employees of draft age, many of whom are evading military service. I do not see why all of them who are eligible are not put into our armed forces and into uniforms. If they are needed, then we can consider returning them to some positions where they may be essential. But let us not take the higher-ups, the men who were appointed, and certainly not those who are 32 years of age, and ask deferments for them because they may claim to be essential to the Government service. No one is essential to the Government service, including members of the Cabinet. Mr. Fortas can be replaced by an older man or by a woman or someone else who will do the job just as well. If he is needed today he is needed in our armed forces in the greatest war in our history.

Mr. McMURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. McMURRAY. I think it ought to be said here on this floor that Mr. Fortas of Tennessee is in the Government service, that he has been there for some years, that he is recognized by students and teachers of public administration as one of the most outstanding young administrators ever developed anywhere in our country. I happen to know, and I hope Mr. Fortas will forgive me for saying this, that he has wanted to get into the armed services of this country ever since this war started and even before the war started. I happen to know that he wants to wear the uniform of the United States of America. I happen to know that he would immediately give up the top job that perhaps any young man holds in the Government today, he would give it up willingly, and put on the uniform of the United States of America. He did, over the protest of his superiors and his fellow workers, submit his resignation so that he might become a member of the armed forces of the United States. These superiors, whether wisely or unwisely, have made this decision for Mr. Fortas. There is nothing he can do about it. He is an outstanding administrator. He is one of those men of whom we who teach public administration say has a "feeling for the jugular." He knows how to get important things done and his job as Under Secretary of the Interior is an extremely important war job, not in his opinion, not more important than being in the armed forces in his opinion, but in the opinion of his superiors, the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, and the President of the United States, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman who just addressed the House. I do not know anything about Mr. Fortas and I never heard of him before. May I ask the gentleman if there is anything about our Constitution or the laws of our country that forbids a Federal employee from resigning his job if he wants to and joining the armed forces?

Mr. McMURRAY. I know nothing about any laws forbidding his resignation. There is the matter of a sense of obligation which anyone has in this war effort. He has been told by those who direct him, against his own will, let me repeat, to stay on the job. If the President tells one to stay on the job, and he is the Commander in Chief, what does one do?

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is not quite accurate in that. The President is not my Commander in Chief or your Commander in Chief. He is the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States. The man you are talking about is not yet a member of the Army or Navy of the United States; therefore the President is not his Commander in Chief in any legal sense whatever.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Fortas was appointed by the President of the United States and the President of the United States is his chief. Whether you want to add "Commander" or not is immaterial. He is working for the President.

Mr. MOTT. You said his Commander in Chief.

Mr. McMURRAY. Franklin D. Roosevelt is my Commander in Chief, and I am proud of it.

Mr. MOTT. I do not want to quibble, but there is nothing to prevent this gentleman from resigning.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The answer to the gentleman's question is "Yes; anybody can resign, even a Member of Congress."

Mr. MOTT. Yes, and some Members of Congress within the military age have resigned from the Congress and have joined the Army.

Mr. McCORMACK. The answer is that anybody can resign.

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman from Wisconsin made the statement he did, as my remarks are not directed against Mr. Fortas but against deferments for Government officials.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will yield further, I might reverse that also and say that some Members of Congress have resigned from the armed service to come to Congress—at least one has.

Mr. FISH. There is nothing personal in this matter. I am glad the gentleman took the floor to say that Mr. Fortas has a good record and wanted previously to go into the armed services. However, it is men like Mr. Fortas who have the opportunity to set a fine patriotic example to the country by taking his place with other Americans of the same age in our armed forces.

What I am complaining about is that we should give any deferment to anyone at all, particularly to a man who has no children and is only 32 years of age, who is physically fit and should have been in the service long before, and not wait until he gets a letter from the President saying he is needed in the Interior Department. I believe everybody who is physically qualified, of draft age, can best serve his country in the Army or Navy no matter what position he holds. I do not know Mr. Fortas nor his politics. He may have an excellent record, as the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, but why make any exception for any public official? They should be the first to enlist and last to claim or accept deferment. I think deferment should be granted only in case of technicians or airplane designers or engineers, and these politicians, these Government - appointed bureaucrats, every one of them ought to be in the service if they are of draft age. That is what I am complaining about. This is a bad precedent to establish and particularly for public officials and bureaucrats. It will tend to undermine morale. What will the people back in my district and in your district think when their sons are called into the service and they learn that a Government official, 32 years of age, with no children or dependents is deferred while holding a $10,000 position as Under Secretary of the Interior and their sons are drafted into our armed forces at $50 a month?

Mr. HOFFMAN. And his wife.

Mr. FISH. Yes, his wife also, although all I know about that is what I read in the papers. I am told that she is being paid $5,000.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to my friend from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I do not believe the gentleman would like the RECORD to show, as would appear by his statement, that public officials in the Government are inferior or can be so easily replaced in every instance, and that their superior efforts are not vital and important to the war effort.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Fortas has held his present position for a comparatively short time. I do not believe any public official is indispensable, from the President right on down, including Members of Congress. I do not believe any bureaucrat is indispensable. And certainly I do not believe anybody who is 32 years of age is indispensable. If he is as good as these gentlemen say he is, he ought to be in the Army or Navy. Put him in uniform, and then, if he is needed, and proves to be indispensable, he can be sent where he is most needed.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I understand very well from the gentleman's statement that this is not a personal matter between him and me, but I should like to make it clear at this point that this person under consideration happens to be working directly under the President of the United States, who happens to be the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States, and he is subject to the President's direction in time of war. It seems to me, as a matter of patriotism, he is subject to the decisions of his Commander in Chief, and he would be only too happy if his Commander in Chief would say, "Mr. Fortas, I prefer to see you in North Africa."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to all these deferments and especially to letting Federal employees stay in the Government service who are 32 years of age without dependents simply because they are good men, because they are needed, or because the President says so. They can perform just as good or better service in our armed forces, where young and able men are needed. President Roosevelt is establishing a bad precedent for the whole country and perhaps the President himself is the one we should criticize and not Mr. Fortas. Mr. Speaker, the Congress should pass a law providing that no one should be deferred, of draft age, if he is physically fit. My point is that it is a bad policy to defer any public official, as it sets a deplorable precedent.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. The President is not asking that we place in a deferred status public officials; the President has not asked that public officials be deferred.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to my distinguished friend from Tennessee, who served with distinction in the last World War.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from New York will agree that every man should serve where he can be of best service to his country, and if those who are in position to judge feel that this particular individual, Mr. Fortas, can be of greater service to this country and greater service to the war effort in the important work which he is now doing, and he is doing important work, then would not the President be justified in having Mr. Fortas remain in his present position?

Mr. FISH. The answer to the gentleman's question is that I am against any deferments whatever. I say, put him in the Army right along with other men and then, if his services are absolutely essential, send him back in uniform at $50 per month. I do not believe in any discrimination because of politics, race, color, or creed for any public official of draft age and without dependents

The gentleman realizes that we now have some 840,000 Government employees under 38. I do not know Mr. Fortas, and I am willing to accept everything that has been said about him, but there are still 840,000 men of draft age in the Federal Government service and if we begin to give deferments, where are we going to stop? That is the question.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. But we have set up a system and the gentleman is speaking in reference to a general policy, is he not?

Mr. FISH. I am opposed to granting deferments except in the case of physical disability. They should not be granted for political reasons. No public official or bureaucrat from Members of the Cabinet down are indispensable. All of them can be replaced. I submit it is the duty of every one of them to come out of the Government dugouts and set an example to all other Americans of draft age. There must be no favoritism, politics, or special privilege in connection with the drafting of American youth. It may be it is the President we should criticize. If so the responsibility is his. It certainly will not promote public morale to have the President grant deferments to his official family when the Nation is being told that we have not sufficient manpower without drafting fathers and men with dependents

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, let me give just a word of explanation, with the hope that it may arouse a little curiosity. The special order I had yesterday and that is now in the RECORD required a great deal of time in its preparation. It is well documented, so that the conclusions arrived at will be very difficult to get around. In that special order I attempted to prove, and I did to my own satisfaction, that the Socialist program of a something-for-nothing philosophy that is contained in the cradle-to-grave or womb-to-tomb security allusion found in the report of the National Resources Planning Board permeates the whole New Deal program. I offer as exhibits the leading new dealers and use their own words to prove my point. I recommend it as preferred reading to the Members of the House.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I noticed a very good account of the gentleman's speech in the morning papers. I also noticed that the gentleman gives credit for this cradle-to-grave plan to a certain lady.

Mr. MASON. Dr. Eveline Burns.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman believe she is solely responsible for the plan, or are other members of the National Resources Planning Board also responsible for it?

Mr. MASON. No. If the gentleman will read my speech in the RECORD he will find that the report is just one sample of an effort by a group of people in the Government service to bring about that result. I show that while she did that job, behind her is a whole group that is working for the same cause.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman believe Mr. Delano subscribed to the plan?

Mr. MASON. The gentleman does not believe that Mr. Delano subscribed, because Mr. Delano's whole life history proves that he does not believe in any socialistic philosophy. He has had a remarkable career as a practical man at the head of a railroad.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

By unanimous consent, a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 72]

Arnold	Boren	Case
Balwin, Md.	Buckley	Cochran
Baldwin, N. Y.	Buffett	Cole, N. Y.
Barden	Burdick	Culkin
Barry	Byrne	Cullen
Bell	Cannon, Fla.	Dies
Douglas	Judd	Reece, Tenn.

Holmes, Mass.	Pfeifer	Worley
Horan	Philbin
Jennings	Pracht

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 337 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today and include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Mrs. Mary Cain, of Summit, Miss., addressed to both branches of the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday at my request permission was granted the Commissioner from Puerto Rico to extend his own remarks in the RECORD. I am now informed that those remarks exceed the limit, taking up approximately two and one-third pages of the RECORD at a cost of $105. I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding this fact the remarks may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL BOATS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2581) authorizing the acquisition and conversion of construction of certain landing craft, district craft, and special boats for the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2581), with Mr. RICHARDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill is presented to the House and the committee by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY], who will explain the bill, and to whom I now yield 10 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to authorize the construction of 1,000,000 tons of landing and district craft for the Navy, and to authorize the appropriation of the necessary funds. The estimated cost is $1,700,000,000.

This is the first bill which has ever been reported for such ships as such. Prior to the war, we had no landing ships, and only a relatively small number of district craft. These were principally small craft assigned to naval districts. They included a few landing craft for training in landing operations. The construction of such district craft was not made the subject of special legislative authorization; instead, they were included in the appropriation "Miscellaneous Bureau of Ships."

When the war began, the demand for the special types which this bill authorizes was large and immediate. Ships and craft of special designs, known and classified as landing ships and landing craft of various types, were required to mount our amphibious operations. Specially designed craft and boats of many types were needed to equip and to serve our expanding bases, both at home and abroad. These are classified as district craft, but they embrace many new types and are not confined to those used in established naval districts.

The number to be required in the various types could not be forecast definitely, because that depended on the number of operations to be undertaken, the losses to be experienced in these operations, and in training, the rate at which advanced bases were to be established, and other factors, including the fact that the Navy is the sole source of supply to the Army, and a partial supply to our allies, of amphibious craft.

The Navy Department proceeded under these conditions with the construction of landing and district craft. The general directive in this construction was provided by the combined Chiefs of Staff, and construction went ahead in accordance with the requirements of the tactical situation and the development of our bases, both land and air.

Along shores bordered by the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and the Mediterranean Sea, these ships and craft have taken their part. The attacking forces, their guns, tanks, and other equipment, have moved ashore swiftly and successfully. In the 17 months since Pearl Harbor, we have gained in experience in the design and use of landing craft, and they have proved their value.

Most of the larger landing ships that have been laid down were charged to the 1,799 Vessels Act of February 6, 1942—

Public Law 440, Seventy-seventh Congress. This authority is now substantially exhausted. The smaller landing craft were constructed against maintenance appropriations for the Bureau of Ships. This placed an extremely heavy drain on those appropriations, a drain not contemplated when such appropriations were made. The construction of district craft, such as tugs and lighters, imposed a similar heavy and unforeseen drain on the Bureau of Ships.

In order to restore the necessary maintenance funds for the Bureau of Ships, the Navy Department requested an appropriation for the purpose when the Supplemental Naval Appropriations Act, 1943, was before the Congress. This request was questioned in committee and was the subject of comment on the floor of the House, particularly on the score that the construction of district craft should be undertaken only on the authority of legislation specifically authorizing appropriations for naval projects of this size and character.

In the opinion of your committee, the legislative procedure which was followed in the past year should not be continued. The established and orderly procedure is for legislation authorizing appropriations for naval construction first to be enacted and to be followed by appropriations. The Navy Department has agreed that this procedure should hereafter be followed, particularly when projects reach the size covered by the bill now before the House.

Under the authorizations and appropriations heretofore made, the Navy has laid down 1,100,000 tons of landing and district craft to cost, in the aggregate, $1,900,000,000. The bill provides for another million tons of such craft, and the Navy Department has estimated that $1,700,000,000 will be required for the purpose.

These ships and smaller craft are of many types and designs. The landing craft range in size from the small rubber boat to the landing ship dock. They include all types designed for amphibious operations, except transports. District craft include such items as tugs of various sizes, oil, gasoline, and water barges, lighters, seaplane wrecking derricks, aircraft rescue boats, aircraft fuel boats, plane rearming launches, plane personnel boats, and bomb target boats. These and other types are needed in operations at many locations in the continental United States and at practically every advanced base.

The smaller units of this program are built quickly. The larger units require a longer time for construction but generally not as long a time as combatant vessels. The numbers required are not subject to exact prediction. Representatives of the Navy Department stated to the Committee that requirements for vessels authorized by this bill are necessarily subject to change, in types, details, and other respects, as a result of war developments, and operations and losses. Your committee is satisfied such changes will occur and that it would be unwise to attempt to specify the particular types or the numbers of each type to be authorized.

The Navy Department's estimate is that this bill will provide a sufficient tonnage of these craft for the next 12 months. This estimate is predicated, among other things, on the experience so far gained in the war. Your committee believes that the estimate is as satisfactory as the uncertainties of the general situation will permit.

None of the types covered by the bill are substitutes for the private craft which the Navy took over in large numbers following the outbreak of the war. That was done because the private craft were then available, and were needed and useful in particular duties, mainly of the shore patrol type. Such private craft cannot serve the purposes for which the craft authorized by the bill are designed.

None of the craft covered by the bill are included in the naval auxiliary vessels authorized by the bill H. R. 1563, which recently passed this House. The present bill provides for two additional types of vessels, namely, landing and district craft, and these types have not previously been provided for specifically. As introduced, the bill provided for a third class, namely, special boats. The committee was advised that the general classification "district craft" includes special boats, and for that reason deleted from the bill the reference to special boats.

The types of craft provided for by this bill will provide the means for speed and efficiency in naval and joint operations. Some of them may be engaged in shore attacks, in new landings to come. Your committee believes this country will deny its fighting forces nothing that they need and that is within its power to produce or supply. The ships provided by this bill are vitally needed, they can be supplied, and the committee, therefore unanimously recommends that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I say that in the appropriation bill that was reported to the House either yesterday afternoon or this morning provision is made to make available the money authorized in the program under consideration now.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I thank my chairman for that contribution. Mr. Chairman, there has already been constructed 1,100,000 tons of landing and district craft, by the Navy. I reiterate that because of the statement of the gentleman from New York to the effect that he felt the Navy was a little tardy in coming before the Congress for this program.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman realizes that in modern war, especially the type of war carried on by the vessels the gentleman is recommending, oil is a very much needed commodity.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not intrude any other matter into the debate on this bill. I wish to confine my remarks to the bill itself.

Mr. PATMAN. But this is germane.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Not at the moment. The gentleman has some other motive in his mind. He is trying to advocate an increase in the price of oil. I am talking about the enactment of the bill authorizing the construction of a million tons of landing craft and district craft necessary for the operation of the war, and that is the only thing that the Naval Affairs Committee is recommending to the House, the speedy enactment into law of this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I might say to the gentleman that the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations in justification for the landing craft and other similar craft incorporated in the presentation makes this legislation imperative before the appropriation of funds necessary to carry on the work. I compliment the committee on the splendid work it has done in a legislative way and further say to the chairman and other members of the committee that as long as I am the chairman of the Navy subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations we will look to the gentleman's committee for proper authorizations. We are not interested in any endeavor to legislate on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman and I assure the gentleman from California that the members of the committee appreciate his cooperation.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman will recognize that before we can make an invasion of the continent or any of the islands in the Pacific, the Navy must have the type of craft which this bill will produce.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Yes. This provides not only for naval operations but for joint operation of the Navy and the Army in carrying on the war. We had an executive session on the bill, and many things were told to our committee that we would like to give to the House, but I am confident the House will accept the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. I do not know whether this is a proper question, but is the gentleman at liberty to tell the House how many ships this will provide for?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Not exactly, and I doubt if the Navy Department could say how many would be constructed, because its provisions are flexible.

Mr. DONDERO. I join in my colleague's comment on the necessity for speedy action, and I compliment the gentleman and his committee.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania has already told you, this bill comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs with its unanimous approval. I have no doubt it will receive the unanimous support of the House.

The reason landing craft of the kind provided in this legislation is necessary is that, of course, we are carrying on a war beyond our shores, and all operations involve landings, as is, of course, well known to everyone who has followed recent developments in the war. Boats of this kind were used in Africa. They have been used in the South Pacific. In today's paper there is a dispatch from Tokyo quoting a Japanese broadcast to the effect that yesterday Americans landed on Attu Island in force, that island which has been bombed many times within the past few weeks. While we do not know anything about the details it may be supposed that landing craft similar to those provided in this bill were used in that operation.

We hope before long, with the aid of these craft, that landings may be made every place in the world where landings are necessary and that the ships provided for in this bill may bring the war to a complete and victorious conclusion at the very earliest possible date.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT].

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as far as the landing craft carried in this bill is concerned, I am 100 percent for that provision. But we have here an example of the same thing that has been happening in the Navy Department in the last several bills that have been sent to this Congress. They have a lot of stuff in here that should not be allowed. The record and testimony before our committee does not justify the placing of those other items in the bill.

If you will look at the bill you will see it provides for landing craft, for district craft, and for special boats. Special boats was a little too far for our committee to go and we struck that out in committee. I made a fight to strike out the district boats, which will cost $800,000,000 in this bill. One of the district boats was a yacht that cost $80,000. I challenge any member of the committee or the chairman of the committee to show this Congress what that yacht was to be used for.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Not at this time. We had a closed session of the committee. Why should the doors of my committee be locked when we are talking about harbor boats in our harbors? Yachts? Of course, I know it is spring. I know the urge that these naval officers have to take a pleasure ride on a yacht. A Member of this House a few minutes ago told me he was over in Baltimore a short time ago and he wanted to go out to see Mars, the big airplane. In riding on this big, beautiful boat he said, "Does the Navy own this craft?" The officer said, "Yes, the Navy owns this boat." "Where did they get it?" "Why, they bought it from me. I sold them the boat and then had the Navy commission me to look after my own boat."

Now, that is what I am appealing to you about today. I am going to offer an amendment to strike out of this bill the authorization for district craft, which will cost this country $800,000,000. The evidence before our committee does not substantiate the need for those boats. Let our committee go back and see what they need.

The good admiral who appeared before our committee admitted that they bought thousands of these little boats. Oh, it is quite different in November and December than it is in May. They take the boat in May and it is all painted up nice. They have every luxury besides musical instruments, and they operate the boat all summer. When cold weather comes they simply lay it up. Hundreds of our boats have been frozen in the Great Lakes and destroyed in the wintertime, because they do not look after them. There is not the same urge then. There is not the same appealing motive that moves them to go fishing and sailing on the blue waters at that time of the year.

Now, what has that got to do with landing craft? Not a thing in the world. I beg of you now, when the men of this country are being taxed until their shirts are being taken off their backs, let us not pour any more money down a rat hole by furnishing every naval officer with a yacht to sail up and down the coast and to fish in. I appeal to you.

The evidence did not last 15 or 20 minutes before our committee. I was doing my best to find out something about it. I asked about the Astor yacht. Was there any printed testimony? No; no testimony printed. I asked about the Dodge yacht. They had an organ on that yacht that would have sold for plenty of money. It has been wrecked. I asked about the old ship, down at Norfolk. A fellow told me, a naval officer, that they paid $85,000 for that boat. They took it out and spent $65,000 repairing it and then turned around and junked it.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FULMER. Of course, we have the WAAC's and the WAVES and the SPARS, and perhaps it is necessary to have these yachts now.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Of course, that is another story. But I appeal to you now—in a few days the tax bill will be back here. The lieutenant, the ensign, or some of these other officers would not be able to operate one of these boats. What do you do? They go out here, get them a boat, and they have to go and get some fellow, a mechanic, to operate that boat, when the mechanics are so badly needed in industry and when there is such manpower shortage. It takes a mechanic to operate a yacht, to keep the motor repaired. It takes several thousand men to look after the yachts the Navy operates.

It seemed to be the attitude of the men down in the Navy Department that this is their Navy. We ought not to say a word about anything they do, it is their Navy. Down in Kentucky all this time my people have been under the impression that it is our Navy and not their Navy. I do not think you can be charged with being disloyal to your country, not ready to defend it, when you oppose such things. Landing boats?

Yes; let them have all the landing boats they can possibly use; give them a billion dollars to build landing boats. But $800,000 for pleasure craft? No; no; do not do it. I shall offer an amendment that will take those items out of the bill. I think they ought to be taken out of the bill. Our committee has not heard any testimony. I asked Admiral Cochran:

"How many boats have you bought since war was declared?"

"I do not know; I have no record."

"Have you bought thousands?"

"Well, I guess so."

Thousands of them. They bought thousands of them, smashed them up, broke them up; first rented them and leased them, and then had to buy them, because when the owners saw them come back dilapidated and injured they said they did not want them back, that the Government would have to buy them; and the taxpayers of the country are now called on to put up another $800,000 in addition to what you have already soaked into this program to buy district craft, harbor craft, yachts at $80,000 a throw. There is the picture.

It is my duty, and I have made this determination, as long as I am a member of this committee I am going to bring these things to your attention; then you can do as you please about them, but as far as I am concerned I want to give the Navy every boat, every submarine, every torpedo, every plane that is needed, but I do not want to give them a single thing that is not needed when this country is bankrupt, when you cannot pay interest on your bonds.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I do not yield.

When your bond sales are falling off, then to come down here and ask for $800,000 on this record with no printed testimony. Strike it out. Strike it out, and let this committee bring a bill in here for district craft so we can have hearings, and let them justify the expenditure of this money. That is all I am asking for at this time. My amendment is a reasonable amendment. I am offering it for the protection of your constituents, and I believe that I stand here justified in my opposition to the district craft included in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

INCREASE PRICE OF OIL TO AID IN WAR EFFORT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully disagree with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that the type of fuel that would be used in this vessel is not a material subject for discussion—it is. May I invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that the price of oil is not the question involved, the question of putting money in people's pockets is not involved in this. The gentleman from Pennsylvania suggested a while ago that the Navy must have this type of equipment in order successfully to prosecute the war. This type of equipment would be worthless unless you had oil as a fuel to use. Oil therefore is very necessary. Did you know, Mr. Chairman—and I want the Members to think about this seriously—that we are using our oil supply five times as fast as we are discovering new fields? Think that over. Did you know that we have sent to foreign battlefields 80 times—not eight—80 times as much oil during the first year of this war as we sent during the first year of World War No. 1? Did you know that we are using more oil today than ever before in history and that 60 percent of every cargo going across the sea is oil? That should impress us with the great importance of oil.

I am not for a price increase solely to help oil operators, that is not it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania should be just as enthusiastic for a price increase as anyone, because he is interested in winning the war. We cannot win this war without oil and we cannot get the necessary oil unless we have new discoveries.

Did you know that it is going to take the discovery of at least one major oil field a week from now on in order for us successfully to carry on this war? That is exactly right, and we are not discovering them; yet as I said, we are using oil five times as fast as we are discovering it. This should be sufficient to put the gentleman on notice that the whole war effort is in jeopardy and we are facing not only national disaster but the possibility of even losing the war on account of failure to give that incentive to discovering the oil that is necessary to properly and effectively carry on this war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of 1,000,000 tons of landing craft, district craft, and special boats, of such size, type, and design as he may consider necessary and best suited for the conduct of amphibious operations, for service to the fleet and shore-based forces, and for naval districts, stations, bases, and operating areas at home and abroad, such craft to be in addition to all auxiliary vessels or craft heretofore authorized.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the comma, and insert "and" and after the word "craft" in the same line strike out "and special boats."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky: Page 1, line 5, after the word "craft", strike out "and district craft."

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment I stated a short time ago I would offer to separate landing craft from district craft. As I told you a Member of this body came to me a few minutes ago and said that he went to Baltimore and rode out on a boat; that the boat had been bought by the Navy, and that the Navy turned around and commissioned the owner to operate his own boat. As was suggested to me a moment ago, I do not know whether they bought the boat to get the man or whether they bought the man to get the boat. Is that not a ridiculous situation?

If it were not out of line, I would like to give you the name of the Member who went over there. I think there were three or four in his party who went over there and if he comes on the floor maybe he will let me give you his name.

Anyway our harbors are filled full of yachts, with hundreds of mechanics who are needed at other places, burning up critical materials, burning up fuel oil operating in these harbors with these little boats, many used at the whims of the officers in charge.

There is no evidence here to support the need for such craft. I do not see how this is a military secret or why we should not be permitted to know how many of these yachts they have already bought. They have bought already thousands of them. Now they want to come along and put $800,000,000 more in them. Is there any military secret that would prevent our committee from having open hearings and having testimony that they need these craft? I would be the first one on the committee to come in here and ask you Members to endorse the program if I were convinced they needed them. I do not believe it is a military secret. I think it is more of a Navy secret.

You cannot take everything from the Navy and swallow it a hundred percent. I want to tell you something else. The other day my good chairman—I suppose he thought he was doing me a favor—introduced a bill in my name. I did not know about it until my secretary came to me and said, "The chairman of the committee has introduced a bill in your name." When I went over to the committee the chairman said, "You come around and get in the chair. This is your bill." I did not know it was my bill, but I went around and got in the chair. Then one of the members said, "This is a bad bill." I had never seen it before. But the Navy Department had sent it up here. Everybody down in the Navy Department was for it. I looked at it myself and I said, "It is a bad bill." Then the chairman looked at it and he said, "This is a bad bill," and other members of the committee said it was a bad bill. Then we proceeded to kill it, a measure that had been drafted and approved by the Navy Department. They are not infallible, they are humar beings, so do not turn them loose to spend money everywhere they want to spend it. One lieutenant will see another lieutenant with a nice shiny boat and he will turn around and want one like it. He will go out in the harbor and see one belonging to an individual and he will say, "I will get that and I will make Bill look like 30 cents." When one buys a boat that justifies another one buying a boat. If a fellow out in San Francisco sees a boat he wants to buy, he will go and buy it, and if a fellow up in Seattle sees a boat he likes, he will go and buy it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What saving would the gentleman's amendment effect?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. They say there will be a billion dollars here for landing craft and I am leaving that in the bill. Let them have that if they need it. But they say $800,000,000 will be for district craft. Well, when they say $800,000,000 I multiply that by two. It will be a billion and a half dollars by the time they get through buying yachts up and down the coast and along the shores of the Great Lakes. Their estimate is $800,000,000, according to their own testimony.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. What is meant by "district craft"?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Craft used in the harbors, rivers, and on the Great Lakes.

Now, there you are. There is the program of $800,000,000. If they need it, let them come back to the committee and justify it. They have not justified it so far. They were before our committee only a few minutes, and the fellow who appeared did not know much about it. He said he did not know how many they had already bought. He admitted they bought thousands. He admitted some of them had been wrecked; he admitted some of the boats had rotted; and he admitted they had been cheated. If you strike this out, we can find out how much they need, then let them have that, whatever they need, and no more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT].

Mr. Chairman, I trust this committee will vote down overwhelmingly the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

If there is any Member of this House who is very much confused on this question, it is our good friend from Kentucky. It is true the Navy has purchased a great many yachts.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Will the gentleman tell the House how many boats and how many yachts have been purchased?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; I will.

It is true the Navy has bought a great many boats, a great many fishing boats, and a great many yachts, and a great many other types of boats. Every one of these boats that the Navy has bought has been used and is being used for patrolling the coast to combat submarines. Not a single one of them is being used for harbor purposes. Let us see what supporting this amendment will do to cripple the operation of planes and endanger the lives of our sailors. Here is the testimony.

It is true, as the gentleman has said, the bill was heard in executive session and should have been heard in executive session. It is true that a great many of them are heard in executive session, but we always have a stenographic report.

Let me read to you from the testimony of Admiral Cochrane:

> It is impossible to visualize a properly operating naval air base or station, with many valuable planes operating over the water, which does not have—
> (a) Aircraft rescue boats to rescue personnel of planes which may crash offshore; and
> (b) Seaplane wrecking derricks to salvage available planes or portions of planes which may crash offshore.

And listen to this:

> (c) Means for getting crews, ammunition, and fuel to seaplanes without requiring them to be hauled up on the beach in case of need for replenishment.
> It is difficult to visualize a harbor into which vessels of the fleet are supposed to come for replenishment of their fuel, supplies, ammunition, etc., if there are no means of getting these materials to the ships. Those places in the world where any naval vessel can get alongside a wharf and have fuel oil and water hoses connected directly with the ship, and can have ammunition and food loaded into the ship by hand or by plane, are very few. In every other spot where ships replenish their supplies, it is necessary to have craft suitable for transporting fuel oil, gasoline, fresh water, provision, ammunition, and general stores to the ships.

That is what the bill is for, in this particular item, which the learned gentleman from Kentucky proposes to strike out.

How could you operate from Guadalcanal, where there is not a single pier, unless for this type of boat?

Mr. Chairman, I will not trespass upon the intelligence of this committee with any more discussion of the amendment.

May I say, some reference was made to the yacht acquired from Mr. Vincent Astor. His yacht was acquired by the Government for $1 a year and is used in submarine warfare, and every other yacht the Government uses is for that or a similar purpose.

It is true that the Naval Affairs Committee has criticized the Navy in the amount of money that we have had to pay, in some instances. Here is the report filed by the Naval Affairs Committee criticizing the Navy Department for the amount of money that was paid, and the only member who refused to concur in that report and refused to sign it was the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is it not also true that the Navy has been very vigorously criticized for not making ample payment for the boats that have been taken over?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; certainly. Mr. Chairman, if you do not want the water, if you do not want the ammunition, if you do not want the fuel to go to these ships that cannot get in to the shore, then vote in favor of this amendment and say that if they cannot come up to the pier they cannot have their supplies and their services.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members may not be influenced by the enthusiasm of the gentleman from Kentucky and do anything which would embarrass this bill insofar as district craft is concerned.

As was stated by our distinguished chairman, the yacht which the gentleman from Kentucky referred to has nothing whatever to do with this bill. It is not included in it, it is not included in the category of district craft.

It is true that at the beginning of the war both the Army and the Navy were obliged to buy up every kind and any kind of small craft that they could get, and they used them in patrol duty.

As to the nature of these district craft, the different types of which are named on page 2 of the report, I may say that all of the types are needed at several naval stations. While this debate was going on, I received telephone information that the Secretary of the Navy had approved a sum of $600,000 for implementing the naval station at Astoria, Oreg., where 50 airplanes and some carriers at the Portland yard will be outfitted, and their crews trained and sent to sea this year—50 of them from that one station at Astoria, Oreg. In conditioning these boats, in training their crews, landing of the boats, and taking off from the carriers, every type of district craft referred to in this report will be used. I may say further that not one naval station, either in the continental United States or in the outlying areas, could be operated without having these district craft. They are just as important as the main landing ships that are provided for in this bill.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that every time we establish a naval operating base, we have to duplicate the district craft that is now supplied in the various naval bases up and down the east and west coasts of this country?

Mr. MOTT. We do, and one of the purposes of the bill is to provide for obtaining more of these craft, so we will not have to duplicate and so we will not have to borrow from one station to supply another.

You recall, of course, that when the Aleutian attack first came at Dutch Harbor they almost had to rob every naval air station on the Pacific coast of their aircraft for awhile. We have got new aircraft since then and these stations have been implemented.

This is an extremely important part of the bill, and I am sure no one will vote to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky: On page 2, line 2, after the word "authorized", strike out the period and add a colon and the following: "Provided, That no vessel, boat, or craft shall be purchased, leased, or rented that was constructed or built prior to January 1, 1943."

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my chairman did not tell you what kind of report it was he said I would not sign that was reported last year as to war profiteering. I would not sign the report because it left Chip Roberts out. The evidence showed that Chip Roberts had gotten $900,000 out of only a few projects, not including the ones he has gotten since that time. It left out the profits that had been made by Admiral Harris, a retired officer, former Chief of Yards and Docks, who was drawing retired pay from the Government—a pension from the Government—and at the same time getting contracts from the Government. It left out this man Kahn, who has been paid enormous sums. I would not sign the report because it was too weak.

It reminded me of an incident that happened last fall when I went home. Some of my good friends came over to go hunting with me. I took my bird dog out to show them how good he would hunt. The first dive out of the box he ran into a big covey of birds and scared them up and they flew away. We could not even find them. I said, "I'll fix old Bob." I took him around behind a few bushes and I took him by the ear and I made him yell; and I went back and I said, "He won't do that any more. I gave him a good licking." The boys said, "Yes, we watched you. You whipped him with a weed."

That was the trouble with the report that I would not sign. It seemed to me to be whipping fellows that had profiteered with a weed, and I would not sign it. If I am to be condemned for that, I will take great pleasure in receiving the condemnation.

Now, I have offered an amendment that I know will be approved. Admiral Cochrane suggested this amendment in committee. He suggested that no craft be rented or leased that was built prior to January 1, 1943. That will keep them from going around and buying these old rotten boats. That will see that we get new boats; that we will get our money's worth on this proposition. I am certain that no member of the committee will oppose this, when it was suggested by Admiral Cochrane before our committee.

If we have to spend $800,000,000 for yachts, let us at least get new ones. The boys will like them much better. Now, I hope we will follow the suggestion of the admiral that suggested the language of this amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the trouble about the gentleman's amendment is that the Navy Department would be precluded from acquiring or purchasing any ships that might be suitable or available or that might have been constructed by the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration. We have the understanding with the Navy Department that they are not going to buy any ships unless they are absolutely essential and necessary and meet a certain military requirement. They propose to build as fast as possible nearly everything referred to in this bill, but it might so happen that they find a ship, a tug, or a small boat that has been built by the Maritime Commission that it is necessary to buy. Therefore, it would be a short-sighted policy to say that you cannot buy anything that was built prior to January 1, 1943.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Did not Admiral Cochrane suggest that amendment, in substance?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No, the Admiral says this, and the testimony is right on this table. The Admiral said that it would be unthinkable to go out and buy old ships and not build practically everything that is called for in this bill, but he did point out, as the committee pointed out, that we should have the right to take them from the Maritime Commission if the Maritime Commission has them. What is the use of building one in this emergency if you can go out and buy one that will meet the Navy's requirements? But the committee can understand that there is no intention on the part of the Navy to go out and buy any ship unless it is properly constructed and necessary for Navy needs. Therefore, it would hamstring the Navy and would be a too narrow interpretation of fixing a statute to say that they must have something built since January 1, 1943.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire only to reinforce the observation made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], when he discussed the very great need for most careful consideration by the Congress, and by all agencies of our Administration, of the necessity for providing additional oil reserves for the successful prosecution of the war.

I think, even in a discussion of this type, it is well for us to realize that this conflict is being fought on wheels and wings. We are engaged in a mechanized battle. We, in this country, are faced with an acute shortage of oil reserves with which to fuel the planes, tanks, and other units. We realize that today we are consuming approximately 30,000,000 barrels of crude oil each week, yet we are not discovering that crude oil by one-fifth the amount necessary to keep pace with the extreme demands upon us. This may lead to tragic ends. For example, let us consider the raid within the last 36 hours on Duisburg, Germany, engaged in by 1,000 planes of the Royal Air Force. In that one bombing there were consumed more than 1,000,000 gallons of high octane gasoline, and it takes 4,000,000 gallons of crude oil to produce that amount of fuel. These raids will increase in frequency and intensity in the summer and autumn. We will need more and more oil production—yet as of this date no real effort has been made to correct a situation hampering our war effort in this phase.

I think we should all recognize that the Coordinator of our Oil Administration, Secretary Ickes, is absolutely correct when he says that we must stimulate the production of crude oil in this country, and do it now. I regret exceedingly that the Office of Price Administration apparently closes its eyes to the fact that this is a mobile war, and that we must have the crude oil with which to make effective that mechanization.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The present administration of the subject has in no way clarified the situation in which we find oil producing wells in California checked down to the extent that we are losing their productivity, because of the control effected by one agency of the Government.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is correct.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Why is that?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Apparently we find a condition existing where the Government, in conflict within its own agencies, will not stimulate the production of oil so necessary to carry forward the war.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the gentleman from West Virginia and I concur in them. However, I presume the gentleman does not contend that this should be written into this legislation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Oh, no. The only reason I presented the matter just now is because of the observation of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] on the subject matter, which so impressed me that I felt I ought to reinforce his views.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. The witnesses before the Rivers and Harbors Committee testified within the last 18 months, that oil wells in Texas have been checked down to 20 percent of their productivity, and for that reason the supply of oil was not being produced up to full extent.

Mr. PATMAN. That question was gone into thoroughly, and taken into consideration by Mr. Ickes. Transportation and other problems are involved in that. Take, for instance, this large 24-inch pipe line. It will not serve all of the oil wells, and some oil wells will still be choked down, because we do not have the transportation. That question has been gone into and given consideration by Mr. Ickes in his recommendation.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the impression left by the statement made by the gentleman from West Virginia is that the question of supply of oil or the resources of surplus oil are cut down, and that we are not producing enough to meet the requirements for oil.

Mr. PATMAN. That is correct.

Mr. RANDOLPH. What I said is true.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fine statement of the Speaker of the House, made on this floor some weeks ago, in which he pointed out that it is the small independent oil producer who suffers so much when the price of oil is down. He has no profit from refining and distribution and the sale of gasoline and other byproducts of crude oil, when they must operate at a loss in the production of crude oil.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is a correct statement. The price of crude oil has not advanced in 5 years. This is an important matter, and I hope the House will concentrate its attention on it, for a failure to act has implications which could well stay, for months, the ultimate time of victory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the special subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs investigating draft practices, of which I am a member, is rather impatiently awaiting further developments in the case of Abe Fortas. Mr. Fortas, the heretofore little known Under Secretary of the Interior, is the young man who has recently achieved considerable prominence by reason of the strenuous efforts of his chief, Interior Secretary Ickes, and President Roosevelt, to keep him out of military service.

Secretary Ickes, it will be remembered, is the Federal official who arbitrarily told our committee that he had asked for deferment for too few, rather than too many, of his employees; and who stated that he intended hereafter to request more, rather than fewer, deferments in his department. Following this stated policy, Mr. Ickes had made a quite vigorous case for his Under Secretary. Not only has his boss gone to bat for Mr. Fortas, the President has gone out of his way to state his belief that Fortas is of more value in the war effort as general handy man in the Department of the Interior than he could be in military service. All of this despite the fact that there is apparently nothing in Mr. Fortas' training and brief administrative experience to indicate that he could fill this job of questionable importance any better, if indeed as well, as hundreds of more experienced men well over the age for military service.

I am perfectly willing to accept at face value the report that Mr. Fortas is ready, for his own part, to resign his civilian post and offer himself for induction. In fact, he is to be commended for this attitude and to be consoled for the official attitude which stands in his way to embarrass him. The fault lies not with Mr. Fortas, or other young men in government who may be caught in this difficult situation, but with the administration policy in such cases.

Secretary Ickes' position in the matter, while understandable, is hardly in keeping with spirit which we should expect from government, which certainly ought to set an example of sacrifice for the rest of the country.

As regrettable as is the position taken by Secretary Ickes in this instance, however, the President's action in the matter is even less excusable. President Roosevelt is the highest authority in all draft classification questions. He literally is the court of last appeal. As such, it is unthinkable that he attempts, as he has in the Fortas case, to circumvent regular selective service routine, and to prejudge a case before it comes to him in the regular order of appeal. Whether he so intended it or not, his statement on this case can hardly be interpreted as anything but an attempt to direct the decision of the local draft board which is supposed to determine Mr. Fortas' status.

Mr. Fortas is a young man 32 years of age. He is married, without any children, and his wife an attorney, is employed in the Department of Justice at $5,600 a year. His duties in the Department of the Interior are purely administrative, and innumerable men may be found beyond the draft age to fill that position. I resent the action of the President and the Secretary of the Interior in denying this man the right to enter the service.

Mr. FISH. Does not the gentleman think, even if he is a member of the Cabinet, that it is his duty to enlist as an example to the country?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Certainly. Generally speaking, of course, I believe that the responsibility of an officeholder or a public employee should be measured in exactly the same way as though he were an ordinary citizen in private life. If he is of draft age and physically fit, if he has no greater dependency claims upon him than other citizens being called to service at the time, and if his job can be dispensed with or filled by another not subject to military service, then beyond the slightest doubt he is remiss in his most sacred duty if he avoids service. Of course, the gentleman and I are in agreement that in no case is an individual indispensable; and that only in the rarest cases is it difficult or impossible to replace him in reasonable time.

I say that as a general rule, every man's responsibility should be measured by the same standards. I would agree with the gentleman, however, that the more richly his country has rewarded the individual in public service, the more eager he should be to discharge his full responsibility, the more ready he should be to serve with the armed forces. As a public figure, he should indeed desire to stand as an example to the rest of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the bill and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee arose; and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2581, and, pursuant to House Resolution 229, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and district craft, for the United States Navy, and for other purposes."

THE LATE HON. HARRY LANE ENGLEBRIGHT

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 235, the Chair appoints the following Members of the House to attend the funeral: Mr. LEA, Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan, Mr. CARTER, Mr. WELCH, Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. FORD, Mr. ELLIOTT, and Mr. ROLPH.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an address delivered by Brig. Gen. Clayton S. Adams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ESTATE OF ROSE ANN FRENCH

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 237) from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the estate of Rose Ann French, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to 6 months' salary at the rate she was receiving at the time of her death and an additional amount not to exceed $250 to defray the funeral expenses of said Rose Ann French.

The resolution was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1943

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2714, Rept. No. 447) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Pending that motion I would like to see if I can arrive at an agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] as to time for general debate. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if we can agree on 2 hours for general debate on the bill itself and an additional 2 hours on the amendment to be offered by the Special Subcommittee on Subversive Activities when it is reached in the reading of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, personally I think that 4 hours will be sufficient, but I think we might just as well handle the division of that ourselves. I think we can probably use it to better advantage, and I think we can get along with less than 2 hours on the bill itself and allow the Members perhaps a little more than 2 hours for the other. I think it would be better just to have it 4 hours, to be equally divided, and then you on your side can let the ranking Member on that side, and I on my side can do likewise, handle the time that is used on that feature.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill continue not to exceed 4 hours, the time to be equally divided, and to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself, a portion of which is to be yielded to the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Subversive Activities of Government Employees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it proposed to vote on the Kerr committee amendment today?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I do not believe we will be able to reach a vote on the amendment today.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Reserving the right to object, could the gentleman assure the House that there will not be a vote on that today?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, I will say that no vote will be taken on the amendment today.

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think it is going to be absolutely impossible to finish general debate today. Probably it will have to go over to another day. My understanding is it will go over until Monday. Is that the understanding of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We will resume consideration of the bill on Monday, and it is our expectation to ask for a record vote on the amendment to the bill on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2714) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with Mr. PATMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us comprises, in effect, two sections, that covered by the report from the subcommittee on deficiencies, which I have just submitted, carrying urgent deficiency appropriations, and that covered by the report from the subcommittee on subversive activities of Federal employees, submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge Kerr. I shall discuss the appropriations and shall later yield to Judge Kerr to discuss his report when he offers his amendment during the reading of the bill. The need for this bill is due to the necessity of providing money to meet pay rolls due at the end of May and the corresponding necessity of enacting a law making such appropriations available prior to June 1. Due to the fact that we have enacted in this fiscal year four different laws raising the pay of Federal employees, the four bills involving an additional $400,000,000 for pay rolls for the remainder of this fiscal year, the various agencies of the Government affected by this legislation have had to meet their pay rolls out of their regular appropriations which were made prior to the effective date of the new laws and therefore were obliged to incur these deficiencies. This bill is to provide the deficiencies which they, through no choice of their own, have had to create under the operation of laws passed by the Congress relative to overtime pay and to increase of compensation of Federal employees.

These deficiencies make up the bulk of the pending appropriations. Of the $122,000,000 carried in the bill, such deficiencies account for all but $12,000,000.

The remaining $12,000,000 is divided among eight items which Members will find listed on page 2 of the report. They are largely routine and involve appropriations over which we had little latitude. Perhaps the only one of general interest is the provision relative to the emergency fund of the President.

Beginning on June 11, 1940, Congress made the first appropriation of funds to be used to meet urgent and confidential situations arising in connection, first, with the defense program and, later, following Pearl Harbor, to be used in connection with the prosecution of the war. Altogether we have made available since that date a total of $631,533,000 of which there is still on hand and unobligated $89,322,166.23. All allocations from this fund up to the end of the calendar year of 1942 were reported in the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill which passed the House early in the session. Subsequent allocations from the first of the year up to and including April 30, 1943, the last available date, are reported in the hearings on the pending bill.

The committee recommends the continuance during the fiscal year 1944 of this unallocated balance of $89,322,166.23 and proposes to make available from this fund $25,000,000 for confidential purposes. Funds available for this purpose have been so depleted that only $3,237,000 remain. This transfer will make available to the President for confidential purposes a total of $28,237,000.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that this is a comparatively small sum for the purpose. During the Spanish-American War President McKinley was given $50,000,000 and President Wilson was allotted $150,000,000 for such purposes in the First World War. In consideration of the sums involved and the extent of operations in the field, the proposed reappropriation and allocation are much smaller, by comparison, than the amounts provided for the purpose in the two former wars.

Of course, neither provision calls for more money or appropriates additional funds. We merely continue during the coming year the available balance remaining from the funds carried for this purpose in the current fiscal year.

If there are no questions on the bill, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this deficiency bill accounts for a total of approximately $134,000,000. $122,000,000 out of the $134,000,000 is made up of items required to meet the war bonus that was voted by the Congress to the civilian employees of the Government. Regardless of how anyone voted upon that, the obligation has been established and the pay roll has to be met. There have developed as we have gone along a great many discouraging features in connection with that situation. I have the personnel records of one unit of the Government in my possession showing a group of 450 employees who draw $2,500 and above receiving an average increase of approximately $1,000 in 12 months. The bureaucrats and the Civil Service Commission have gone hog-wild in promotions and advancements and there is going to be no bottom left in the Treasury if this kind of operation is permitted to continue any longer. The only way we have of putting any brakes on that situation is arbitrarily to cut the size of the appropriation for an agency. I feel that it is the duty of the Civil Service Committee to conduct an investigation of all these agencies and to demonstrate the sort of thing that has been done and to bring in such amendments to the Classification Act as will put an end to this kind of wild operation. It is not a question of giving these people fair pay; it is a question as to whether or not the Civil Service Commission is going to have legislation put over it that will make them show some sense of responsibility to the Government of the United States.

The situation is becoming daily more serious. I am going to call attention to it as these different bills come in. The war bonus that was given to these people is a minor item compared with these tremendous day-to-day appropriations and increases that these people are pulling off. I ran into one situation in the Treasury where the personnel officer received an enormous increase and in the reports the committee got on the subject was a memorandum as to the reason assigned for that increase: No reason assigned. If the Civil Service Commission can get by with that continuously, Congress is going to have no respect for itself and get nowhere. I hope we are going to have some action that will help it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I agree there has been abuse in the matter about which he has just been talking. I think it arises in part from the action of the Civil Service Commission in delegating to the agencies the right to make grade promotions without preaudit on the part of the Classification Division of the Commission. I think that was a mistake and I have so stated to them. I am glad the gentleman's committee is looking into it and I want to assure him that the Civil Service Committee under the resolution authorizing it to investigate civilian personnel is also inquiring into that subject.

Mr. TABER. While we are right on that particular subject, I want to say that the trouble lies not only with the Civil Service Commission, but with the bureaucrats, the ones there at the head of these departments and agencies, who have the nerve to come up before us and try to make out that they have not any responsibility in that connection. May I say also that I feel that the head of any agency has some responsibility when the Civil Service Commission has rated a man above what the head of that agency knows he ought to have. In that case it is the duty of the head of that agency to see that an appeal is taken and the proper action results.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I agree with the gentleman on that. I think the chief difficulty in the Federal personnel situation is the failure of the supervisory officials in these agencies to exercise the kind of leadership that they should give to the public service.

Mr. TABER. For my part I intend to do what little I can to see that reductions are made in the gross appropriations for salaries of those agencies where the heads of those agencies do not meet their responsibility in order to make them get down to earth and appreciate their responsibilities.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman mentioned a case where an employee had received an increase of a thousand dollars. Did that increase include the wartime bonus?

Mr. TABER. Oh, my, no. I mentioned a case where a group of 452 employees of one agency who were receiving $2,500 and above had received an average increase in that group of a thousand dollars.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Was that exclusive of the bonus?

Mr. TABER. Exclusive of the war bonus. I intend to have that brought out on the floor in detail when the appropriation for that agency comes before the House.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Could the gentleman answer the general question as to whether the overtime-pay bill that the House passed a short time ago was on the basis of the pay received on January 1, 1941, or was it a bonus or increase on the basis of the base pay they are now getting, including all of these promotions?

Mr. TABER. It jumps around just as their regular salary jumps around. If their salary was a thousand dollars on January 1 they would get a certain percentage.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman permit me to explain something to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The question whether or not the increase in pay that the gentleman from New York is talking about would affect the overtime pay depends on what the salary was, because we had a limitation of $2,900. In other words, they get no increased pay on any salary above $2,900, so that if the employees he is talking about were getting more than $2,900, an increase in their base pay would not increase the overtime pay.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The $2,900 is not what that employee or class of employee was getting on January 1, 1941, but the first $2,900 that he gets now. Is that not true?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, the overtime is based on his present salary.

Mr. TABER. On the salary for the month this bonus is figured.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Referring to page 3 of this bill, under "Defense Aid," what number of employees will that involve?

Mr. TABER. Well, I cannot give the gentleman offhand the exact figure. It is a few hundred thousand dollars, two or three hundred thousand dollars, involving the employees in the local office down here.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The amount will be two or three hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. TABER. That is my recollection of what it figures. It is not a big figure. It is a deficiency that will be applicable for about the month of June.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend at the present time, unless I find out something that I do not know about now, to offer amendments to this deficiency bill. It has been cut some. There are some things in it that I do not like too well and some things I was rather hesitant about, but, on the other hand, most of them are urgently needed. As I stated, $122,000,000 out of the $134,000,000 are absolutely required to meet this pay question. Then there are $3,000,000 for ration books in the Office of Price Administration to be used after the first of July. That is an item that really will come out of the 1944 Budget. It is an advance on that year. These have to be printed ahead of time so that they can be made available to take care of the public demand.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the Public Printer now able to deliver those or are those printed by outside printers?

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman mean the Government Printing Office?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Today the Government Printing Office does not do a very big percentage of the Government work; just a little here and there comparatively, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and a few things for the old-line Departments; that is about all.

Mr. CRAWFORD. A great deal of the work is farmed out, you might say?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. To outside concerns?

Mr. TABER. Farmed out by the Government Printing Office. There is another item that the gentleman from Missouri referred to, an extension of the so-called emergency fund for the President. Something less than $90,000,000 is available presently; probably there will be a little less than that the 1st of July.

The allotments from that fund since about a year ago, when a conference was had with the Budget with reference to it, have not been of the serious character that they were at one time, and we were assured that there will not be a tendency on the part of the Chief Executive to make allotments for those things that have no relationship to military activities.

Of course, none of us wants to object to anything that is absolutely necessary and immediately urgent for the war effort, regardless of what it is, but, for instance, the allotments from January 1 to May 1, were approximately $1,000,000—a few dollars over that, but not much. There might have been some question as to some of them, as to whether they should have come up through their budget and asked for an appropriation, but there was no question as to any of them that I was able to see where we would not have been compelled to provide money if the request had been made. They consisted of many small items of $15,000 and $20,000. No very large, outstanding items; none for any activity of a brand-new character were included.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The members of your committee are fairly well familiarized with the operations that are carried on with that fund; are they not?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Insofar as your committee is concerned?

Mr. TABER. And as to some of them, of a large character—and I recall one of a very large character—we are advised in advance before the allotments are made and the matter is discussed with the members of the committee before they are made.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman feel that none of these funds, of any consequence, will be used for financing agencies of the Government of certain types of operations or certain agencies of the Government which have no military character?

Mr. TABER. We have not heard of any where that might happen.

For instance, if this bill should not be passed before the 1st of June, that is, if it should not become a law before the 1st of June, in order to meet the pay rolls of several of the regular departments and agencies, perhaps it would be necessary to make allotments from that fund. There is a provision made that if such an allotment should have to be made, the emergency fund should be reimbursed out of these appropriations for the war bonus equal to the amount of that which had been allotted. That would not be strictly a war proposition, in a way. On the other hand, it would be an emergency item that would be justified.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. I just came in. May I ask if the gentleman has touched upon the Howard University matter?

Mr. TABER. I have not.

Mr. RABAUT. I want to inform the gentleman that I have had a conference with the War Production Board, and they told me that was an individual case and they would look into it carefully, because of the fact that, as they explained, the furnaces were not over 7 years old, that they were originally installed as oil burners, and they would have to be unbricked, and I found that through getting an auxiliary burner for coal we might be able to bypass some of their requests, and thereby conserve that valuable installation.

You will remember we covered that in our investigation.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] and I spent a very considerable time last Saturday going into that question, with the idea of trying to fine some way to handle the Howard University boiler situation without a mess being made of it. We were very much distressed to be presented with a proposal to tear down the boilers which were set up in the air 6 or 7 feet, in the way the modern oil burner is, and lower them down to try to put grates under them.

It seemed like a mess of a job and a waste of money, and we went into it very carefully; and I think he and I were convinced that the proper procedure would be for a new boiler or a second-hand, if necessary, to be installed, and there was space enough in the powerhouse so that it could be operated with coal, and simply use enough oil in the oil burner to take care of the peak load. That seemed much more intelligent to us than to wreck that expensive installation.

I want to compliment the way in which the gentleman from Michigan handled the matter, and the knowledge that I feel he possessed and the way he handled it.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the President has been allotting money from this fund for several years to the so-called Resources Planning Board, and I am just wondering what assurance we have that he is not going to use any part of this fund or to make allotments of it to that Board?

Mr. TABER. I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. We have no assurance that he will not use the money to do that?

Mr. TABER. No; we hope that will not happen.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] when the Bureau of the Budget was before us on the same question in January of last year.

Speaking of the emergency fund of the President at that time the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] said, and I quote:

> All too many criticisms have been leveled at the Government of the United States, and they were justified in many instances; too many criticisms have been leveled at the Congress and the Chief Executive because some agency set up by an Executive order, without the sanction of the Congress, is financed out of these things and launched on such a grandiose scale, and you put us in the position of either repudiating what the Commander in Chief has done or going on and taking the censure and the responsibility for it; and I for one feel this matter very keenly. I think it is a matter of concern to us and to our system of government. I am speaking very frankly, and I hope it will not occur again. Tremendous criticism is heaped on the Office of Civilian Defense, the Office of Price Administration, and the War Manpower Commission. Those things have created controversy untold and criticism untold on us and on the Chief Executive, and they were all set up by Executive order, and set up under a grandiose scheme without any consultation with the lawmaking body; and then you come before the regular committees for funds to carry on those functions, and I for one do not appreciate it a bit.
> * * * I do not think Congress ought to be embarrassed and the country ought to be embarrassed by those things.

The question of the use of the emergency funds has been gone into by the Independent Offices Subcommittee a good many times. For my part, I feel there has been a continual abuse of the use of those funds, and I certainly hope it will not occur in the future.

Mr. TABER. I join in the gentleman's thought.

I think I have probably consumed as much time as I should on the general character of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. I notice a small item on page 7 for defraying the deficit in the treasury of the municipal government of St. Croix. Why do we do that?

Mr. TABER. Because we never have had a really efficient management of our island possessions. This is the story. The way things are set up, the taxes and the expenditures are under the control of the legislature or the municipal body there. The only product we are sure of harvesting in those set-ups, especially since Secretary Ickes and his crew took over, is bigger and better deficits. After the deficits are incurred there is no way out of meeting them.

It is a problem that calls for the most serious consideration, in my opinion, on the part of the Committee on Insular Affairs, with the idea that the statutes might be changed so that the Federal Treasury would not be continued in the position of having to meet these deficits.

Mr. KEAN. Does the same situation apply to cities in Puerto Rico?

Mr. TABER. They have a separate government there, but St. Croix is practically an entire island. It is one of the Virgin Islands. That peculiar set-up there was made originally out of deference to the people who were there when we first arrived, but practically none of them are there now. It is a very bad situation. It is one that really calls for affirmative governmental action.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman knows, too, of course, that the disturbance of world commerce is really the cause of this item.

Mr. TABER. Not in this particular case. This is a case that has gone on for 20 years.

Mr. RABAUT. I am talking about this $45,000 item here.

Mr. TABER. The only change has been that it has been getting worse and worse as we have gone along. I have been familiar with these appropriations for over 20 years. They used to be in the Navy bill. It has been getting worse and worse from day to day. There has been no getting better about it, and it goes back to the point where it could not be said that I was playing politics.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman might be correct as to the past, I think.

Mr. TABER. I am correct as to the present. Just so long as you let those island folks create a deficit that we have to pay, you are going to have bigger and better deficits. That is not good business from the standpoint of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman from New York has conservatively stated the situation. I see no way whatever for this Congress to escape appropriating the necessary funds to meet the deficit of the Virgin Islands treasury so long as the laws remain as they are at the present time. At the same time, I see no way on earth to prevent those Virgin Island deficits from growing every year, whether in peacetime or wartime. I think that is the condition we face right at this very hour.

The gentleman has come to a point which I had in mind awhile ago. Let me submit this question in this bold manner. Does the gentleman believe that the President can take the emergency funds such as those here referred to, for instance, and go into Puerto Rico and finance the new socialization schemes in full or in part, directly or indirectly, to any degree whatever, with the Puerto Rican treasury failing to provide the funds for the carrying out of recent laws enacted by the Puerto Rican Legislature, of which this Congress took practically no notice whatever?

Mr. TABER. You would have to do something that I have not had an opportunity to do in order to answer that question. I will try to get to the point where I can answer it before the bill is read for amendment on Monday. It will mean that we must have from the Budget a memorandum indicating what funds remain out of particular appropriations. Some of those appropriations were broad enough to permit that sort of thing. Some of them were not. I will undertake to see that we are provided with the information before the bill is read for amendment along that line, and I will undertake to advise the House with reference to it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit a further observation, we have this situation in Puerto Rico, according to the best information we can get from our Government here in Washington. Mr. Abe Fortas, Under Secretary of the Interior, is directly in charge of Puerto Rican operations. You have the new laws there which call for the socialization of the land, for the socialization of the transportation system and of the water resources, and making public utilities out of private enterprises; in other words, in my opinion the Puerto Rican Administration would immediately proceed with complete socialization if the funds were forthcoming. Of course, they are not forthcoming directly out of the Puerto Rican treasury, in spite of the fact that the Puerto Rican people, citizens of this country, pay no direct levy to our Federal Treasury, in spite of the fact that we let them hold their export duties, for instance, from $15,000,000 to $17,000,000 per annum on the export of rum alone, and in spite of many other advantages they now receive, which they would not receive if they were a State of the Union or an organized territory such as Hawaii.

What is running around in my mind is, if the committee directly refuses to make the appropriations and if the Puerto Rican local budget is unable to meet the expenditures, is there any power whereby the President, operating through the Department of the Interior and Governor Tugwell of Puerto Rico, can take these special funds and go in there and finance those operations?

Mr. TABER. I would not want to say without checking. I will find out.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In connection with the observations made by the gentleman from Michigan, wherein he listed a group of "in spite of this and in spite of that," there is one "in spite" that the gentleman from Michigan omitted, that is, that the people of Puerto Rico have been starving and are now on the verge of starvation, and they have been exploited ever since we took them over. They have no native industries in Puerto Rico because we have not permitted them to have any native industries. They cannot get anything shipped to them because of our shipping monopoly. Under our tariff laws they cannot buy cheaply. They are a colonial country suffering from one of the worst types of colonialism. The least we can do is to appropriate for their betterment, the least we can do is to appropriate to give them at least a decent standard of living.

Mr. TABER. Of course, the situation in Puerto Rico has been immeasurably worse since the Tugwell gang began to operate some time ago, since it began to destroy all private industry that was giving employment and livelihood to the public. As I remember, something like $300,000,000 has been brought into that country in a most ridiculous and wildcat way, and instead of it providing something out of which people could make a living, it has destroyed the possibility of group after group being self-sustaining. It has been a most unfortunate situation, one that has cried aloud for a good, first-class, honest American administrator.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further on that point?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I disagree with the gentleman. I think the gentleman always wants to be fair.

Mr. TABER. I have tried to be fair, and I have been exceedingly fair in what I said last.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think the gentleman is sincere. I think the gentleman is one of the squarest-shooting men in this House, but I disagree with him on many things. I point out, for the gentleman's information, that in the Island of Puerto Rico there are 250,000 people unemployed out of a population of 1,800,000. When you have an island whose total economy, as is true in Puerto Rico, is a sugar economy, with over 70 percent of the arable land owned by four sugar corporations, with offices in Wall Street, and an annual income for those native Puerto Ricans who do work of less than $200 a year, and when you realize that this situation existed years before Mr. Tugwell and that it still continues to exist, then, certainly, you cannot blame that situation on Tugwell or on the administration. That situation is fundamental; it goes to the very roots of colonialism in Puerto Rico.

Mr. TABER. But, of course, that situation has been accentuated, and it has become much worse in the last few years due to the operation of the molasses trust in which Mr. Tugwell was involved, and due to the Government taking over the Farm Co-op and messing the whole thing up so that a proper market could not be had for the things raised there, due to their taking away from the people the opportunity to raise things for themselves. The Government has been proceeding down there under Tugwell along the Bismarckian philosophy of providing no means to feed those people except through the Government and making them dependent upon the Government. Until we get the idea that those people must have an opportunity to work on productive enterprises instead of depending on state work or upon public works for what they need, our situation is going to become progressively, increasingly worse, and until America provides for the Government of Puerto Rico a new, efficient, effective government, with a Governor who understands business and will try to do things upon a constructive basis, the thing is not going to get any better. There may be palliatives applied, and all that sort of thing, but it wears the people out after awhile. I think probably I have used all the time that I shall use at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I notice by the bill that some $3,000,000 goes to the O. P. A.

Mr. TABER. That is for the ration books that will be required just after the 1st of July.

Mr. CURTIS. What has the gentleman's committee been able to do in the way of inducing the O. P. A. to cut out nonessentials carried on down there, useless departments?

Mr. TABER. We have not had the opportunity of going over that thing in any satisfactory manner. I have personally had many talks with Mr. Brown, and submitted many programs to him, some of which he has adopted, and there has been progress made toward getting rid of some of those things, but the rent control is a very bad situation, and the set-up that he inherited was absolutely impossible. Until he makes the proper changes in personnel, we cannot expect any efficiency on that score.

Mr. CURTIS. Somebody in connection with the O. P. A. might take a great deal of time and spend time getting mimeographs of what George Washington thought about price control, which they could send out by a lot of lawyers that are employed down there.

Mr. TABER. That might indicate that they had too much money for printing and binding.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MONRONEY. On page 2 there is an appropriation of $300 for each Congressman and Senator for stationery.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MONRONEY. I tried to find in the hearings some justification for this extra money carried in the bill, and I wonder if the gentleman could give the reason why $300 more is needed?

Mr. TABER. We found that the stationery accounts of the membership were almost all in the red. We found that with the increasing volume of work they have to do, they are unable to keep up with it and take care of their work with the funds that had been allotted to them. This item is just a little bit bigger, but not much, than it was last year. It is on a calendar basis rather than a fiscal year basis. It was thought that the membership is entitled to get funds enough to pay for their stationery out of the allowance which should be made to them. That is the reason that it was done.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the report of the Kerr committee at this time. I do hope to have an opportunity to talk about the report of the committee on Monday. However, there is one statement in the report which has been issued by the committee today in connection with Dr. Lovett, which I want to challenge, because of the very serious nature of the charges contained therein. I refer you to the first paragraph on page 10, which reads as follows:

> The National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners and National Committee for People's Rights was declared by the Department of Justice to be within the scope of Public Law 135 and Public Law 644, Seventy-seventh Congress.

The following is the sentence to which I want to call your attention:

> It is listed among organizations alleged to have been financed by Amtorg Trading Corporation.

The Amtorg Trading Corporation is an official agency of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is our ally. This statement is not only untrue, but I go further. I challenge the committee or anyone else to produce a single iota of evidence—I repeat that—I challenge the committee or anyone else to produce a single iota of evidence to substantiate that statement. If there is no evidence—and I say there is none—that the Amtorg Trading Corporation ever financed any of these organizations mentioned, then this report contains a serious libel against an ally. I demand to know, and I believe the American people who are engaged in this war demand to know, who put it in; who is responsible for it; who wrote it; where did it come from, and how did it get in the report of the committee? That is the challenge that I make. I make it early in this debate so as to afford the committee or anyone else an opportunity to substantiate the statement contained in the first paragraph on page 10, which says the National Committee for Defense of Political Prisoners is listed among the organizations alleged to have been financed by the Amtorg Trading Corporation. Further, the mere fact that the word "alleged" is used is no justification for making this statement. It is a serious libel against a great ally in this critical period of the war, and, consequently, most injurious to the best interests of the American people. I challenge you to produce the proof now or before the end of the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order on a subject not related to the bill at hand.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, Montana is one of the largest areas of undeveloped oil fields that we have in the country. However, the present price of crude oil is so low that it discourages the development of new wells. We must bear in mind that crude oil now sells in my State for $1.10 per barrel. The cost of production has increased greatly, owing to the increased cost of labor and materials that are necessary to be used in development of oil fields and in the production of oil.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I am glad the gentleman brought out the point about the undeveloped oil fields in Montana, because we do have in the gentleman's district, the largest undeveloped area in the United States. I regret that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] this afternoon said that at the rate we were shipping out our reserves we would have to develop one big well a week from now on. We have oil there, but unfortunately the wells are capped and unfortunately, also, we have too much competition with the California oil companies who have a monopoly in that particular part of the Nation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman. I want to point out that the oil wells that are capped are owned principally by what are called the independent oil producers. The people in my district want the administration, with reference to the production of oil, taken away from the Office of Price Administration and turned over for administration to Secretary Ickes of the Department of the Interior. He has recently advocated raising the price of crude oil 35 cents a barrel, but Mr. Prentiss Brown has vetoed that. I do not think Mr. Brown knows anything about the subject as compared with the knowledge of Secretary Ickes. He is the logical person to have charge of the administration of the production of oil.

It has been suggested that the Government subsidize to the extent of 60 percent the cost of bringing in new wells. In my opinion, this would not be necessary if we raise the price of oil 35 cents a barrel; we will have plenty of people in my State, and plenty of independent producers, men who can get the money, who will go into those fields and bring in new wells.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Does not the gentleman think it would be better if some of the practical, independent producers were called in and their views were considered before these orders would be sent out?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Certainly; it does not make sense to proceed otherwise.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I agree with the gentleman that Mr. Ickes would be a far better coordinator for the oil situation in this country than would the present O. P. A. Administrator.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not only that, but he is the logical person to have charge of it, because he is not only familiar with the subject, but he is the one who is charged with the responsibility of providing the Nation with sufficient oil to carry on not only for war purposes but for civilian uses as well. All of the authority with reference to the production of oil should be transferred to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As the gentleman knows, the administrator for oil in Canada has entire charge of the production, sale, and transportation of oil. And also in Canada, unfortunately for us, Canada has been warm all through the winter, while we have been cold. We shipped 50,000,000 gallons of crude oil to Canada and she refined it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly. We had better stop, look, and listen, then get busy and increase our oil production, and pay the price, if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. COMPTON].

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I take this time this afternoon to leave the discussion of this bill for something that seems particularly important and something on which it is necessary to take early action.

I have taken the floor this afternoon to ask of this House what I consider a small favor for a great purpose—a favor in behalf of an oppressed majority—not an oppressed minority of Europeans, but an oppressed majority of loyal, hard-working Americans who are being tried beyond endurance through a tyranny of bureaucratic tommyrot.

I have today introduced a resolution, No. 238, calling for a full investigation of the Office of Price Administration. I hope the Rules Committee will promptly give this House an opportunity to act on this resolution so that the oppressed majority of which I speak may have quick relief.

I do not want to add to the burdens of this Congress nor to the confusion of the Washington scene—and certainly I do not want to detract from our war effort—but if there is one bureau here in Washington which needs the spotlight of public scrutiny it is that confusion-spreading fly in our alphabetical soup, the O. P. A., or, by poetic license, the O. P. U., the Office of Price Upheaval. Some action must be taken to head off further disorder.

I urge immediate congressional action; what form it takes is immaterial just so long as it has a definite objective. My common sense would suggest abolition of the O. P. A., lock, stock, barrel, and "lame duck" Brown. I would suggest that we call upon someone like Mr. Herbert Hoover or Mr. Herbert Lehmann, each of whom has an understanding of humanity and food problems, and give him a small but efficient and politically free staff to effect a true stabilization of the cost of living, based on known facts and not crackpot theories.

Mr. Hoover pointed out recently that whereas we now have 90,000 bureaucrats — count them — regulating the American people on food, he had only 3,000 people to help him feed the whole world in the last war.

The O. P. A., which is just one of our food-control agencies, had over 50,000 employees—count them—on March 31 of this year and wants to add another 20,000 in 1944.

I have only a few minutes to lodge my complaints and make my plea. So, let me suggest here and now that, if necessary, we blot out of existence this circus-like Gargantua, the fantastic and formless freak of foolish government, this colossus of confusion, this monster of muddled management, this alliteration of all of the evils of bureaucratic government.

Price control in America, under the O. P. A., is the greatest hoax ever perpetrated upon a trusting people. The O. P. A. has licensed highway robbery in our stores, mothers the profiteer, has fathered the black market—it has actually driven one Federal department to buy in the black market—has provided the breast at which suspicion and distrust are being nourished among our people and is the basic cause of most of the demands for higher wages.

It is a source of disunity throughout the land. It is sabotaging our efforts to prevent inflation, and is spending hundreds of millions of dollars in the process thereof. It has cured no ills, but it has created evils beyond belief.

If the welfare and the reason and the morale of 135,000,000 Americans was not at stake the crackpot efforts of the O. P. A. to stabilize the cost of living would be funny. Instead they are tragic. Besides the waste of manpower and money, it has begun to affect their hearts and minds and spirits.

Are we to go on feuding and fuming and constantly creating new problems because we have not the courage or the common sense to take drastic steps to solve our most elementary problems at the source? Are Congress and the American people to be made puppets and guinea pigs for an incompetent collection of overpaid young lawyers who hatch crackpot theories in the incubators of socialism they call their minds?

There have been rumors that one of the principal functions of this costly bureau—it wants $175,000,000 for 1944—and its army of lawyers and what nots, has been to devise a method of price control, to set price ceilings, to hold back the cost of living. Apparently they were unfounded rumors, for prices have been thrown far out of control, the ceilings are sky high, and the cost of living goes right on rolling along, just like Old Man River.

The O. P. A. admits it has not been able to enforce ceilings. Good Lord, I doubt if it can even understand them. The public will not complain of ceiling violations because of the red tape involved and because it is more important to have food. The big stores justifiably plead a lack of understanding if they are guilty of violations and the little stores are quietly forced out of business.

Along with many of you I have waited patiently for the O. P. A. to shed some of its earlier confusion and lead the American people out of the wilderness of rationing, and into the protective valley of effective price control.

I need not rehearse our disgust at gas and fuel-oil rationing, and, of course, as for rubber—there has been none to ration. Time after time our hopes have risen with announcements of coming price ceilings. But as our hopes went up so did the price of most important food items and so did the size of the O. P. A. staff.

A few weeks ago the trumpets blew loudly for the announcement of dollars-and-cents ceiling prices on beef and other meats. But, lo and behold, the ceilings raised rather than lowered prices and the schedules had to be called off.

On Sunday of this week the trumpets blew again. The O. P. A. pridefully announced dollars-and-cents ceilings on 278 commodity items—count them, 278 items—but scarcely one of these items had figured in the rapid and ridiculous rise of prices.

Wednesday of this week brought new meat-price ceilings—ceilings that will raise prices by from 20 to 30 percent in the chain stores, where the majority of the lower-income families buy their foodstuffs, but will effect a slight drop in the small independent stores.

What sense is there to price control that raises prices for the many, and finds profits in the wealthy chain-store supermarkets, and knocks them down in the little independent stores for a few customers, where a penny or two profit is often the difference between staying in business or going into bankruptcy?

What sense is there to a price-control program that raises prices in the markets where the average worker buys his food and reduces them in the higher-grade independent stores where mostly the wealthy trade?

What sense is there to a price-control program that defeats its own purpose? That penalizes the buyers and discourages the producer and retailer.

We read that the price ceiling on potatoes is 5 cents a pound in Washington, but housewives must pay 12½ or 15 cents a pound if they want potatoes; cabbage is 20 cents for a pigmy-sized head—you know, just the size of the usual bureaucrats; apples are 15 cents a pound; cucumbers 25 cents a piece; and the lowly spinach 45 cents a peck.

These are not black-market prices. They are botched O. P. A. prices in the so-called supermarkets. The ceilings are way up in the clouds where the bright boys of O. P. A. always are.

Just what is the O. P. A. bringing this Nation to by its bungling? Now that the W. P. A. is gone, and some other agencies that were used to subsidize votes are going, is the O. P. A. to be their successor? It was always in my mind that the political appointment of Brown would be muddied even browner by political results. In other words, hard-hitting, tactless Henderson has given way to baby-voiced political Brown, only Brown comes bearing gifts—gifts of money in the form of subsidies. Can you see the plan?

As someone has put it, O. P. A. is now about to help us pay our grocery bill. That is very nice of O. P. A., but beware, I say, of gift bearers, whether they be Grecian beauties or ugly ducklings, particularly lame ones.

Subsidies may be justified if used with great care and discretion—and because of O. P. A. bungling, perhaps subsidies may be necessary; but does the O. P. A. record to date justify trusting that agency with huge money gifts called subsidies? Who will get the money? What will the public get?

Subsidies are effective only with money; money is secured for government by taxes and taxes come direct from the people—the wage earners, executives, and those who get their living from investments. Subsidies come entirely from the public, but are distributed privately to a few.

Now that it has brought us next door to subsidies, the O. P. A., with very sudden and questionable frankness, admitted on Monday that enforcement of food prices never has existed. Any housewife—without benefit of clairvoyance—could have told them that at any time.

Very naively the O. P. A. suggests that if we add 1,400 persons to the present staff of about 3,500 enforcement inspectors, it can effect a 5-percent reduction in food prices. Five percent, mind you. And these investigators, according to O. P. A. reports, are to be used to "educate unintentional violators." But who is going to educate the educators?

In the 2-year period that the O. P. A. has been exercising its peculiar brand of price control, pot roast has jumped 156 percent in cost; Irish potatoes, 256 percent; cabbage, 200 percent; and eggs, 56 percent.

But now, after 2 years of spending and snooping and issuing directives and conflicting and confusing regulations that even Einstein could not understand, they promise a measly 5-percent reduction in prices if they get another 1,400 investigators.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMPTON. I yield.

Mr. RAMEY. Is it not a fact that any directive is un-American, that the American people whose sons are in the service, as most of them are, need to be respected, not inspected? That inspection of the patriotic mother and father is an insult.

Mr. COMPTON. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Besides the 1,400 new investigators they want 18,500 more employees for the whole country to bring the total in 1944 to 70,000. Do you think the O. P. A. should have them? An investigation can best answer that. Of course it is good New Deal Administration practice. Every time a program fails, ask for another and larger appropriation and increase the personnel. That insures that the next failure will be really colossal.

I am not going to dwell on the bungling in connection with gasoline and fuel oil—the discrimination against the people of the East; the unusual and un-American resort to Gestapolike methods of snooping, turning neighbor against neighbor and friend against friend. You are all too familiar, I know, with this phase of O. P. A.'s activities.

Let us look into the O. P. A., particularly the price-control program! Let us evaluate the present policies and reorient or formulate a new working policy which will achieve the principles of price control. Let us root out the theories and develop and substitute a specific, practical, businesslike plan that will control prices on a Nation-wide basis without raising the cost to the consumer and without burdening the taxpayers with too many subsidies.

Rationing must continue, with some exceptions, but must be improved. Its administration to date by the local war price and rationing boards, by comparison, has been effective and conscientious for the most part. Injustices have generally been the result of lack of uniformity in understanding and applying the snowstorm of directives blowing out of Washington.

A constructive and comprehensive investigation will produce suggestions and provide recommendations that, in turn, will develop a definite policy of price control, and possible improvements in the rationing program. If it becomes advisable I am sure this Congress will sanction whatever legislation is necessary to carry out a sensible policy. I hope the Members will support my resolution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUSBEY].

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Chairman, I take advantage of the time allotted to me to speak in regard to the report of the Kerr committee on three men, namely, Dr. Goodwin B. Watson, Dr. William E. Dodd, Jr., and Dr. Frederick L. Schuman, particularly Dr. Frederick L. Schuman, of whom the Kerr committee has this to say:

> Your special subcommittee has examined Dr. Frederick L. Schuman and all evidence pertaining to him as submitted by the committees heretofore referred to and does not find sufficient evidence to support a recommendation of unfitness to serve in the employment of the Government at this time

This is a very important subject and is coming up on an amendment to be offered to this appropriation bill next Monday. I think we should have a general understanding of what is back of the drive to remove some of these men from the pay roll. We hear a great deal said on the floor of the House from time to time about this man's being a Communist or that man's being a Communist. It might be well for us to take just a moment to look at a few of the fundamental principles of communism. I want to establish a foundation on which to judge some of these men.

First of all, we should appreciate that communism is internationalism; in other words, Moscow is the international capital of the world, in effect; any country which chooses to embrace the Soviet Union has its capital automatically moved to Moscow.

The second great fundamental of communism which I think we should take into consideration is the fact that communism is atheism. It may be said that you do not have to be an atheist to become a Communist, or to become a member of the Communist Party. That is true, but it was not true up to 10 or 11 years ago. Then they changed that little ruling, said they would get these people into their organization and then work on them and try to make atheists out of them.

The third principle of communism, and this is the most important, is that communism has as one of its principal objectives the control of the means of production.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBEY. I am sorry; I have just a few minutes. I decline to yield. If I can get more time I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman.

As I was saying, the third and important point in the subject of communism that we must consider is the control of the means of production. Before the Communists started helping us in this war program, which was July 21, 1941, they were doing everything possible to gain control of the means of production and take over factories in this country by sit-down strikes and other methods. That was their objective. It makes no difference of course how they take over control of our industries. If they can take them over by different Government bureaus that is just as effective as taking them over by force. The question is this: Is this man a Communist or is he not a Communist?

Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal more respect for the person believing in the principles of communism having the courage to take out a Red card and be a member of the party than I have for these men who teach the theories of communism in the classrooms of this country, who embrace the theories of communism in more ways than one, who are active in various Communist-front organizations but who did not take out a Red card in the party.

Those men I say are tremendously more dangerous than the men whom we know to be carrying a red card. Do you have to carry a card in order to be a Communist? No. I have never carried a card to identify myself as a part of the Republican party, still I call myself a Republican. Likewise I would say there are 20 people in this country who are following the theories and ideologies of communism, who do not have a red card, to everyone who does have a red card.

We received a letter in the mail today from Dr. Frederick L. Schuman, and I hope that some one in this House who happens to be an attorney, and I am not, will take this and analyze it some time before the debate is over, from a legal standpoint. There are one or two things to which I would like to call your attention. It states that he is principal political analyst of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the Federal Communications Commission, and "humorously criticized the Kerr committee for its report of last month, in which it cleared Professor Schuman of charges preferred by the Dies committee."

I wish to call to the attention of the House that the Kerr committee did not clear Dr. Frederick L. Schuman because all it stated or all it covered was "His unfitness to serve in the employment of the Government at this time." I am afraid Dr. Schuman will be up for further testimony and investigation.

Dr. Schuman was for many years a professor in the University of Chicago, and I happen to be a resident of the city of Chicago. Back in 1935 we had an investigation out there regarding the red activities in the University of Chicago when Dr. Schuman was a professor. Out of that investigation there was a booklet published known as, How Red is the University of Chicago? I went through this little booklet the other night and I found Dr. Schuman's name referred to on many, many pages. I would like to read some excerpts from that book entitled, "How Red is the University of Chicago?" into the RECORD at this time.

It starts out on page 11 with a paragraph headed "Students attempt agitation in coal fields," and goes on to say:

> Federated Press clipsheet of August 9, 1932, in an article captioned "Midwest students to probe coal fields conditions," stated in part:
> "Eighty students, organized as the Midwest College committee for investigation and relief in southern Illinois coal fields, will leave Chicago by motor caravan to study conditions there, Prof. Robert Morss Lovett, of the University of Chicago, announces. Mine locals in Sesser, Johnston City, and the Orient mine have invited the students. * * *
>
> "Profs. Frederick L. Schuman and Louis Gottschalk, of the University of Chicago; Prof. Frank G. Spencer, of the Central Young Men's Christian Association College; and Rev. Victor Siverts, of Meadville Theological Seminary, have joined Prof. Lovett in sponsoring the student enterprise."
> This committee was organized by the Student League for Industrial Democracy and the National Student League and was under communistic control. Federated Press of August 17, 1932, reported the stoppage and turn-back of the delegation by legal authorities at Mt. Vernon, Ill., and the arrest of six members of the delegation, among whom was Rev. Victor Siverts; Prof. A. O. Carlson, University of Chicago instructor, spending the summer at Commonwealth College; Joe Hamburger, University of Chicago student, taking a summer course at Commonwealth College; and other Commonwealth College students.
> PROFESSOR SCHUMAN PLEDGED TO COMMUNISM
> In September 1932 a group of over 50 writers, painters, teachers, and other professional workers declared their support of Foster and Ford and the Communist ticket in the 1932 national election. These 50 professionals pledged their vote to communism, stating in part:
> "The Communist Party alone is working to educate and organize the classes dispossessed by the present system, so as to make them an efficient instrument for establishing a new society based on equal opportunity to work, equable distribution of income, and ownership by the people of the national resources.
> "We therefore pledge our support in the national elections to the Communist Party and its candidates, William Z. Foster and James W. Ford, and call upon all educators, writers, engineers, social workers, artists, architects, and intellectuals in general to join us in this move and form Foster and Ford committees throughout the country."
> Among the signers of this pledge for communism was Frederick L. Schuman, of the University of Chicago. This group adopted the name of the League of Professional Groups for Foster and Ford.

> UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS ENDORSED COMMUNIST
> In January 1933, Communists of the fifth ward, Chicago, formed the Fifth Ward Campaign Committee, with headquarters at the Communist unit headquarters at 1505 Cable Court. A circular was issued in the latter part of January 1933, announcing the candidacy of a Communist functionary and attorney for alderman of the fifth ward, Vladimir Janowicz, and his scheduled talk at Communist headquarters, 1505 Cable Court, on February 5, at 4:30 p. m. The leaflet then listed endorsers of Janowicz as Profs. Robert Morss Lovett, A. Eustace Hayden, Frederick Schuman, and Martin Sprengling, of the University of Chicago, in addition to a list of Communist subsidiary organizations.

PROFESSORS LECTURE AT COMMUNIST SCHOOL

The official prospectus and program of the Chicago Workers School, official Communist Party training school for Communist Party district No. 8, for the fall, 1932, term lists the instructors and subjects at the school. It states in part:

"One of the extra curricular lecture series will be that of Prof. Harold D. Lasswell, of the University of Chicago political science department. Professor Lasswell will begin his series of six lectures on the Process of Social Change on Monday evening, November 14, 8:50 p. m.

"Prof. Frederick Schuman, of the University of Chicago, and others, will have lectures announced shortly."

"REDS" ORGANIZE PACIFIST COMMITTEE

The Daily Maroon, December 7, 1932, in an article, A. J. Carlson to Lead Discussion at Pacifist Club, stated:

"Anton J. Carlson, militant chairman of the department of physiology, stanch defender of vivisection, and advocate of world peace, will lead the discussion at the first meeting of the Chicago branch of the anti-war committee, which will be held in the social-science assembly room at 8.

"Joseph Cohen, delegate to the World Congress Against War held in Amsterdam last summer, and a student of Brooklyn College, New York, will speak on the Student and War.

"Anti-war committees are being organized in all universities and colleges in the United States to further the work of the National Student Congress Against War, which is sponsoring a national meeting to be held in Mandel Hall December 28 and 29.

"All campus clubs, organizations, and fraternities may elect delegates to the congress.

"The Chicago committee, which has recently been organized, is giving a second lecture December 14, when Frederick L. Schuman of the political science department speaks on the subject Geneva and Moscow Roads to World Peace."

The Daily Maroon, December 14, 1932, reported: "First antiwar congress to be held in Mandel—student delegates to meet December 28, 29." The article went on to state:

"Possibilities and potentialities of world political unity will be discussed tonight by Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, at a joint meeting of the National Student League, the antiwar committee, and the Cosmos Club tonight at 8 in social science assembly hall."

The activities of the National Student League got to be pretty raw at the University of Chicago, and Dean William E. Scott denied the use of Mandel Hall for an openly Communist mass meeting to protest police brutality in demonstrations of Communist unemployed council members. The Daily Maroon February 10, 1933, reported the situation as follows:

"More than 200 students' names have been obtained by the committee of eight of the league for the petition. Two faculty members have also signed it—Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, and Harold D. Lasswell, associate professor of political science."

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATION ASSOCIATION CALLED "RED"

The Progressive Education Association is a left-wing educational group that is definitely socialistic if not actually communistic in its program. Otto F. Aken, superintendent of schools, Cook County, Ill., in a petition for a writ of mandamus to restrain Noble J. Puffer, superintendent-elect, from taking office, charged Puffer with being a member of the Progressive Education Association. The Chicago Herald and Examiner of April 27, 1935, quotes Aken as charging in his petition that a county superintendent friendly to communism and communistic ideas would have the appalling effect of exposing such school children and school teachers to the danger of becoming indoctrinated with social and political ideas inimical to and subversive of the American system of government. He charged further that the Progressive Education Association is dominated by men and women of communistic and radical tendencies and that Carleton Washburne, of Winnetka, Ill., a Communist writer and author of various radical textbooks, which he has for some time been endeavoring to introduce into the public schools of this country; Frederick L. Schuman, and A. Eustace Hayden, professors at the University of Chicago and well known as Communists, are among its leaders.

PROFESSORS SPEAK ON COMMUNISM

The March 2, 1933, Daily Maroon in an article, Schuman, Knight, Lasswell Speak on Communism, states:

"Professors Frank Knight, Harold Lasswell, and Frederick Schuman are to present their views on Communism in a symposium sponsored by the National Student League, as a pale pink protest to the recent ruling of the president's office refusing to the league the permission to hold mass meetings. The lecture will be held in Mandel Hall next Wednesday evening.

"In the symposium, entitled 'The Implications of Communism,' Professor Knight will discuss the economic implications, Professor Schuman will point out the political significance, and Professor Lasswell will speak on the psychological significance of Communism.

"Professor Knight in his address will stress especially the need for separating the ideals of Communism both from the creed of Marxian dogma generally associated with the movement and also from any definite inference from events in Russia. Mr. Knight said in a recent interview, 'An advanced industrial nation adopting Communism would certainly present an entirely different picture than Russia.' "

NEGRO SOCIALIST AGITATOR SPEAKS ON CAMPUS

Under the caption of "Negro Socialist to discuss machine-age slavery on Thursday," the Daily Maroon of March 7, 1933, stated:

"Frank Crosswaith, noted Negro Socialist orator and editor of the Negro Labor News Service, will reveal the evils of 'machine-age slavery' when he addresses a Mandel Hall audience Thursday at 4:30. He is brought to campus through the auspices of the Socialist Club. Admission is 10 cents.

"Herman Wolf, one of the leaders of the Socialist Club, characterized Crosswaith's record as one of brilliant and consistent service in behalf of the working people of this country. He came to America in his early teens from Frederiksted, St. Croix, in the Virgin Islands, starting out as an elevator operator. He is now teaching in the Rand School of Social Sciences in New York City, from which he was graduated.

"He is best known through his work as special organizer for the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters in its fight to rescue the Pullman porters and maids from slave conditions and give them the status of men and women."

The Daily Maroon, March 8, 1933, further ballyhoos the debate on communism staged by the Communist National Student League in an article, Knight, Lasswell, Schuman Speak on Communism Tonight, which goes on to state:

"Profs. Frank Knight, Harold Lasswell, and Frederick Schuman will present what has been heralded as the first complete discussion of what communism really means in the symposium on communism sponsored by the National Student League tonight at 8:15 in Mandel Hall. The speakers promise both interesting and humorous presentations of the economic, political, and psychological aspects of the subject.

"All three lecturers have recently been in Russia and have studied their subjects at first hand. Professor Knight, whose lecture on the Case for Communism by an ex-Liberal was published because of its widespread popularity, has been heard to declare that 'the true value of communism is in its religious appeal.' Professor Schuman, who has recently published a volume called American Foreign Relations With Russia, believes that all government is a combination of force plus mysticism. The third speaker, Professor Lasswell, who has written Psychopathology in Politics, will lecture under the handicap of his conviction that 'communication between individuals is impossible unless there is a fortuitous parallelism of his biopsychic elements.' "

SOCIALIST GROUP MEETS AT UNIVERSITY

The Socialist League for Independent Political Action met at the University of Chicago for its regular quarterly meeting on March 9, 1933. Speakers were Garfield V. Cox, professor of finance, and Harland H. Allen, consulting economist. The Daily Maroon, March 9, 1933, describes the League for Independent Political Action as follows:

"The League for Independent Political Action is a national organization endeavoring to unite liberal groups of all parties. Its program advocates broader ownership and control of national resources, wider distribution of the national wealth, a 30-hour week for labor, and international cooperation for the reduction and final abolition of trade barriers."

Describing the symposium on communism under the auspices of the National Student League, the Daily Maroon of March 9, 1933, stated that the speakers—Knight, Schuman, and Lasswell—"romped gaily through a variety of subjects and barely mentioned communism in the symposium, Implications of Communism, sponsored by the National Student League. * * * Prof. Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, departed long enough from his avowed communistic convictions to comment on the present political order, saying: 'Would to God the country were governed from Wall Street—but, alas, we have no Wall Street. We are enjoying at this moment the benefits of a New Deal with the old joker and a no-trump Cabinet.' Professor Schuman continued with a detailed outline of the steps in realizing a true communistic state."

SOVIET TOURS ADVERTISED

In the Daily Maroon of April 4, 1933, appears a sizable advertisement announcing Tour Soviet Russia—under the personal leadership of one of the foremost American authorities on the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Prof. Frederick L. Schuman, of the department of political science of the University of Chicago and author of the book, American Policy Toward Russia Since 1917. Other statements are that "he visited the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1928 and interviewed the heads of various government departments. He is particularly qualified on his return visit to evaluate the results of the 5-year plan and the prospects of the second plan."

The tour thus described was under the joint auspices of the Soviet fiscal agent, the Amalgamated Trust & Savings Bank, and the official Soviet tourist agency, Intourist.

PROFESSOR SCHUMAN LEADS TOUR TO UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

The Daily Maroon of April 7, 1933, announced the awarding of a political science fellowship to Prof. Frederick L. Schuman by the American Academy of Political Science "to enable him to study the control of foreign policy in Germany."

Schuman, a Communist, was enabled to kill two birds with one stone on his German-Russian tour—obtain anti-Fascist material (one of the main Communist objectives) and make favorable propaganda comparison in behalf of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The Daily Maroon states further:

"In July, Professor Schuman will lead a small group on a study tour through the Soviet Union, touching Leningrad, Moscow, Kharkov, Kiev, Odessa, the Crimea, the Black Sea, and the Caucasus. Several students from the university are expected to accompany Professor Schuman on his summer trip.

"This will be Professor Schuman's second trip to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics since the establishment of the new regime in Russia. His first experience, combined with his trip this spring and summer through the Fascist states of Europe, should provide an interesting contrast and evaluation of present and past conditions in Italy, Russia, and Germany."

It is to be noted as of especial importance that several students from the university were expected to accompany Professor Schuman on his summer trip.

PROFESSOR SCHUMAN SPEAKER FOR "RED" LEAGUE

On January 18, 1934, the Daily Maroon reported that Frederick L. Schuman would be a speaker at a National Student League tea in Ida Noyes Hall, stating as follows:

"Dr. Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, who has recently returned from a trip to Germany and Russia, will speak at a tea today given in his honor by the National Student League in Ida Noyes Hall at 3:30. Dr. Schuman will discuss his trip and the current situation in Nazi Germany. This will be his first public appearance since his return to America.

"Dr. Schuman believes, quoting from a statement to the Daily Moroon, that 'the Nazi war menace can be met only by an unflinching will on part of French bloc to maintain the existing distribution of armaments, territory, and power. The danger of the anti-Semitic and Fascist propaganda on the part of Hitlerite agents in the United States can be met only by a determination to expose and frustrate the schemes of the Nazi Party's foreign bureau.'

"A Soviet film, The End of St. Petersburg, portraying the Russian revolution, will be presented tomorrow under the auspices of the National Student League. The picture will be shown in the social science assembly hall, at 8:30. Admission charge is 20 cents. The events of the last days of the Czar, the World War, and the uprising in St. Petersburg will be depicted."

SOCIALISTS DEFEND AUSTRIAN REVOLUTION

The Austrian revolution of the spring of 1934 was a source of great satisfaction to Socialists in the United States, who acclaimed it as a great step forward in the international Socialist movement and raised hundreds of dollars for the revolting Austrian Socialists. The Daily Maroon of February 20, 1934, announced a symposium on the Austrian situation in which Profs. Maynard Krueger, Frederick Schuman, and Charles S. Ascher were the speakers. All three were defenders and upholders of the Socialist set-up in Austria.

STUDENT PROTESTS COMMUNIST FAVORITISM IN CLASS

Proof that communism is being taught in classes at the university is evidenced by a letter published in the Letters to the Editor column of the Daily Maroon of February 28, 1934, which reads as follows:

"It has seemed very striking to me that in Mr. Schuman's political science 201 course the students have found occasion to laugh at everybody and everything but the short résumé of the Communist Party. When the Silver Shirts and the Social Democrats were discussed there was always something to provoke hilarious laughter from the class.

"Of course, one answer to this question could be that the Communist Party is so rational that there is no room for a joke, and that the other parties are so ridiculous that they are always wide open for rapping.

"However, this is not the only possible answer. Perhaps our worthy and highly sophisticated professor is slightly, or should I say overwhelmingly, biased in the presentation of material. It seems peculiar that a distinguished professor who has been so sweeping and so biting in his criticisms of other phases of politics should suddenly become biased and almost sentimental in his presentation of one political party.

"In Schuman's own words, 'The only reason for emotionalism in the Daily Worker is that the editor has become smart enough to realize the appeal this makes to the average reader.' We say, then, that the editor of the Silver Horde was smart from the beginning.

"I am not on either side—neither in favor of nor opposed to communism. But I abhor a biased presentation in the schooling of undergraduates.

"W. H. S."

PROFESSOR SCHUMAN SCHEDULED FOR "RED" APPEARANCE

Prof. Frederick Schuman's appearance before another Communist group was announced in the Daily Maroon of March 14, 1934, which stated:

"The World Prepares for War will be Mr. Schuman's topic at a lecture sponsored by Pen and Hammer, Friday evening at 8 in Room 440 of the Lyon and Healy Building at 64 East Jackson Boulevard."

* * * * *

"Socialism is probably more dangerous on university campuses than communism because of its sugar coating and its appeal to middle-class students who 'think they think.' On this campus she (Mrs. Dilling) felt this particularly true in reference to the Socialist club. She disdained to discuss the National Student League and considered the recently formed Cosmos Club as only another example of the 'boring from within' tactics of the radicals. Such harsh treatment of this right-wing peace organization was due to the fact that two of its faculty sponsors are assistant professors, Frederick Schuman and Harry Gideonse." (Daily Maroon, May 15, 1934.)

* * * * *

"Speakers at the meeting included Prof. Frederick Schuman who voiced an opinion that although the university is exceedingly liberal in policy, it had erred in judgment in refusing to grant permission for the meeting. He believed that a universal, nondiscriminatory rule concerning circle meetings should be insisted upon." (Daily Maroon, November 15, 1934.)

PROFESSORS SUPPORT KRUEGER FOR ALDERMAN

Following the announcement of Krueger's candidacy for alderman, the Daily Maroon of January 10, 1935, reported the mobilization of support for Krueger, on the campus:

"New developments in the aldermanic campaign arose yesterday when three other members of the university faculty came out in support of Maynard C. Krueger, for alderman of the fifth ward. They are Louis Wirth, associate professor of sociology; Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science; and Bessie L. Pierce, associate professor of American history.

"Earlier in the week several members of the faculty came out in support of Joseph M. Artman for alderman. Among them are Paul H. Douglas, professor of economics; Harold F. Gosnell, associate professor of political science; Charles Merriam, chairman of the political science department; and Charles W. Gilkey, dean of the chapel.

"The Socialist Club of the university, in conjunction with the Jackson Park branch of the Socialist Party, is backing Krueger in the race. At the meeting of the club yesterday it was decided to organize a group to work with the Socialist Party in carrying on the campaign.

"New officers of the club elected at the meeting are Jesse Reed, Jr., organizer; Anne Gosenpud, secretary; Seymour Baker, treasurer; Truman Kirkpatrick, publicity chairman; and Fred Fortress, arrangements chairman."

COSMOS CLUB SPONSORS SYMPOSIUM ON WAR

The same issue (January 22, 1935) also announced a symposium by the Cosmos Club featuring Harry Gideonse and Fred Schuman on the subject of Economics and War. The article stated:

"Economics and War has been announced by the Cosmos Club as the subject of the Gideonse-Schuman symposium which is to be held Friday afternoon at 3:30 at Oriental Institute. Tickets for the occasion may be obtained at the information office and from Cosmos members.

"A reply will be made to Maj. J. L. Griffith's statement at the Maroon Peace Symposium last week, that students were too young and immature to understand war and that they should follow the advice of those who had been 'over there.' Harry Gideonse, associate professor of economics, stated yesterday, 'If you're young enough to die for old Seawash, you're young enough to know about some of the reasons for doing so.' With this in mind Gideonse intends to point out the problems which young people should understand regarding economics and war.

"What is the relation between the prophets of and the profits in war? is the question which Frederick Schuman, assistant professor of political science, will attempt to answer.

"While both men will speak on the same topic there will be different emphasis in their respective approaches. A discussion from the floor will follow the scheduled talks."

Selections of speakers for the Daily Maroon-Student Union Against War and Fascism symposium were announced in the Daily Maroon of January 24, 1935, as follows:

"Five student organizations yesterday announced the selection of representatives to present the views of their groups before the Daily Maroon-Student Union Against Fascism and War symposium on the prevention of war. The symposium will be held in the Oriental Institute Wednesday evening, January 30.

"Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity and Iron Mask honor society have chosen Ralph Nicholson as their speaker. It is expected that he will voice the opinions of the fraternity men on campus as a group. The Student Union Against Fascism and War has nominated Lewis Soffer as their representative, and the Cosmos Club delegate will be William Sherwood."

PROFESSOR GIDEONSE ATTENDS WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

Also in the same issue of the Maroon (January 25, 1935) appeared a further announcement of the Gideonse-Schuman symposium which stated:

"With more than one-half of the seats in Oriental Institute lecture hall sold, the Cosmos Club is expecting a capacity crowd this afternoon at 3:30 in the symposium which it is sponsoring between Harry D. Gideonse, associate professor of economics, and Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, on Economics and War.

"The two men will present different attitudes as to the manner in which economics and war are related. Each speaker will present his approach in an introductory talk which will be followed by cross-questioning between the two men. At the conclusion of the arguments the audience will have a brief opportunity for questions.

"Gideonse returned yesterday from Washington, where he attended the National Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, as guest speaker. His subject was Neutrality and War. Schuman is author of a book on American foreign policy toward Russia. He has spent considerable time in Russia observing the Communist experiment.

"The debate is being held in conjunction with the Cosmos Club's peace program on campus. Tickets are 15 cents, and are on sale at the information office."

PROFESSOR SCHUMAN SPOUTS COMMUNISM

Speaking before the Jewish society Avukah, Prof. Frederick Schuman dispensed his usual Communist ideology. The Daily Maroon of February 7, 1935, reported as follows:

"Can peace be maintained in a world where nationalism, as it exists today, prevails? Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, denied that it could when he spoke before a capacity crowd at the meeting of Avukah yesterday in social science assembly hall.

"Nationalistic ideology today breeds international and imperialistic wars, in the opinion of Mr. Schuman. 'Peace is highly inconceivable and improbable and can only be maintained by a pacifistic nationalism that would preserve peace between nations.'

"This necessitates the need for a world symbol that has sufficient emotional appeal for 100-percent peace.

"Mr. Schuman stated that there was no idealistic symbol present in the world today that could effect peace. The closest proponent of world unity on an emotional basis was the symbol of Catholicism, whose emotional appeal is effective and international.

"While nationalism makes for peace within a nation, by subduing violent groups within itself, it promotes greater violence between others nations," said Mr. Schuman. "More and bigger wars will result with our present nationalistic ideology, as viewed by Fascist policies, and until there is a world integration and unity on an emotional basis for peace, there can be no peace."

PROFESSORS ON PROGRESSIVE EDUCATION ASSOCIATION PROGRAM

It has already been pointed out that the Progressive Education Association is considered to be communistic in its objectives. The Daily Maroon of February 7, 1935, reported the attendance of seven Chicago University professors at a Progressive Education Association meeting in Chicago, stating as follows:

"Seven professors from the university will take part in the regional conference of the Progressive Education Association being held tomorrow and Saturday at the Palmer House. The theme of the conference is Modern Education at Work.

"Frank N. Freeman, professor of educational psychology, will preside at the general session on Saturday afternoon, and Grace Abbott, professor of public welfare administration, and former chief of the Children's Bureau, Office of Education in Washington, D. C., will conduct the session on problems of childhood.

"In the meeting of the liberal arts in colleges section, Chauncey S. Boucher, dean of the college, will discuss the University of Chicago plan in terms of the ideals which have motivated it and the practical situation in which it has been developed. George A. Works, dean of students, will preside.

"The parents section of the conference will be addressed by A. Eustace Haydon, professor of comparative religion, on the subject of How Can the Family Fulfill Its Social Responsibility to Its Youth? The problems and questions of social attitudes in the home will be discussed by Robert Redfield, dean of the division of social science, and Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science.

"Students may attend the conference if they obtain cards from Dean John D. Russell, in gradute education 121."

SCHUMAN DEFENDS RED MURDERS IN UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

In the notices of scheduled meetings in the Daily Maroon of February 8, 1935, upon which no comment was made, appeared the following:

"The Struggle for Academic Freedom. Karl Haessler. Social science 160 at 4:30."

"Debate: Are the Recent Soviet Executions Justifiable? Yes; Prof. Frederick Schuman. No; Attorney Irving Abrams. Lincoln Center, 700 Oakwood Boulevard, at 8:30."

The first, although not mentioned, is the meeting of the National Student League again featuring the Communist, Haessler, on a favorite Communist subject. The second is self-explanatory. Professor Schuman, in good Communist fashion, defended the atrocious Soviet slaughters as justifiable.

FACULTY MEMBERS PROMINENT IN ANTIWAR CONFERENCE

The Communist organized antiwar conference at International House included many of the Red-aiding members of the university faculty, as well as outsiders. The Daily Maroon of February 26, 1935, reported the following:

"Representatives of a majority of the organized student groups on campus will participate tomorrow in the opening session of the 2-day antiwar conference to be held tomorrow and Thursday. The conference will be under the chairmanship of Louis Wirth, associate professor of sociology.

"The first session tomorrow evening will be devoted to a symposium at which speakers will discuss the attitudes of the liberals, Socialists, Communists, labor organizations, and youth organizations on the peace question. The meeting will be held in the assembly hall of International House, beginning at 8.

"Both afternoon and evening programs have been arranged for the second day of the conference, Thursday. Five round table discussion sections, representing various groups of students, will meet from 3:30 to 5:30 in social science research building. Percy H. Boynton, professor of English, will lead the group of fraternity men; A. Eustace Haydon, professor of comparative religion, the theological students; Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, the social science students; Serena Lowe the young workers' and students' group; and Robert Morss, professor of English, the group on fascism.

"The final meeting will be held on Thursday evening at 8 in the social science assembly hall. The program will include general discussion on the various phases of the antiwar question and the consideration of resolutions drafted in the round table discussion sections."

"REDS" AND "PINKS" UNITE AT ANTIWAR CONFERENCE

The following report on the antiwar conference, appeared in the Daily Maroon of February 28, 1935:

"Midst a deluge of assorted free and salable literature fired with headlines such as, 'Fight. The revolutionary general strike is labor's only salvation.' 'Fight. Join the labor struggle in a war to end the capitalistic system,' and midst the general distribution of varied 'parties' propaganda, eight speakers opened the first all-campus conference for peace last night at International House. On the only common ground arrived at in meeting, it was agreed that students and labor would have to lead the way to peace.

"'It is not so much where we (the speakers) came from as where we are going,' stated Dean Charles Gilkey of the chapel, in opening the list of speeches. He pointed out that religious groups have been turning toward the left, using religious motives and convictions to combat war.

"Grace Abbott, professor of public welfare administration at the university, precipitating the arguments of the bulk of speakers at the symposium, lifted the wind from their sails by scoring the point that 'Membership in any particular party or organization will not accomplish the end against war.' Going further, she pointed out that no great war issues would be settled by bloodshed—instead, they would be settled by the 'long, slow, hard struggle to get right little by little.' In answering arguments against munitions makers, she vigorously stressed, 'If the American people did not want munitions makers, they would not have them here. It is a poor alibi to blame our war trouble on them—the people are to blame.'

"Arthur McDowell, representing the Young People's Socialist League, advocated that instead of throwing 'spitballs' at the Reserve Officers Training Corps, workingmen and students come out against exploitation of the masses.

"Robert Minor, noted Communist, in flourishing soap-box style, found considerable pleasure in reinterpreting statements of the President in the National Recovery Administration as procapitalistic and against labor as well as statements allegedly made by Army leaders concerning a Fascist coup of Washington. He expressed confidence that the next war would be fought by labor against trade-unionism. Concluding, he recommended a united front by all groups, regardless of affiliations, against imperialistic Fascist wars.

"As speaker for the American Federation of Labor, Serena Lowe criticized her national organization's lack of action against war, although numerous local resolutions have been adopted.

"'Workers must cooperate to prevent industry from shipping munitions in time of war,' summarizes Harry Shaw's views. He spoke for railroad labor which he said had recently in part pledged itself to follow such a move.

"Edward Strong, of the League Against Fascism and War, showed a need for organization and action as well as education of youth against war, while Albert Hamilton, for the Student League for Industrial Democracy, called students 'sheep in caps and gowns,' but pointed to the conference as a step toward intelligent action.

"Louis Wirth, assistant professor of sociology and chairman, announced today's schedule of the conference. At 3:30 four round tables will be held, including Social Science and War, Frederick Schuman, in Social Science 122; Fascism and War, Robert M. Lovett, in Social Science 107; Theological Students and War, A. Eustace Hayden, in Social Science 108, and the Fraternity Man and War, Percy Boynton, in Classics 13."

COMMUNIST PAPER BOASTS OF ANTIWAR CONFERENCE

The official Communist report of the antiwar conference, published in the Daily Worker of March 7, 1935, is also most informative:

"Round table discussions, led by Professors Hayden, Schuman, Boynton, and Harry Shaw, preceded the closing session.

"The conference brought to the fore the existence of a small pro-Fascist bloc among the students. However, the sentiment of the conference was overwhelmingly against them and their influence was negligible."

REDS CAUSE SPLIT IN COSMOS CLUB

The invasion of the socialistic-pacifist Cosmos Club by Communists caused trouble. The Daily Maroon of March 5, 1935, reported the resignation of Schuman as faculty adviser to both the Cosmos Club and the National Student League, as follows:

"Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science at the university, announced yesterday that he is dropping all his functions as faculty adviser to any student organizations. This action will affect both the Cosmos Club and National Student League.

"In announcing his resignation from these positions, Professor Schuman stated that the action was being taken for purely personal reasons. He will continue in his present capacity as adviser to the Cosmos Club until the end of the week, serving as arbiter in the present dispute between the two factions claiming the name Cosmos Club and the affiliation with the Carnegie Foundation for International Peace. Professor Schuman announced that he would make his decision in this matter within the next few days.

"Professor Schuman had no comment to make on the contentions of H. S. Greenwald, correspondent for the executive committee of the Cosmos Club, to the effect that there was actually no rift in the club. According to Greenwald, strife was external rather than internal between club members and insurgents who wish to reorganize the Cosmos Club with radically changed ideology and membership purged of nonsocialist elements."

PROFESSOR SCHUMAN SPEAKS TO "RED" GROUP

The Daily Maroon of March 28, 1935, announced a meeting of the Student Union Against War and Fascism with Schuman as speaker, stating:

"War Across Europe will be discussed by Frederick L. Schuman, assistant professor of political science, at the first meeting this quarter of the Student Union Against Fascism and War in social science assembly room tomorrow at 3:30.

"Taking his cue from the recent rearmament of Germany, the increase in appropriations for American defenses, the doubling of the period of compulsory military service in France, and the British White Paper, Professor Schuman will deal with the imminence of war in Europe.

"The Student Union, which visualizes itself as the organ of expression of antiwar sentiment on the campus, was organized only a few months ago, but has attracted attention because of its activities in connection with the peace strike, which they hope to help stage April 12.

"Last year on the same date 25,000 students in America went out on strike. This year an attempt is being made to make the strike an international one. April 12 is the eighteenth anniversary of America's entrance into the World War."

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PROFESSORS SPONSOR "RED" THEATER

On April 16, 1932, the League of Workers' Theaters was organized in New York City, as an American section of the International Workers Dramatic Union of Moscow, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

In January 1933 the Chicago Workers Theater was organized by the Communist John Reed Club of Chicago, and announcement of the new group appeared in the local Communist paper Workers Voice of January 21, 1933. In March 1933 announcement was made that the Workers Theater of Chicago would stage a Communist play, Precedent, at the Goodman Theater on April 8 and 9, 1933. Sponsors of the Chicago Workers Theater were listed on the announcement as follows. Those marked with an asterisk are members of the faculty of the University of Chicago:

Sherwood Anderson, Malcolm Cowley, Jacob L. Crane, Waldo Frank, Michael Gold, Albert Goldman, *Prof. Eustace Hayden, *Prof. Harold Lasswell, *Mary MacDowell, Prof. Scott Nearing, Dr. Curtis Reese, *Prof. Frederick Schuman, *Prof. Louis Wirth, Prof. James M. Yard, *Prof. Robert Morss Lovett.

ROFESSOR SCHUMAN HEADS BOLSHEVIK-AID GROUP

In April 1933 Prof. Frederick Schuman was announced as chairman of a new group calling itself the Chicago Provisional Committee for Recognition and Normal Trade Relations With Soviet Russia, headquarters of which were located at 105 West Madison Street, room 1901.

PROFESSOR SCHUMAN ON COMMUNIST DEFENSE COMMITTEE

Jan Wittenber, a Chicago Communist, who went into southern Illinois as an organizer for the Communist International Labor Defense was arrested with John Adams, an organizer of the Communist Marine Workers Industrial Union, and held in jail in Hillsboro, Ill., charged with sedition, in June 1934. The Communist magazine New Masses of September 4, 1934, reported the organization of the Jan Wittenber Defense Committee to work for the release of Jan Wittenber and his fellow conspirators. On the committee was Prof. Frederick Schuman of the University of Chicago.

LOVETT AND SCHUMAN SPONSOR RED BALL

An anti-war ball was staged at the Knickerbocker Hotel, Chicago, on May 5 by the Communist organized and controlled American League Against War and Fascism, Chicago branch. A letterhead of the anti-war ball committee, dated April 2, 1934, listed Prof. Robert Morss Lovett and Prof. Frederick L. Schuman as among the sponsors of the affair.

STUDENT AND FACULTY MEMBERS SPONSOR RED CONGRESS

A letterhead of the Chicago arrangement committee of the Second United States Congress Against War and Fascism of the American League Against War and Fascism listed Virginia Bashe, student, and Robert Morss Lovett, chairman Mary MacDowell, and Frederick L. Schuman of the University of Chicago, as members of the committee. Lovett is also a vice chairman of the American League Against War and Fascism, and was one of the principal speakers at the congress held in Chicago, September 28-30, 1934.

PROFESSORS JOIN IN DEMANDS FOR REPEAL OF SEDITION LAW

The Midwest branch of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, another Communist organized united front, mass organization, and the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee, joined in sending a delegation to Governor Horner to demand repeal of State sedition laws. The Daily Worker of November 7, 1934, reported as follows:

"A demand for the repeal of the Illinois criminal syndicalism law was presented to Gov. Henry Horner last Thursday in Chicago by a distinguished delegation sponsored jointly by the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee and the Midwest branch of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners.

"Included in the delegation were Dr. Frederick L. Schuman and Dr. Harold D. Lasswell, of the University of Chicago; Dr. James Maxon Yard, eminent religious educator; Dr. Curtis W. Reese, director of Abraham Lincoln Center; Dr. Felix Levy, prominent rabbi; Dr. Rachelle Yarros, director of the Illinois Social Hygiene Institute and for many years coworker at Hull House with Jane Addams; the Reverend W. B. Waltmire; Miss Jessie Binford, chairman of the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee; Hugh Miller, its executive secretary; Llewellyn Jones, literary critic, now with the Christian Century; Nathaniel Samuels, coeditor with Miss Narcissa Swift of Polity magazine; John Groth, staff artist of Esquire magazine; and Lawrence Lipton, acting secretary of the Midwest branch of the National Committee."

Mr. Chairman, the thought I want to bring to the Members of the House of Representatives at this time is this: Doctor Schuman is just one of hundreds and hundreds of professors who have been jerked from the universities of this country by the New Deal to come down here to Washington in positions that give them the opportunity to work with this problem in a national way rather than with students in the classrooms.

Personally, I have no objections to the subject of communism being discussed and taught in the classroom under the subject of communism, but I do raise my voice in protest against the ideology of communism being taught to the students of this country under the disguise of social science, history, English, political science, or any other title, and not discussing it on its own merits.

I for one am not afraid of the students of this country discussing communism, because I firmly believe if the true principles of communism are taught under the subject of communism that 99 percent at least of the students will appreciate the value of our republican form of government in this country in comparison to the principles of communism.

I cannot forget that one of the most prominent members of the American Legion in the United States sent his daughter to the University of Michigan. She was one of the most beautiful, most loyal and patriotic students who ever enrolled in this institution of higher learning. But when she graduated, she was an avowed Communist, married a Negro Communist and moved to Soviet Russia.

I cannot forget the conversation of my neighbor in Chicago, walking to the station one morning, when he said to me: "Fred, I do not know what has come over my boy. He has just returned from the University of Wisconsin, and he has the strangest ideas. He is telling me that the institution of the home is obsolete and old-fashioned and belongs to the horse-and-buggy days, that religion is the opiate of the people, and many, many other radical thoughts." I said to my friend: "Who are his professors?" To which he replied: "Oh, I do not know, but the University of Wisconsin is recognized as one of the leading educational institutions of this country." I had to sympathize with my friend, but he had lost his boy to the cause of communism.

Under the New Deal administration, Washington has become a paradise for these university professors who embrace the ideology of communism and at the same time appreciate the fact that they can be of more value in promoting the ideology of communism by not taking out red cards in the Communist Party.

Mr. Chairman, I have never at any time had the least fear that this beloved country of ours and our Constitution would ever be destroyed by enemies from without; but under the New Deal administration I have every reason in the world to believe it has a good possibility of being destroyed from within.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely and conscientiously believe that if the subcommittee of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] is the chairman, will take further time to investigate the statements made against Dr. Frederick L. Schuman that I have outlined in my speech here today, wherein I included certain excerpts from the book, How Red is the University of Chicago? they will concur in my opinion that Dr. Frederick L. Schuman should be eliminated from the taxpayers' pay roll, as well as Goodwin L. Watson, William E. Dodds, jr., and Robert Morss Lovett.

The eyes of all patriotic Americans are focused upon the actions of this Congress. I plead with the Members of this House to have the courage of their convictions and be equal to their responsibilities to the people of this country, in seeing that no one remains on the pay rolls of the Federal Government but those whose Americanism cannot be questioned.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PATMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2788) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Walter A. Allen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUSBEY] be permitted to revise and extend the remarks that he made this afternoon during the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1943 and include therein certain excerpts and certain articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I made over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be granted leave of absence from May 30 until June 7.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OBJECTIONABLE BOOKS

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Chicago, a few moments ago, mentioned an investigation of the Dies committee. That brings to my mind something that I presented to that committee, but as yet no attention has been paid to it. On Lincoln's birthday I suggested that scandalous books ought to be removed from the libraries of the country where children and young people read them. I think that is far more important in connection with this crisis than all the other investigations, inasmuch as this reaches our youth. The authors of these books, since this request was made, have consented to remove the books from the files, with one exception, Judge Felix E. Alley. One other author, Gaston B. Means, is dead and another cannot be located. I wrote him and asked him if he would see that the publishers of the book did not send it to libraries where the young may read it and he refused and still maintained that the Great Emancipator was illegitimate.

The book states things about the mother of Abraham Lincoln which I should not mention here for the children of the land to read.

I have written to him a second time and he has refused to answer. I have since sought an appointment at his home in North Carolina and he has refused to answer this letter.

I think while we are doing things with reference to the departments we ought to see to it that books of this kind going throughout this country and saying things about a man who has passed on almost a century ago, and about his angel mother, who are not here to defend themselves, should not be placed in a library where young people and the youth of the land read them.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

SO-CALLED RUMP COMMITTEE HAS NO OFFICIAL STANDING

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in common with scores of citizens of Pennsylvania, particularly of my own city, I am very much disturbed, as they are, concerning reports appearing in certain newspapers in our city regarding a committee which I understand has no official sanction of the House of Representatives but which, according to the press reports, is spoken of as a congressional committee.

I read from an article published in the press of May 8 in the city of Philadelphia:

> A congressional committee will go to Philadelphia May 17 to study the effects of rationing and to seek methods for its improvement, it was announced today.

Definitely, that is a statement of an official congressional committee going to the city of Philadelphia. Of course, I cannot attach any responsibility to the members of this so-called congressional committee for the statement as it appears in the press, but inasmuch as there were interviews granted to the reporter who wrote this article, it seems to me there is some responsibility attached to those who are posing, if they are, as a committee of the House of Representatives. That is a very, very serious thing. If we are going to be confronted in this House and in this country with Members who have no official sanction, who form rump committees and travel at their own will up and down the country, holding hearings and, with the support that might be given them by certain newspapers, implying and leading the people to believe that they officially represent the United States Government, it is something that this House should certainly take cognizance of and pay some attention to.

I quote further from this article what a Member of this House, my colleague from Philadelphia, a gentleman for whom I have the highest regard and who is a personal friend of mine, but who it was stated will be the chairman of this congressional subcommittee, had to say. I refer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

> "As for the congressional subcommittee," SCOTT said, "it intends to learn at first hand the problems of rationing as they affect the public. We intend to concern ourselves with improvement of and the correction of inequities in rationing," SCOTT said, "and to do what we can to make rationing work."

This so-called hearing is going to be held in the Federal Building of the city of Philadelphia. I am informed that they have received the privilege of utilizing certain space in that building, but I fear that the authorization was not official. However, neither I nor any of my colleagues would protest against their utilization of any space because, after all, they are Members of Congress, and I think it is only right to accord them any courtesy which can be accorded to them, even if they do not proceed in the proper manner in requesting it.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Not at this time. I shall be glad to yield a little bit later for any question my good friend or any other Member of the House may care to ask.

I am informed by many of my constituents and by reputable businessmen of the city of Philadelphia that they have been solicited by certain individuals and certain organizations in the city of Philadelphia to come before this so-called committee to make squawks and to arouse resentment on the part of our people. That is a very serious thing. After all, we are engaged in a war. I know that in the administration of any great undertaking like the Office of Price Administration, with all its ramifications, in a country as large as the United States, with the varied economic interests that require supervision during a war, irritations are inevitable. I know that a great many people protest about gasoline rationing. I am mindful right now that in today's Philadelphia papers there is an article to the effect that the O. P. A. officials have subpenaed or ordered certain individuals before them, 250 of them, who have been apprehended using their automobiles to go from Philadelphia to the race track at Pimlico in the last week.

We hear a lot of talk about everybody being willing to make sacrifices in this war. There is too much talk about being willing to make sacrifices and not enough of actually making them without squawking and complaining about them.

I do not think the American boys out on the beach heads in Guadalcanal, I do not think those Americans who at such a terrific price in blood have been part of that great victorious army in Africa, I do not think our gallant American airmen in the southwest Pacific or our gallant sailors maintaining a patrol on all the oceans of the globe, are going to be served or helped by any group such as this which is traveling throughout the country and arousing the resentment which an undertaking of this kind will inevitably arouse against the Government of the United States.

If the propaganda agents of the Axis Powers had endeavored to formulate a plan to disrupt our morale, they could think of nothing more effective than a plan of this kind. Of course, I am not going to impugn the motives of my colleagues, my colleague from Philadelphia or the others who may be associated with him in this undertaking. I would not do that. But the very fact that certain groups in Philadelphia have already prepared to make political capital out of this thing certainly shows how dangerous, how serious it is. To my mind, it is just a wee bit—and I am charitable in that respect—reprehensible on the part of anyone who attempts to convey to the people of the city of Philadelphia the impression or the implication that this is an official committee of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield to my good friend from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Am I to understand from the gentleman that this is an unofficial meeting of a group of Members of Congress, not a subcommittee of any standing committee or select committee of the House?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I read something in the press yesterday, I may say to the gentleman, to the effect that the Speaker of the House was questioned by the reporters at his press conference with respect to this committee, and my recollection of what I read in the press was that the Speaker stated that this was not an official committee, it was not a committee of the House of Representatives, and it had no standing as such.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And it is the impression of the gentleman's constituents in Philadelphia that this is an official committee?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. There is such an impression, because I and my colleagues from that city have received numerous inquiries. We have received letters concerning it, and I know from my personal knowledge that certain people in Philadelphia have been active in soliciting citizens to go before this committee and make complaints about various things, and have told them it is an official congressional committee.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Then I think certainly, if the gentleman will yield further, that our colleagues who are engaged in this activity should be very careful to make it plain to the public that they are not representing any committee of Congress, that they are not representing the Congress itself, but that they are acting in their individual capacities as Members of Congress.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman is right, and I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman understands that both the gentleman who is speaking and myself certainly can have no impression that it is an official committee of Congress, because nothing has been said either in correspondence or in the newspapers other than what would indicate clearly that this is a Republican food study committee, and I may say that from the reactions that we have already had, that it seems to be very much needed.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I only know what I read in the newspapers about that, which is published as the result of an interview with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT]. That is all my constituents know, and those constituents see clearly that it is published as a result of an interview with my friend.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, read the entire article.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will let the gentleman do that in his own time.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not talking for the newspapers.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will leave it to the gentleman to read it completely. Let me state this: Of course, it does state that it is a food-study committee of the Republicans in Congress, but it also speaks of it as a congressional subcommittee. In the particular paragraph that I just read the newspaper article says:

> Such a committee, it was suggested—

And I will deviate from the article to say that I do not know who suggested it—

> Such a committee, it was suggested, could make a nonpartisan contribution by its studies of the question of whether the law had been complied with.

Let me tell you something about the rationing of rubber in the State of Pennsylvania before O. P. A. appeared. Members of the tire-rationing boards and other rationing boards in Philadelphia were appointed upon the recommendation of the State council of defense, and in my own congressional district, and in all other congressional districts in our city they were so tinged with politics that it stank to high heaven. In one instance a tire-rationing board was plunged right into politics, openly and viciously. The members were Republican politicians appointed on recommendation of the State council for defense. They were audacious enough to hold their meetings in the Westmoreland Republican Club, in the 25th ward, in my district. And they boldly placed a sign in the window of that club reading "Tire rationing board meets here every Thursday." That is how they handle those things. As I stated, there are bound to be some irritations in a program of this kind, but I do not think any Member of Congress serves any good purpose or does any good to further the war effort by going around stirring up resentment against a program which is being honestly and efficiently administered.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am very glad the gentleman has brought this matter to the attention of the House. All of us know that it is sometimes necessary for the Congress to appoint special committees to make investigations, and in order to have these special committees, action in the House is taken, and always when a committee of that kind is set up, a resolution is passed, which provides funds so that the special committees can operate, so that they can issue subpenas and carry on the proper type of investigation. We all know that special committees have been appointed by the Speaker of the House, but what concerns me in this is whether this rump committee is being financed by some individual or group of individuals, and what group of individuals is furnishing the money, because naturally it costs money to conduct an investigation of this kind.

It is said they intend to go all over the country. I would like to know whether it is for purely partisan political purposes that this rump committee is traveling around the country, and I would like to know definitely how much money they have already expended, and how much they intend to spend.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] a question?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Particularly in view of the fact that the reports are carried that this is a congressional subcommittee. To my mind it appears to be a little bit derogatory to the respect in which this House should be held if any group of individuals——

Mr. SCOTT. We expect to go up there and have a full hearing.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If this committee should appear in my city of Pittsburgh, I shall certainly make every attempt I possibly can to inform the public that the committee has no power whatsoever; that it simply has the same power as any group of individuals might have, so that the public will not be misinformed, and no misrepresentations made.

It appears to me that the Membership of this House should maintain its dignity and maintain the respect that the country has for it by exposing this partisan committee which was set up, as I understand, by the chairman of the Republican National Committee. Particularly, I would like to know where the money is coming from and have an accounting.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am glad my colleague has made that statement, because he asked a very pertinent question that did not occur to me. Perhaps my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], to whom I am now going to yield briefly, because I understand he has his own time, but if he cares to have me yield to answer that, I will yield.

Mr. SCOTT. My question is——

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Is it addressed to me or to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER]?

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] to answer this: The public hearing in Philadelphia will be by a committee of 14 Congressmen, representing 14,000,000 people. Is not the gentleman's intention in taking the floor today to seek to intimidate or terrorize the public or prevent the public from testifying before 14 Members of the United States Congress? Is he not seeking to gag the public?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that no such intent exists. The gentleman knows that my remarks are made necessary because he and some others very foolishly conveyed to the public through the medium of the press that they constitute an official committee of the House of Representatives. I am glad to learn that they are taking up a whole army—14 Members.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Committees like that have been referred to in the past as rump committees. They have no authority or power, unlike an official committee of the House that goes out and hears testimony and has that testimony printed and sent to each Member of the House and Senate and to all executive departments. A committee such as the gentleman describes has no such power. It can make no report. It has no power to make a report.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Every special committee appointed by the House of Representatives is composed of Representatives of both parties.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Both parties, certainly.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The Republican Party and the Democratic Party. But this is an ex parte committee, so that any result of the studies, of course, should be looked upon with the greatest suspicion.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. At that point, I want to read further from the newspaper article, just on the point that my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] brought out. First, I want to emphasize this, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] did not reply to the question asked by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER], as to who was paying the expenses of these members.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I am a member of that committee, and whatever traveling I have done with that committee and will do with that committee will come out of my own pocket and not out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. We know that it cannot come out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SCOTT. The members are paying their own expenses to and from Philadelphia out of their own pockets and are glad to do it because we regard it as a necessary and essential public service.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am glad to hear that because there has been a lot of speculation around Philadelphia on that question, too.

Mr. MYERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will yield to my colleague after I read this paragraph. This press report says further:

Later he indicated—

Speaking of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT]—

Later he indicated the subcommittee will report to the full committee, which in turn will report to Congress, and at the same time will take up with the Office of Price Administration all problems which can be met by changes in administrative regulations. Further, any legislation which may seem advisable as a result of the hearings will be recommended.

Now, if that is not intended to convey to the people that this is a congressional committee, then I cannot interpret the English language.

Mr. MYERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. This Philadelphia meeting may merely carry out the thought that was advanced not so many months ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] that they—these 14 Republican Congressmen—are of "the best stock and represent the real brains, grit, and backbone of America."

Mr. SCOTT. That was a pretty dirty crack. That was made solely for the purpose of publishing in the Philadelphia Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAMSPECK). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] has the floor. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I had yielded to my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] and he had not concluded.

Mr. MYERS. It seems to me that in this Government the Executive is accused of trespassing upon the prerogatives of the Congress, but it seems to me also that the Congress desires to appoint all the personnel of the executive departments and also regulate all of the actions of the executive departments. We have in this Congress a number of committees that have been looking into the food situation and into the O. P. A. Former Senator Prentiss Brown has testified 15 or 16 times before standing congressional committees. I believe he has appeared 3 or 4 times before the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate. I think twice before the Small Business Committee of the House. I think twice before the Small Business Committee of the Senate. He has also personally appeared before several other committees of the Congress. So we have had Mr. Brown down 14 or 15 or 16 times before standing committees of the House and Senate. We have had many other officials of the O. P. A. down numerous times before standing committees of the Congress. In fact, I am of the opinion that the Congress through its standing committees has a complete picture of the entire situation which the rump committee purposes to reinvestigate. I think, Mr. Speaker, that an attempt of this sort, a hearing of this sort, is a bold statement by 14 Republican Members of Congress that they have no confidence in the standing committees of the House. They do not believe that the standing, nonpartisan committees of this Congress have looked into this subject fairly or have looked into it at all, but they believe that they, a partisan group, can accomplish much more than the standing committees of the House and Senate. It is difficult to see how this rump Republican group can study this subject in a nonpartisan way when they refuse to recognize that many of the standing committees of the House and Senate, composed of both Republicans and Democrats, have given this subject of food and rationing much study.

So they are going to bring the officials of the O. P. A. in Philadelphia and the officials of the O. P. A. in other cities and in other States of this Nation before their rump committee, and the time of these officials is going to be taken up in answering the partisan questions of this partisan group. I regret that my colleagues do not have sufficient confidence in the standing committees of this House; I regret that they feel it necessary to go beyond the walls of this Congress and appoint a special committee of their own choosing without consulting the Speaker, without consulting the man who has been elected by this Congress as its Speaker, who is the Speaker of all the Members of this Congress, be they Republicans or Democrats; they did not consult him about the appointment of this committee which they call a congressional committee, but they travel throughout the country and take testimony under false colors, and this Congress should and must resent such actions.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] is to be congratulated because he at least has brought to the attention of the people of Philadelphia the fact that this is a partisan committee.

Only today I met some people from my city, a group of labor representatives who told me that they were going to appear some day next week before a congressional committee on the subject of rationing. I asked them if they knew that it was not a congressional committee but merely a meeting of a number of Republican Congressmen. They said, "Why, no; we thought it was an official congressional committee."

I think it is unfortunate in this time of great national emergency that we should have partisan committees going throughout the country investigating subjects which the Congress itself has already investigated.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I thank my colleague. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] is absolutely correct. It is a question of the dignity of the House of Representatives; it is a question of the confidence in which the Members of the House have in the Speaker. Definitely this is a rump committee, as my good friend from Texas has so pointedly stated; not only that, it is a committee which I cannot conceive being anything but thoroughly partisan, and I repeat that any partisan undertaking in a matter of this kind at a time when the very life of the Nation is at stake can do no good; it is calculated to do infinite harm, and must be music in the ears of the dictators of the Axis Powers.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. It is my understanding that all these gentlemen favor price control because they know we must have price control to avoid ruinous inflation. It is only a question of how the law should be administered. This being true, there are more Republicans in O. P. A., at least 10 percent more—there are at least 60-percent Republicans in O. P. A. They could probably make better progress if they would confine their efforts to the Republicans in O. P. A. who are making some of these foolish rules and regulations.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may have something there; I believe there is food for thought in what the gentleman has said. My point in bringing this matter to the attention of the House and to the attention of the people today, is to point out to them that this is not a congressional committee; it is a purely partisan committee, and it is organized and traveling around the country for purely partisan reasons. I think, perhaps, its present visit to Philadelphia is tied up to some extent with the forthcoming municipal election campaign in that city.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will yield if the gentleman wants to ask a question and provided that if I do not have sufficient time in which to answer that he will yield me some of his time.

Mr. SCOTT. The question can be quickly asked and even more quickly answered. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make reference to some representatives of labor organizations who wish to be heard.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I want to correct the gentleman right there.

Mr. SCOTT. I am glad they do want to be heard and we are going to give them an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Just a moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] did not say they wanted to be heard; he said they were under the impression that this was a congressional committee that was sitting in Philadelphia next week with official sanction and authority, but that they did not know it was a rump committee. They will know from this moment on, however.

Mr. SCOTT. This is my question, Does the gentleman have any objection to the representatives of the working people in Philadelphia telling their troubles to a Philadelphia Member and his associates?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am sorry the gentleman asked me that question. I wish the gentleman had not asked me that question because he provokes a reply from me that I would rather not make, but through his insistence on the question he makes me give him this reply: I wish the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. SCOTT] had been as attentive to labor leaders and labor organizations in Philadelphia in the past when he could have been of assistance to them and when they probably did endeavor to make known their wishes to him when certain legislative and other matters were about to be considered, which vitally affected the workers in our city.

Mr. SCOTT. They have found me very friendly and always glad to talk to them.

Mr. PATMAN. If I understand the gentleman correctly, what he objects to is the attempted use and abuse of the House of Representatives as a sounding board for strictly partisan political purposes?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. That is it exactly, and that is how the people in Philadelphia are going to feel about this committee when the truth is brought home to them fully.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Philadelphia who preceded me spoke to only six Democrats who are now present in the Chamber, three of whom are from Pennsylvania, I think the matter is one in which Philadelphia is interested and I shall have no more to say at this time.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] is recognized for 30 minutes.

INVESTIGATION OF FOOD SITUATION IN PHILADELPHIA

Mr. PLOESER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, may I say for the benefit of the very distinguished chairman of the Small Business Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], for whom I have the very highest regard, that he and I both know after having had much to do with the Office of Price Administration that the Republican Party is not desirous of laying any claim to the long-haired boys down there, and I do not mean by that that the Democratic Party lays claim to them. They have sort of been born in your basket and there is hardly any way of getting rid of them. The great stream of those bearing professorial togas in O. P. A. belong to a society in America which does not come from either old-line democracy and certainly not old-line or modern-day Republicanism. Whether they come from Philadelphia or not, I do not know.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. PLOESER. May I say, too, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] knows and I know through many months of work with the O. P. A. that there are very, very few Americans in either party who would claim them. He and I both agree they ought to all go back to their college classrooms.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the gentleman again.

May I say to the gentleman from Philadelphia, since this particular performance has been instigated by a request for a special order on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY], that I would prefer not to yield for a few minutes, but will agree to yield in plenty of time for him and his colleagues on the other side to catch the dead line of the Philadelphia Record, which has undoubtedly inspired this whole proceeding in order to terrify and, if possible, to gag free American citizens from talking to their own Congressmen, including one of their own Philadelphia Representatives, and including the Congressman at Large from the State of Pennsylvania.

Further, I would like to extend to the gentleman from Philadelphia a full, free, and frank invitation to listen in on the proceedings, because we do not conduct our proceedings along Gestapo lines. We have learned from bad examples not to be influenced by any plea for secret meetings or secret covenants secretly arrived at in bureaucratic headquarters. It is our purpose to hear openly all who wish to be heard, all of those who cannot be terrified by threats to gag them, all of those who cannot be driven away from a free and open opportunity to tell their troubles to their Congressmen by the sudden, concerted, and detrimental efforts to use the local press or that part of it which has instigated this proceeding for a smear attack upon the people of Philadelphia who wish to be heard and upon a group of Congressmen who wish to hear them, a group which has been organized with the full and free consent of the Republican Party in the Congress, not a new thing, but something which has been done many times before and many years before, simply a continuance of study programs in a determined effort to establish a method of constructive criticism and of constructive research looking toward the improvement of various features of the Government.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand it, the purpose of the hearing at Philadelphia is to help people who are hungry get food?

Mr. SCOTT. Precisely.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have followed this somewhat and I hope to be able to dig up enough money out of my own pocket to pay my fare to go along on the trip.

Mr. SCOTT. Since the gentleman and I do not have access to the Federal Treasury, I assume the gentleman will be there by reason of use of his own funds.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It looks to me as if there is need for some kind of a hearing in Philadelphia because I see from the papers that 850 food stores have closed up.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I also note that eight large wholesale poultry dealers were indicted by the grand jury in Philadelphia for violating the O. P. A. laws and for dealing in black-market poultry, tremendously raising the price that the consumers had to pay.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes. These are things, I may say, which they do not want us to bring out.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Briefly.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will be very brief. I think the gentleman from Minnesota has stated it very well—that these black-market operators have been indicted, which shows that the Federal Government and the O. P. A. is on the job protecting the citizens of Philadelphia. He does not favor their going scot free without indictment or any action on the part of the O. P. A., I hope.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Certainly not.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. That committee is not going up to the city of Philadelphia to help these black-market operators? From what the gentleman says, I am a little apprehensive that that may be their purpose.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The fact that these men have been indicted and 850 food stores have been closed up and the further fact that the people of Philadelphia and the surrounding area are not getting poultry, is evidence that there is something wrong and something should be investigated.

Mr. SCOTT. I agree wtih the gentleman.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I think that this committee is not only doing something that ought to be commended, but something that is very desirable and very fitting. I imagine that they are going to render service to the people of Philadelphia such as the citizens would like to have.

I would like to know, and I think this is something all of them would like to know, and that is this: Surely it is the duty of the individual Congressman to go into his district, listen to his people, return and make recommendations to the O. P. A. or to a legislative committee. If that is a good thing why is it not a better thing for him to take some of his colleagues along who would like to help with the problem?

Mr. SCOTT. That is precisely what we have in mind. Now, if I may have a few minutes without interruption, I will say to the gentleman that we do welcome the participation at the hearings of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, including our colleagues from Philadelphia and we would urge them, if they do not care to participate in a free and open public hearing, because they cannot stand criticism, then I would suggest that it is better to go to the Rules Committee and ask for a rule establishing a congressional committee to investigate not only the black markets, but the many other complaints which have come in from all over the country, from people who are begging, literally imploring the Members of Congress to come and hear them concerning the operation of the black markets, come and hear them tell that they cannot get food and hear them tell of their difficulties in rationing.

The plain, ordinary, everyday citizen of America has not been given a decent hearing in Washington or before the O. P. A., and he is glad, I am sure, to have the Members of Congress go back to their own home districts, associate with them and give them the full and free hearing to which they are entitled and which they have every right to have without any interference.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply gratified and I am appreciative of the invitation to sit in with my colleague at this meeting in Philadelphia, but I hope the gentleman does not mean to say that these people have been gagged and bulldozed and have not been able to appear before a congressional committee of the House or the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. I was referring to the O. P. A., if the gentleman will recall; I said the O. P. A. and the departments.

Mr. MYERS. I hope he does not believe that the people who have been complaining have not had a forum; I hope he does not mean that the Members of Congress, or the committee of which the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is chairman, or the Committee on Agriculture of the House, or the Agricultural Committee in the Senate, or the Smith Committee, have not given these people an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SCOTT. I was pointing out that the chairman of this Republican Food Study Committee has done a great deal to give these people an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. MYERS. Personally I would much rather let this matter be handled in the regular way, through the standing committees. I am not saying that by way of criticism, but I think it is much better for investigations of this kind to be made by the constituted committees of the House and the Senate and I hope the gentleman does not mean this as a reflection on these committees.

Mr. SCOTT. I have great respect for the gentlemen who have just spoken. There seems to be a great deal of misapprehension. If I may proceed, there is one thing I would like to clear up right now. I regard him as one of the finest Members of this House, and I can say the same thing of our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY]. But they appear to have considerable fear of revelations they expect to hear in Philadelphia.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, it is very seldom that people living outside of Washington have an opportunity to appear and lay their complaints and troubles before a congressional committee and this gives them such an opportunity.

May I say further that the committee of which my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is chairman, resulted on account of action taken by the minority in appointing a committee to make studies of the business situation in the country; and, the committee of which the very able gentleman is chairman, resulted from that action.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield; I would like an opportunity to complete my statement. Everybody is making this speech except me.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. SCOTT. I am sorry that I cannot yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I simply wanted to say that the action creating this committee was taken a day before.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman has made his point, but his committee was born of the activity of Republicans in demanding aid for the small businessman.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. SCOTT. I cannot yield further. I would like to make a part of this speech myself.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman who has the floor has a right to be protected by the Chair. He has declined to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. SCOTT. The point which I have been seeking to make for some time is this, that despite this effort to frighten the timid and to scare away those people who have sought long to be heard and to testify in Philadelphia, like the people of Boston, where between 30 and 40 witnesses, including consumers, representatives of the great labor organizations, processors, wholesalers, and retailers, all welcomed the opportunity to be heard fully and courteously by this committee, the people in Philadelphia are looking forward to the same opportunity. I am sure they will resent very much an effort to create the impression in Philadelphia that the Members of Congress who are going up there to hear them do not have the right to hear them. They most certainly do have a full and absolute right to hold such a hearing. They expect to go through with it. They expect to hear the people of Philadelphia, including the representatives of the great labor organizations, many of whom have already accepted invitations from the committee to be present. We expect to hear them. We welcome their testimony. We know they do not want prices increased nor do they want the black market. We know that they are in trouble, that they are concerned, that they are worried about where they are going to get food.

I can well understand why some of my friends on the other side of the aisle might not want to hear these representatives of the working people and the consumers generally. I understand that. But I want the gentleman to know we are going to hear them. I want him to know that we are friendly to their point of view, that we are anxious to have them come there and tell us why it is that they cannot buy the necessities of life, why it is that they have to pay exorbitant and outrageous prices which are fixed by the black market, why it is that no committee from the side of the House of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] has ever shown the slightest interest in coming to Philadelphia and holding a hearing of this kind.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman asking me a question?

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman can answer that, why he has or why he has not, I shall be glad to hear it, but I do not yield for another speech.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will tell the gentleman this. Because we have respect for the organization of the House of Representatives, because we have respect for the orderly procedure that has been set down under the rules of this House, and because we have respect and confidence in the Speaker of this House, we would not dare go throughout the country posing as an official congressional committee. That is my answer to the gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman has made his reply. It is not a very good one.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that?

Mr. SCOTT. No; I will not yield at this moment.

No one can have any greater respect for the Speaker of this House or for this great body than I. I have regarded the Congress of the United States with the greatest respect and the greatest awe ever since I was old enough to know what the Congress was. I yield to no one in my respect for this body or for its officers. But I submit the gentleman has not answered the question, because the gentleman has not shown any congressional committee the way to Philadelphia. It is only 2 hours and 20 minutes away, and the gentleman has not shown any committee the way to Philadelphia. You can get there by the railroads, by bus lines, or by your own car, if you were permitted to drive it.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. Is it not a well-recognized fact in Washington that next to winning the war the most important problem before the American people is the threatened scarcity of food?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no question about it.

Mr. JENKINS. That is a fact. The gentleman knows that our Food Study Committee has already brought that out on numerous occasions, and that the people of the Nation are aroused everywhere—not only in Philadelphia but in every city and in every hamlet in the Nation. Everybody who has made a study of the proposition knows that there is a dire threat of great inconveniences to come to us because of the failure of the policies relative to food by those who have them in charge. If these two distinguished gentlemen from Philadelphia, if they are not advised on this fact, will attend the gentleman's meeting in Philadelphia next Monday, I am sure they will be awakened to the fact that in Philadelphia the situation is as bad as it is anywhere.

Mr. SCOTT. If they are as much interested as the Republican Food Study Committee is, I am sure they will be present to hear the complaints of their own constituents in Philadelphia. We would like to know why these black markets are not stopped, why these abuses are not corrected. I might add that the O. P. A. officials, some of whom I know personally and for whom I have the highest regard, have been notified by the committee of the holding of these hearings and will be given every opportunity to be present. Also, many people in Philadelphia have voluntarily asked for an opportunity to be heard, including representatives of the great labor organizations.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. For a question.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman stated that they did not have an opportunity. May I say to the gentleman that we have had several hearings before our Committee on Small Business. There are some good men on that committee from the gentleman's side. We have heard everybody who wanted to be heard. In some cases most of them were from Philadelphia. Only next week we have hearings set down for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday on O. P. A. regulations.

Mr. SCOTT. I said I yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. PATMAN. Some of them involve Philadelphia.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. May I ask the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] whether or not he gave an opportunity to be heard to any of these 550 small grocers and feedmen who come from Philadelphia?

Mr. PATMAN. Absolutely, yes.

Mr. JENKINS. Did the hearing the gentleman accorded them do them any good?

Mr. SCOTT. The stores are closed down, if that did them any good. They are out of business.

Mr. PATMAN. We can certainly do more for them if both parties are represented and getting all the facts.

Mr. SCOTT. I submit that the crisis is so great that we cannot wait for committees which meet in Washington at the convenience of the chairman, no matter how often they meet. I am not criticizing the gentleman's committee. I must say we cannot wait for him. This is a desperate situation. We are going to go into the country to hear the people in their cities.

Mr. PATMAN. Why does the gentleman go out in the country? Why does he not go down here to the O. P. A.? That is where the trouble is.

Mr. SCOTT. I cannot yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield, whether it be in the city of Philadelphia or a city in Michigan even, it seems to me that it is not only untimely, but it is unusual and I am rather surprised at my good friends from Philadelphia who criticize Members of Congress who at their own expense are willing to go to Philadelphia. I am surprised, I say, that my friends are not willing to cooperate with their political adversaries in getting the facts in Philadelphia and bringing those facts back from Philadelphia to the Congress. Knowing my good friend Mr. MYERS and my good friend Mr. EBERHARTER, as I do, I should think that they would rise on the floor and say to their colleagues, if there is anything wrong in Philadelphia, God bless you, go up there, and we will lay everything on the table, and we will advise the newspapers and ask them to give you publicity, and cooperate with you in any investigation you desire to make at your own expense, and we will welcome you and help you in bringing out anything that is wrong in Philadelphia and presenting it to the Congress and asking legislation to remedy that situation. I am surprised at my friends.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. In a moment. I may say in reply to the gentleman from Michigan that I am surprised that my colleagues have not seen fit to extend the hospitality of the very hospitable city, the very friendly city of Philadelphia to 14 visiting Members of Congress who represent 4,000,000 people, who, at their own time and expense are much interested in investigating this problem. Why this effort to prevent people from testifying and being heard?

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] for a question.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I just wanted to reply to what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] said.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no, I can only yield for a question.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman will not yield to me to reply to him?

Mr. SCOTT. I am afraid I cannot yield. The gentleman can take his own time later.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am very glad that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that the gentleman does not want a reply from me.

Mr. SCOTT. I am very glad to have a reply, but not a speech, at the conclusion of my remarks. The gentleman has made reference to soldiers at Guadalcanal. I cannot see why the soldiers in Guadalcanal, or in Tunisia, would not like to know that their families can get enough to eat, and know that their families when they go to the stores will find opportunity to put something in their market baskets and not have to answer a lot of questionnaires to Gestapo queries about every pound of food or meat or vegetables that they buy.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As a matter of fact, due to the fact that from 75 to 95 percent of all the poultry in Philadelphia is in the black market, the soldiers and their families are not able to get any poultry.

Mr. SCOTT. I know that the soldiers would like to know that their families are being taken care of.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. Did I understand the gentleman to refer to the Gestapo moves of the O. P. A.?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, or the bureaucrats generally.

Mr. MYERS. Will the gentleman advise me who is the chief counsel for the office of the O. P. A. in Philadelphia?

Mr. SCOTT. He is a very estimable gentleman.

Mr. MYERS. What is his name?

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman does not know, I would be very glad to inform him.

Mr. MYERS. Does the gentleman know? Is it a gentleman named Wayland Elsbree?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. Would the gentleman inform the House where Mr. Elsbree practiced law before he entered into the O. P. A.?

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman thinks it is material. The gentleman went to Swarthmore, and he was a classmate of Leon Henderson.

Mr. MYERS. I wanted to know with whom he was associated before he entered the Government service as chief counsel for the O. P. A. in Philadelphia.

Mr. SCOTT. He was associated with the office of that celebrated constitutional lawyer, Thomas Raeburn White.

Mr. MYERS. Was the gentleman associated with Mr. Elsbree at one time in the practice of law?

Mr. SCOTT. I was associated in the same office, very pleasantly so, but for a brief time.

Mr. MYERS. That is what I want to bring out.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman referred to is not only an able lawyer, but he is a very conscientious man, and I understand, if the gentleman wants to go into it, that he and the entire Philadelphia Democratic delegation protested his appointment because they had somebody more political in mind.

Mr. MYERS. Do I understand that Mr. Elsbree, chief counsel of the O. P. A. in Philadelphia, was associated in the practice of law with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] at the time of his appointment to the O. P. A.?

Mr. SCOTT. He occupied an office with me very near the gentleman's own office. We are all neighbors there in the same building. We are all in the same building, Mr. Elsbree and myself and you.

Mr. MYERS. I do not believe the gentleman should speak of the Gestapo moves in the O. P. A.

Mr. SCOTT. I am sure the gentleman is not ashamed of the fact that he and I once were associated together.

Mr. MYERS. Absolutely not.

Mr. SCOTT. Or that I was once associated with Mr. Elsbree? I do not know what it has to do with this fact, and having answered the gentleman, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. MYERS. He is chief counsel for the O. P. A. in Philadelphia and came out of the same office as you did. You were both associated and had an office together at the time he was appointed.

Mr. SCOTT. I think that is a credit to me and to Mr. Elsbree and a credit to the office. I am glad the gentleman has seen fit to bring it out.

Mr. MYERS. You did not mean to reflect on Mr. Elsbree when you spoke of the Gestapo methods?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, not at all. I am referring to the little Gestapos all around Washington.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. KELLEY. I am sure that these people, the gentlemen who will accompany you on this mission, do not care to be held out as something which they are not. They do not wish to sail under false colors.

Mr. SCOTT. I spent 30 minutes pointing that out and if the gentleman wants to go to Philadelphia we will be glad to have him. It is an open meeting.

Mr. KELLEY. Why do you not admit it is a rump committee and everybody will be happy?

Mr. SCOTT. I admit nothing of the sort. The gentleman evidently missed the entire point of the committee.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There was some question about when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] appointed a special small businessmen's committee, which brought about the creation of a special committee in the House. I have looked up the RECORD and I find that on August 11, 1941, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] appointed a special committee and that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] was made its chairman. That was a Republican study committee. I also found that House Resolution 294 was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] the day after, on August 12, and it passed the House on December 4, 1941, and the committee was appointed on December 11. Now, if there is anything wrong with that I would like to have it pointed out.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; there is something wrong with it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] has expired.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. There are two other special orders.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the other special orders which have been entered today I may address the House for 8 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a testimonial entitled "Congressman ENGLEBRIGHT," by Horace H. Carlisle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter that I received from the home management supervisor of Richmond County, Wis., in my district, which gives a very wonderful picture of what the Farm Security Administration is doing in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

MINORITY SPECIAL STUDY COMMITTEE

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, due to the lateness of the hour I had intended to yield back the time allotted to me this afternoon, but as long as this matter of the work—and I call it work—of the minority committee, appointed by the minority party to study food problems and the question of rationing has been brought to the floor of the House, I certainly want to make my own position clear as a member of that committee.

As has been intimated earlier, the creation of study committees by the minority party is not a new undertaking. However, this is the first time I have ever heard any criticism of the work done by any of the study committees appointed by our distinguished minority leader [Mr. MARTIN]. It is unfortunate that certain members of the Pennsylvania delegation, sitting on the majority side of the House, do not approve of the activities of the minority party. Judging from the fact that, at the present time, there are but six Democrats on the floor of the House, we can assume that the Members of the House in general have no objection to the creation of these study committees.

One of the finest reports I have ever read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was one prepared by a minority committee, headed by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in 1939 or the early part of 1940. The Wadsworth committee made certain recommendations as to steps that should be taken by this Government in order that we might make necessary preparations for the war that was just then over the horizon. Reference has been made this afternoon to the work of the select committee created by the House, known as the Small Business Committee. Long before the House saw fit to create a Small Business Committee, the minority party had a special committee studying the problems of small business here in the United States, and the effect that the war would have on small business. After completing its study, the minority committee reported back to a Republican conference. Every one of these committees created by the minority reports back to a party conference so that every member of the minority can have as much information as possible on the various subjects studied. In that way, when legislation relative to these subjects comes before the House, the minority members are better informed than they would have been if we did not have a special committee to dig out the facts. For more than 3 years the minority party has had a study committee on our monetary system. The chairman of that committee is the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]. That committee is still functioning.

Following the appointment of the food study committee, referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY]—the creation of which the gentleman from Philadelphia does not approve—the minority appointed a committee to study some of the post-war problems that we will be called upon to solve in the not too distant future.

The minority food study committee that is going to Philadelphia next Monday was in Boston last Monday. If anybody thinks it is fun to travel in a sleeper on Sunday night, spend 16 hours in Boston on Monday, return to Washington via sleeper on Monday night, to be in the office Tuesday morning, he is welcome to make the trip. I am willing to make as many trips as my physical endurance will permit, in order that we can get facts—not to embarrass the O. P. A.; not to embarrass any Member of the House; not with any such thoughts in mind—but simply that we can find an answer to some of these problems.

Rationing of food in a country as large as ours is a mighty difficult undertaking. No one wants to see prices soar, and certainly all of us should do our utmost to check inflation. There is a grave question in my mind as to whether or not the O. P. A. has prevented increases in prices. I wish to take the time of the House just long enough to cite at least one example of how the O. P. A. regulations have increased the price of potatoes from $5.10 to $7.28 per hundredweight.

Memorandum No. 1—and I will insert this memorandum in the RECORD—indicates that O. P. A. set a ceiling price for country shippers of potatoes for April 1943, for United States No. 1 Idaho Russet Burbank potatoes, packed in 100-pound sacks, f. o. b. Idaho, at $2.30. This price includes 25 cents for grading, labor, and bagging. The empty bags cost 15 cents. To the $2.30 paid the farmer, O. P. A. permits a charge of 10 cents per hundredweight additional for labeling, also an additional 10 cents per hundredweight for 2-inch minimum plus 10 cents per hundredweight additional for risk in transit, which takes the price of these potatoes up to $2.60. To that is added the freight to New York, which amounts to $1.10 plus a tax of 3 cents. Cost to service wholesaler, delivered to New York is $3.73. In reselling, the wholesaler takes a mark-up of 21 percent, which includes delivery within the city. This 21 percent—which is not 21 percent of the $2.30 paid the farmer—but 21 percent of all charges permitted by O. P. A. plus 21 percent of the freight charge. This wholesaler then sells the potatoes to a second wholesaler or jobber, who may sell to a retailer, taking an additional mark-up of 21 percent. The retailer is permitted to take a mark-up on a sliding scale of roughly 33 percent, depending on the amount of business he does, thus bringing the price of the potatoes for which the farmer received $2.30 up to $7.28 delivered to the consumer in New York City.

Prior to the establishment of O. P. A., these same potatoes would have been handled as follows: To the country shipper, $2.30; freight to New York, $1.10 plus 3 percent, $3.43; 10 cents for risk in transit, $3.53; wholesaler's delivery and profit charges, 15 cents, $3.68; jobber's profit—without cartage—15 cents, $3.83; retailer's mark-up, 33 percent, $5.10.

At this point I will insert memorandum No. 1, from which I quoted above:

Ceiling price for country shipper for April 1943 of United States No. 1 Idaho Russet Burbank potatoes, packed in 100-pound sacks, f. o. b. Idaho	$2.30
(Includes 25 cents for grading, labor, and bagging)
10 cents hundredweight additional for labeling United States No. 1 extra, 1351.1017 (a1)	2.40
10 cents hundredweight additional for 2-inch minimum, 1351.1017 (b2)	2.50
10 cents hundredweight additional for risk in transit, 1351.1002 (e)	2.60
Freight to New York, $1.10 plus 3 percent tax	3.73
Cost to service wholesaler delivered New York, $3.73; in reselling he may include 21 percent (which includes delivery within the city; cash and carry, he may add 9½ percent)	4.51
The second wholesaler, who may sell to a retailer, may take a mark-up of 21 percent (Nov. 7, 1942, MPR 271, 1351.1003-3, class 3 (5))	5.46
The retailer may take a mark-up on a sliding scale of, roughly, 33 percent, depending upon the amount of business he does (Nov. 7, 1942, MPR 268, 1351.1116)	7.28

This is but one of the problems in which we are interested, and this is the kind of a problem we are trying to solve. I am willing to spend my evenings and all the time I can possibly find in an effort to help in solving some of these food problems.

I have in my possession reports from the British and Canadian Governments, and I shall be glad to make all of the information I can get available to my colleagues of the food-study committee who in turn will make it available to the House.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. If the gentleman from Texas or anybody else wants to object to what is being done or thinks it is not helpful, certainly I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman favor price control and rationing? He does; does he not?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Yes; we have to have it on basic commodities.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman realize that there are 1,800,000 different commodities, including grades, classes, styles, and fashions?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Yes; but there are not 1,800,000 items of food that are so important to the American diet as potatoes. We will study the most important and, if we live long enough, we may get to all the 1,800,000.

Mr. PATMAN. The place to study it is down here in Washington, not out over the country.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. No; I disagree with the gentleman. Washington is not the place to study it, for here we have to take what the O. P. A. and other Government agencies give us, and we cannot find out how it is working out in the field. This is not an investigating committee; we are not trying to investigate anybody or anything. It is a study committee, and in order to study the problem we have got to have the facts, and we do not want the facts if they are put out by the O. P. A. Those can be gotton right here in Washington, but we want to find out how the system is operating back home.

I have here another bulletin, this one put out by the United States Department of Agriculture, Food Distribution Administration, at Presque Isle, Maine, on April 26, 1943. This deals with Presque Isle, Maine, potatoes. I will read just two items from this bulletin, as follows:

Presque Isle, Maine (Aroostook County points): Table stock all sales to armed forces, 100-pound sacks and 50-pound paper sacks, hundredweight basis, various varieties, size A, 2-inch minimum, $2.60; United States extra, $2.70 (armed forces paying 10 cents above ceiling). Many present shipments seed. Warehouse cash to grower bulk, per barrel measure central points, too few sales to establish a market; market nominally around $4.

Weslaco, Tex.: Demand far exceeds supply; market strong at ceiling prices. Carloads, 50-pound sacks, Bliss Triumphs, Victory grade, washed and unwashed, $1.92½, air conditioning and ice extra. Sales to armed forces, $1.97½.

Here is a case of the Federal Government going out and paying 10 cents above the ceiling price on potatoes in Maine. Then going down into Texas, Weslaco, Tex., and paying 5 cents above ceiling price.

How are people going to respect price ceilings established by O. P. A. when those bulletins go out all over the country indicating that our own Government is violating the price ceilings and paying 5 and 10 cents more for 50- and 100-pound sacks?

This is but one of the things this committee is going to bring back to the minority and in turn to the House. If the majority Members are not interested in the facts, they may ignore them. When we make our decision on the necessary appropriation to O. P. A., it is going to be made on the facts made available by these study groups. I am mighty glad we can get 14 men who will spend the time that is being spent on this subject simply because of their interest in the subject and a desire to receive further information.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman has been giving us some information. He made the remark that he found out more in Boston in a day than he could get here, but all the information he has given us has been information that he received from the Department right here.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. No. We received this in Boston.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It is issued here in Washington.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. No. This was not issued in Washington. The gentleman is wrong. I read this bulletin as being issued in Maine.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It is a Department of Agriculture circular, and the gentleman said it came from Washington.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. No. They have branch offices—oh, Lord, how many branch offices they have all over the country.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is it not a fact many of the people who are engaged in these different types of food business come here to Washington to advise and recommend to the O. P. A. officials certain policies that are necessary to produce food and get it distributed, but those who make the policies refuse to listen or to be guided by experienced men who are engaged in the particular line of business?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. That has been my experience. If they do listen, they do not pay much attention.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They tell these businessmen what they are going to do to them rather than listen to constructive suggestions as to how things should be run?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Yes; that has been my experience.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. At our meeting in Boston we invited the O. P. A. officials, local and State, and we had a lot of them there. We brought out some things they did not know about.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. The gentleman from Philadelphia objects to our even inviting the O. P. A. officials or taking up their time. Is it not just terrible that 14 Members of Congress should take up the time of an appointed official? Why should anyone object to any Member of the House, or any group of Members, inquiring into the administration of any agency we set up?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I may say further a meeting which our subcommittee held in New York 2 weeks ago today was attended by O. P. A. officials and by officials from O. W. I. We invited them to come in and listen to what was going on. The meeting was nonpartisan in every respect.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I may say I am sure the O. P. A. administrator of Connecticut will be invited if we go into that State, and I am sure he will accept.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today is the birthday of the WAAC's. In 1 short year they have become the finest women's corps of its size in the world. They have grown to the size of 62,500. They were created on faith, a burning faith in my own heart of long duration, the faith of my associates in Congress who passed the bill, the faith of the Chief of Staff, General Marshall of the War Department, and the faith of the Secretary of War, as well as the faith of the President of the United States, our Commander in Chief, who 1 year ago signed the bill creating the Women's Auxiliary Corps.

They have justified our faith. They are giving a fine performance of their duties. Colonel Hobby, its able director, the officers of WAAC, and the auxiliaries have made a remarkable record. Every woman who enlists knows she is releasing a man for combat duty. She feels it to be not only a duty but a privilege.

The eyes of America have been upon them, and with enemies abroad and at home, I know there have been those who would try to injure the service of the WAAC's, just as they have tried to destroy and hurt every effort that has been made in winning the war. But character is made by sacrifice that will see a job finished and well done. Character is not made by conversation and conversation cannot destroy it.

The WAAC's have the fine heritage of all our brave women from earliest times. In blazing a new trail, a new service of their own, they have followed, in spirit, in the steps of the women leaders, the wives and daughters, who came over in the early days of our country—came over on the Mayflower and other ships. They have followed in courage the trail of the pioneer women of the covered-wagon days who went west. They have followed in the footsteps of the brave women of Lexington and Concord and our Revolutionary days, and the brave women of the North and South and East and West who assisted in every war in every way that they could all through the history of our country.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I think a great deal of credit is due to the gentlewoman for her work in connection with the WAAC's. It was my good fortune to talk with a high-ranking Army official with respect to the work of the WAAC's, and he tells me that the work which they are now doing in the War Department has exceeded their expectations; that instead of being able to replace one man, each WAAC has been able to replace a man and a half, because of the stenographic and communications work involved, and in many of the things to which they were assigned, it was found that these young ladies were more adaptable than the boys.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution very much, and that is the sort of testimony that I am receiving from the War Department, from every officer with whom I have talked.

I visited Bolling Field Wednesday and reviewed the WAAC's and talked with the commanding general, and other officers, and they advised me that the WAAC's are doing a splendid job there; that they have brought into the corps the finest enthusiasm, the finest kind of loyalty, and patriotism. Yesterday at Bolling Field, in talking with the WAAC's, they asked me to convey to the Congress their deep appreciation of the opportunity that it gave them to serve their country.

The Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, made a very fine statement about their answering the call to duty and their adaptability and the fact that he would like to have at least 500,000 of them. He paid them high tribute. They have every right to feel great pride.

I know that the House is just as gratified as I am to them for their efforts in the work.

This morning I met the very fine daughter of our distinguished colleague from New York, Representative KEARNEY, who has joined the WAAC's, and her enthusiasm, her interest, and her unswerving loyalty is typical of the service of all the WAAC's. They are anxious to be given more and more duties and to perform more and more service.

This afternoon I was talking to Mr. Allen, of the National Red Cross, who is just back from Africa. He said that I could quote him. He said that he had just seen the WAAC's and that they are performing the finest kind of service; that they were happy in their duties over there and that he heard nothing but good of them.

That is a very fine statement from a person from the organization that also has women on overseas duty.

He further told me that the Red Cross expected to have, within a year, 11,000 women overseas.

We had 22,000 women during the First World War. And, that is where I first got my idea that a corps of this sort would be extremely valuable.

As these women go on and take on a more important part in winning the war, I believe that the trust, the respect and admiration, the prayers and gratitude of every American goes with them. I know the Members of the House today wish to join with me in saluting these WAAC's and of extending to them every good wish upon their first birthday in their patriotic and splendid work.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] is recognized for 8 minutes.

WE MUST BUY BONDS, MORE BONDS AND MORE BONDS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there probably is not a citizen in the United States who does not realize more or less clearly that the costs of the war we are now engaged in are so stupendous as to be beyond human comprehension. The war itself—and probably all citizens understand this point clearly—is so desperate that there simply is no quitting point short of the utter, complete crushing of all the Axis Powers. Unfortunately, we cannot now stop to count the cost in lives and money. We must go on to victory regardless of the burden of debt or sacrifice the effort may impose.

It is true that we have had to give up many luxuries. We will have to give up many more. It is true that we have had to ration many necessities, and perhaps will find it necessary to ration many others.

We are having to submit to a tax burden which the American people never dreamed could come upon us. We are going to have a still heavier tax burden next year, and perhaps other years. We are going to have to bear a tax burden so heavy that any further increase would pass the point of diminishing returns.

In the face of all these sacrifices, present and prospective, we must buy bonds, and more bonds, and more bonds. There are two reasons for that. One is that it is not possible to raise, by taxation, sufficient money to pay that portion of the war cost which must be borne by those of this generation. At best a terrible burden of taxation will lie upon our posterity yet unborn when they in their turn take up the burden of paying for a war fought before their birth.

Not only must we buy bonds for the purpose of carrying on the activities of the war, we must buy them for another purpose, a purpose just as important to our welfare as is victory in the conflict at arms. We cannot afford to win the war and lose the peace. We dare not allow ourselves to approach the end of the war and the return to peacetime pursuits of the millions of men and women now engaged in war work, and the other millions of men and women now in the armed services, without some backlog—and a very great backlog—of reserve purchasing power. If we were to do such a foolish thing, we immediately would be plunged into an era of unemployment and depression which would cause the pre-war depression to shrink into insignificance in comparison. With the enormous public debt we will have, we cannot embark upon vast W. P. A. programs without further increasing the public debt and thus greatly adding to the burdens we already will be bearing. We would, therefore, face financial chaos and an economic earthquake in this country. That is what is meant by winning the war and losing the peace.

The only practical backlog of purchasing power available to all the people and which can be readily built up at this time is through the purchase of War bonds. Savings of the citizens against the time when munitions plants must be turned back to the production of civilian needs should be invested in this way. Many billions of dollars of these bonds held by our citizens generally will constitute a backlog of purchasing power which can spell for us the difference between economic survival and economic chaos. Even at best with the greatest backlog of Government bond reserve purchasing power we can create, the readjustment from war to peace will be exceedingly difficult and probably very hazardous. There is, therefore, no choice in the matter of our buying bonds. We shall have to buy them voluntarily or else some system of compulsory investment may be considered. It is far better, of course, from every point of view that the people buy these bonds voluntarily and that they absorb them as rapidly as possible.

The threat of inflation contained in the torrent of purchasing power now flowing into the hands of the people, while the goods are being exported for war purposes, hangs heavy over the land. One way to retire—the best way to retire—much of this potentially inflationary purchasing power, to await the time when it will be a boon rather than a threat to the Nation, is for the money to be invested in War bonds.

There is no question but that a very great proportion of the purchasing power now flowing into the hands of the people will have to be retired for future use. The goods and services to be bought at this time with this money simply do not now exist. If rising prices reduce the purchasing power of the dollar, the people will have lost a proportion of their money just as surely as though it were taxed away from them or as though they had not received it at all.

The practical way, the most sensible way is for the people to store up for their future use the money which they now do not actually require for their immediate needs. This money saved now and turned into the channels of trade when the war is over and the wheels of peacetime industry once more provide jobs for those now making implements of war, together with those returning to the pursuits of peace, will do more to bring about a return to normal conditions than 10 times the amount would do if spent while the war is on. I hope every citizen will accept this opportunity to build for himself a degree of future security which he can acquire in no other way. War bonds represent the soundest form of investment possible to secure. They will be a good investment when perhaps every other form of investment may be clouded by uncertainty.

It is the part of wisdom for all of us to buy more and more bonds. Let us in this way register our faith in the future of the greatest and the best country in all this world. If, when we are torn between the desire to buy War bonds and the desire to buy things we do not actually need, let us remember our boys on more than 70 battlefronts scattered all over the world. They are fighting for us. They need the equipment our money will buy. We must not let them down.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. VINSON of Georgia, for 15 days, on account of illness in family.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON, indefinitely, on account of illness in the family.

I AM AN AMERICAN

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, next Sunday, May 16, our people will observe I Am an American Day, therefore I deem it an honor and a fine privilege, as a foreign-born Member of the House to speak on this occasion. I was born in Wollands, Berwickshire, Scotland.

With my parents I came to America at 2 years of age. I know something of the hardships and limitations of the Old World. I remember the poverty of my parents. I have heard them speak of the bitterness, hatreds, jealousies of Europe.

If some debt collector should attempt to collect what I owe to America, he would have on his hands a job that he could never finish.

My fellow Americans, we should recognize our debt to Columbus for discovering this new world, to the Pilgrim fathers for the faith and righteousness they brought to it, to the founding fathers for our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution, and for thousands of other benefactions.

In the language of the poet:

"God helping me," cried Columbus,
"Though fair or foul the breeze,
I will sail and sail 'til I find
That land beyond the western seas!"

And into the vast and void abyss
He followed the setting sun;
Nor gulfs nor gales could fright his sails,
'Til the wondrous quest was done.

Uplift the starry banner;
The best age is begun!
We are the heirs of the mariners
Whose voyage that morn was done.

Measureless lands Columbus gave,
And rivers through zones that roll;
But his rarest, noblest bounty
Was a new world for the soul!

Whatever I may or may not be, I am an American from the ground up—from alpha to omega.

Our history is a romance. Our growth is an eighth wonder. Our achievements border on the miraculous. From the time when the Mayflower furled her weather-beaten sails to the present hour, American history is the envy of all other nations.

The United States is a land of romance and reality.

Here in the long ago lived the Indian in the midst of all this wonderful potentiality, leaving behind him the remnants of the stone-age civilization. Here came the English settlers to Jamestown in 1607, 104 in all. Later on followed the Pilgrims, who landed on the stern and rock-bound coast of New England. Inevitable in the movement of affairs, there came the pioneers in the field of religious liberty. Such men as Roger Williams and William Penn injected a new spirit of liberalism and of Christian charity.

The population grew and ideals flourished. A new spirit of freedom was infused into the varied groups here, and respect of law was supreme. In due time discontent arose; out of this came the War of Independence, which lasted 5 years. A great personality was brought to the fore. Because of his devotion and ability George Washington is classed among the immortals. Under his guidance new visions were born, a new venture in government undertaken, democracy as an adventurous experiment was launched.

With democracy came, as was evident, liberty—not license. The individual stood out as a human personality. Conflict of opinion was soon manifest. Out of this came the Civil War which tore the country to pieces. A great soul, Abraham Lincoln, was chosen by Providence to lead. His name is carved on "tablets of imperishable memory." Peace, in due time, settled within the borders of this land of hope and promise which invited down-trodden humanity to find a haven of refuge within its shores.

America is not wholly materialistic for she believes in education. Money is spent in profusion for public schools. Beautiful utilitarian high schools are to be found everywhere. Colleges and universities to the number of 532 dot our country. Opportunity beckons everyone who wishes to get an education.

What shall we say of America, the land of the free and the home of the brave—this land which has had, under God, such wonderful growth and development? We say "Thank God I am an American!"

To me, America means a land in which there is no caste, no aristocracy, no special privilege that sets one human being above or below any of his fellows. It is a land in which a man's destiny is limited only by his ability.

It means a land in which education is free to all the children of all its citizens. All its youth share alike in the intellectual and cultural heritage that is their common possession.

It means a land that recognizes the rights of men—the right to think, to speak, to write, and to print what one believes; the right of peaceable assembly; the right of criticism, protest, and petition; the right to subscribe to any creed or religion without fear of interference or persecution; the right to uncover truth and proclaim it—or the right, if one so chooses, to preach mistaken and false principles. For the right to preach truth is in danger when the right to preach error is denied.

It means a land in which differences and controversies are arbitrated by public opinion, in which the course of national action is directed by the majority will. It means a land which is a product of the will in the hearts of its citizens to be one people.

America means to me a land whose people are united under the ideal of democratic living, who seek to achieve the fullness of the democratic process, whose emerging social order has as its base the simple maxim of a carpenter's son: "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

It is wonderful to live in a country where you do not have to grab the baby and dive into the cellar every time you hear the hum of an airplane motor.

To live in a land where you can cast your ballot on election day without feeling one backward step will find you impaled on the point of a bayonet.

To live in a country where a man can start for home at the end of a day's work and know that no bomb has left a crater where his house was standing that morning.

To live in a land where speech is so free a candidate for public office is allowed to talk himself into another man's job—or into political obscurity.

To live in a land where the only persons who go into secret huddles to cover up their mysterious plots are young fellows in football uniforms.

And so, I thank God I am an American. All may not be right with America. There is still with us some of the social injustice and pestilence to the removal of which we dedicated ourselves as a young nation. But the fundamental human rights which are the essence of Americanism are still held sacred by our people and by our responsible leaders. We have all—and much more than the Pilgrim fathers expected to secure for their posterity in the New World. And as we memorialize their first Thanksgiving, so devoutly offered because they had escaped the religious bigotry and international jealousies of the Old World, every one of us can say with even more meaning and fervor than the Pilgrims said, "Thank God, I'm an American."

Then lift up your heads to the horizon and out there, in life you will find new realms to conquer. Greater, more glorious, more worth while than those which have been conquered in the past. This is your challenge and mine today and every day.

It is for you and me and other patriots to put our shoulders to the wheel and continue to work unceasingly until we shall have achieved the goals we know are within reach. Such is democracy. Such is the privilege of Americans.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, May 17, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ROADS

The House Committee on Roads will meet at 10:30 a. m., Saturday, May 15, 1943, to continue discussion of H. R. 2113, a bill to amend the Federal Aid Highway Act.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the committee at 10 a. m., on Tuesday, May 18, 1943, for consideration of housing bills.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SASSCER: Committee on Naval Affairs. S. 879. An act to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing a reduction in the course of instruction at the Naval Academy," approved June 3, 1941 (55 Stat. 238) without amendment (Rept. No. 451). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLE of New York: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 2629. A bill to provide an allowance for quarters and subsistence for midshipmen of the Naval Reserve; with amendment (Rept. No. 452). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PATTON: Committee on Accounts. House Resolution 237. Resolution granting a gratuity to the estate of Rose Ann French; without amendment (Rept. No. 453). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WARD:

H. R. 2715. A bill relating to the classification of substitute post-office clerks and substitute city letter carriers in first- and second-class post offices, and substitute laborers in the Postal Service and Railway Mail Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. COMPTON:

H. Res. 238. Resolution creating a special committee to study and investigate the activities of the Office of Price Administration; to the Committee on Rules.

H. Res. 239. Resolution to provide for expenses of investigation authorized by House Resolution 238; to the Committee on Accounts.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended, to permit the Commission to grant certain licenses; to the Committee on the Territories.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CUNNINGHAM:

H. R. 2716. A bill to provide for the payment of $20,000 to Clarence Leaon Rounds, administrator of the estates of Gerald Rounds, deceased; Richard Gray, deceased; Virginia Grafton, deceased; and Geraldine Titus, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JONES:

H. R. 2717. A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth M. Levering; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARRY:

H. R. 2718 (by request). A bill for the relief of Lillian Woodward; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

758. By Mr. BELL: Petition of Hattie Hallar, of Blue Spring, Mo., and others from Blue Springs and Grain Valley, Mo., urging enactment of House bill 2082 as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

759. By Mr. LAMBERTSON: Petition of Rev. Wright M. Horton, and 21 other citizens of Frankfort, Kans., and community, urging support of House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

760. By Mr. FISH: Petition of 64 residents of Dutchess County, N. Y., favoring the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

761. Also, petition of a committee of 50 from Orange County, N. Y., favoring the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors for the duration of the war, and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

762. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the Bronx Council, American Jewish Congress, New York City, endorsing and urging the passage of House bill 2328, introduced by the Honorable WALTER LYNCH; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

763. Also, petition of the Trade Union Council of the American Labor Party, urging the defeat of the Connally bill (S. 796); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 17, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, the Father Almighty, in awe and reverence we stand before Thy greatness that we cannot measure. Yet are we grateful that our eyes have seen beauty, our hearts have felt love, our minds have discovered truth, and our wills have found purposes that lift and ennoble and tie us to causes greater than our own brief span. We give Thee hearty thanks for great souls, great music, and great books, which for us have been mirrors of Thy glory. We who are of the earth earthy do feel the pull of the eternal tugging at our wayward hearts. We are conscious of a heavenly gravitation which lifts us to a mood of penitent aspiration, of unutterable longings, of winged thoughts that wander off into eternity.

As now we front the tasks of a new week give us a vision of the far-off years as they may be if redeemed by the sons of God, that we may take heart and battle more valiantly for Thy children and ours. As we have mastered nature that we might gain wealth and comfort help us now to master the social relations of mankind that we may gain justice, emancipation from want and fear, and a world of brothers. In the Dear Redeemer's name. Amen

DESIGNATION OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The Secretary, Edwin A. Halsey, read the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17, 1943.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. SCOTT W. LUCAS, a Senator from the State of Illinois, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

CARTER GLASS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. LUCAS thereupon took the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, May 14, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Taylor, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2581. An act authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and district craft for the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2664. An act to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communications and letters, which were referred as indicated:

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 39)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1943, amounting to $20,000 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 41)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1944, involving an increase of $733,078, in the form of amendments to the Budget for that fiscal year (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY AND SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 42)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting deficiency estimates of appropriations, fiscal years 1941 and 1942, in the sum of $644,432, and supplemental estimates of appropriations, fiscal year 1943, in the sum of $6,421,800, amounting in all to $7,066,232, for the Post Office Department (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLASSIFICATION OF PUBLIC LANDS IN ALASKA

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the classification of public lands in Alaska (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT (S. DOC. NO. 43)

A letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of War, Navy, and Agriculture (3); Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and Federal Works Agency (2), which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Immigration:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 43

"Joint resolution relative to increasing the quota for Portuguese immigration from Portugal and the Azores as an aid to milk production in California

"Whereas the dairy industry in the State of California has, by the development of the finest breeds of dairy cattle and through the energetic efforts of producers of milk, become one of the most progressive States in the Union, for the production of dairy cattle and milk; and

"Whereas the great milk-producing areas of the State and the fine herds of milk cows established therein are now by reason of a shortage of labor and of milkers threatened with extinction, with the result that the production of a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk will not be available to the consuming public; and

"Whereas one of the primary reasons for the shortage of the production of milk and consequent shortage of butter, cheese, and other milk products is the lack of suitable and capable labor upon the dairy farms and the shortage of qualified milkers; and

"Whereas in the development of the dairy industry in the State of California, especially in the San Joaquin Valley, Portuguese immigrants from the Azores Islands have played a major role in the development of the dairy industry and in the increased production of milk; and

"Whereas the Portuguese people who have immigrated to the United States from Portugal and the Azores Islands and their children who have been born in California have proven their patriotism and their adherence to the American ideals of government, and have become worthy and sincere citizens of California and the United States; and

"Whereas the restricted immigration quota for the Portuguese people from Portugal and the Azores Islands now precludes the entry into the United States of sufficient numbers of them to successfully continue in their efforts for the preservation and greater development of the dairy industry and the increasing of the production of milk in California: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as is necessary to permit the increase in the immigration quotas for the Portuguese people from Portugal and the Azores Islands to the United States, in order that they may come to the State of California to augment and increase the labor on dairy farms and engage as milkers; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Assembly of the State of California is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States."

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition of sundry citizens of Greensburg and vicinity, in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 860, relating to the sale of alcoholic liquors to the members of the land and naval forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

S. 1066. A bill authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft, district craft, and special boats for the United States Navy, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 241); and

H. R. 1563. A bill authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 242).

By Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

S. 1026. A bill to provide for the settlement of claims for damage to or loss or destruction of property or personal injury or death caused by military personnel or civilian employees, or otherwise incident to activities of the War Department or of the Army; with amendments (Rept. No. 243).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduce, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GILLETTE:

S. 1110. A bill providing for the designation of each Monday during the present war as Memory Monday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BONE:

S. 1111. A bill for the relief of Arvo Karl, Lempi K. Holm, and Burt Johnson; and

S. 1112. A bill for the relief of Taylor W. Tonge; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 1113. A bill to amend Section 11 of the Naval Aviation Cadet Act of 1942; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. VAN NUYS:

S. 1114. A bill to provide for the adjustment of certain tort claims against the United States and to confer jurisdiction in respect thereto on the district courts of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. LA FOLLETTE introduced Senate Joint Resolution 60, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and appears under a separate heading.)

PAN-AMERICAN LEGISLATIVE UNION

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution to establish a committee to provide for the formation of a pan-American legislative union. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred, and I wish to quote briefly from it:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. The joint committee is authorized (a) to extend invitations, through appropriate channels, to the national legislative bodies of the Latin-American republics to designate and send representatives to attend a meeting, to be held at such time and place as the joint committee shall determine, for the purpose of joining in the organization of a pan-American legislative union, to be composed of members of such legislative bodies, and having for its purpose the maintenance of closer relations between the legislative branches of the governments of the American nations by consideration of their mutual problems, (b) to make such arrangements as may be necessary for holding such a meeting, and (c) to act as the representatives of the Congress at such meeting.

Mr. President, it has long been my view that the organization of a pan-American legislative union would go far in serving to buttress the "good neighbor policy" which was inaugurated by the present administration, and which I think has received almost universal public support and approval. I feel that it would be a long step in the right direction, by affording an organization which could discuss the mutual problems of the nations in this hemisphere.

Members of the Senate will remember that the President of Bolivia in his address to this Chamber recently suggested the advisability of forming a pan-American legislative union, and I welcome the suggestion coming from the president of one of our sister republics. It is my purpose to press for the early consideration of this joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) establishing a committee to provide for the formation of a pan-American legislative union, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. The joint committee is authorized (a) to extend invitations, through appropriate channels, to the national legislative bodies of the Latin-American republics to designate and send representatives to attend a meeting, to be held at such time and place as the joint committee shall determine, for the purpose of joining in the organization of a Pan-American Legislative Union, to be composed of members of such legislative bodies, and having for its purpose the maintenance of closer relations between the legislative branches of the governments of the American nations by consideration of their mutual problems, (b) to make such arrangements as may be necessary for holding such a meeting, and (c) to act as the representative of the Congress at such meeting.

The joint committee shall report to the Congress the results of such meeting, together with its recommendations.

SEC. 3. The joint committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act at such places and times, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Members of the joint committee shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of Congress; but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the joint committee, other than expenses in connection with meetings of the joint committee held in the District of Columbia during such times as the Congress is in session. The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties; and may request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the department and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

SEC. 4. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay the expenses of the joint committee and to pay the expenses of any meeting held pursuant to section 2.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

H. R. 2581. An act authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and district craft for the United States Navy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 2664. An act to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

APPOINTMENT AS ENSIGNS OF COAST GUARD ACADEMY GRADUATES IN 1945—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a few days ago House bill 2486, to authorize the appointment as ensigns in the Coast Guard of all graduates of the Coast Guard Academy in 1945 and thereafter, and for other purposes, was passed by the House and reached the Senate. A similar bill had been introduced in the Senate, and at the request of the Navy was referred to the Naval Affairs Committee. The House bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

After conferring with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], he agrees with me that the Committee on Commerce should be discharged from further consideration of the bill and that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Therefore, I ask that the Committee on Commerce, before which House bill 2486 is now pending, be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McCARRAN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD:

At the proper place insert the following:

"No foreign-trade agreement hereafter entered into under the authority delegated to the President by such section 350, as amended, no amendatory or supplementary agreement hereafter entered into under such section, and no duties and other import restrictions specified in a proclamation issued by the President to carry out any such foreign-trade agreement or any such amendatory or supplementary agreement, shall take effect until the Congress by law has specifically approved such agreement and the duties and other import restrictions so specified to carry out such agreement."

WE ARE ALL AMERICANS—ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "We Are All Americans," delivered by the Vice President at a rally in Central Park, New York City, May 16, 1943, in celebration of I Am An American Day, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR SCHOEPPEL, OF KANSAS, AT DEDICATION OF PRATT ARMY AIR BASE

[Mr. CAPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Gov. Andrew Schoeppel, of Kansas, at the dedication of the Pratt Army Air Base, at Pratt, Kans., May 2, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO WILLIAM PHILLIPS TO VISIT INDIAN LEADERS

[Mr. THOMAS of Utah asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to the editor of the New York Times, by Frances Gunther, Roger Baldwin, and Anup Singh, and published in the New York Times of April 28, 1943, under the heading "Viceroy's action questioned," which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP—ADDRESS BY WATSON B. MILLER

[Mr. LUCAS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject American Citizenship, delivered on May 16, 1943, by Watson B. Miller, Assistant Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, before the Americanization School Association of the District of Columbia, which appears in the Appendix.]

MILITARY DECISIONS—ARTICLE BY MARK SULLIVAN

[Mr. LUCAS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Military Decisions," by Mark Sullivan, published in the Washington Post of May 17, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

HELP FOR "LOST" VOTERS—ARTICLE FROM THE CHICAGO TIMES

[Mr. LUCAS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Help for 'Lost' Voters," from the Chicago Times of May 14, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE GIVE A GARAND RIFLE CAMPAIGN—STATEMENT BY SENATOR BRIDGES

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by him on the give a Garand rifle campaign, which appears in the Appendix.]

BATTLE AGAINST INFLATION—EDITORIAL FROM NEW YORK TIMES

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Has the Administration an Anti-Inflation Policy?" published in the New York Times of May 17, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

DEVELOPMENT OF AVIATION—ARTICLE BY MARY HORNADAY

[Mr. WILLIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The Strange World Ahead," written by Mary Hornaday and published in the Christian Science Monitor, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business is closed. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ANNIVERSARY OF NORWAY'S INDEPENDENCE—TRIBUTE TO NORWEGIAN PEOPLE

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, today is a day which, ordinarily, would find a great people celebrating. This is the birthday of Norway's independence, but the unhappy lot of that great little country and its inhabitants is doubtless foreclosing opportunity and even desire for celebration.

One cannot know the Norwegian people who have become a part of us in America in considerable numbers without realizing that, whether they are here or in Norway, they come nearer being our kind of people than almost any other race of people on this earth.

My State knows these people from Norway and their descendants better than any other. No people are more readily made a part of the American body than these. They prize American citizenship; they become an active part of American citizenry naturally; and their contributions as a productive element of our population are recognized to be of the highest order. They prize education; they are highly religious; they willingly share responsibility in the duties of citizenship; and they bring into their everyday lives a sincerity of purpose that is singular. Really to know the Norwegian people is to admire and respect them most highly. They seem to fit perfectly into the American scheme of things. This can be only because they and their ancestors must have entertained ideals of society and government on a par with our own.

NORWEGIAN CONTRIBUTION TO DEVELOPMENT

One look upon the history of their migration leaves no room to doubt their ways of life and of thinking. When they came to America they were not seekers after easy ways to live. They took their families into the wilderness and carved houses and fields for themselves. And always one of their first moves was the building of schools and modest places of worship. Thus they played a major part in the development of some of our States, including my own. The development of the great Northwest is largely the part of the Scandinavian folks who came here to stay, to make their homes and become an actual part of America as Americans. They required no coaxing to become citizens. They qualified themselves for citizenship and went out after it.

So, the lot of Norway on this Independence Day is a thing which we all feel deeply. The conquest of Norway following her resistance to violation of her neutrality has brought to her hours of suffering and great unhappiness which must be deeply felt by all who trace ancestry back to that homeland. A realization of what probably is the lot of men, women, and children in Norway today brings keenest pain.

NORWAY AND THE ALLIED CAUSE

Too few people seem to realize what contributions have been made to the Allied cause in this war by this conquered nation. Could all Americans have access to the information which unfolds before our committees in Congress, information dealing with the conduct of the war, they would openly acknowledge that Norway has contributed mighty factors to the Allied effort. Her shipping contributions have been great, to say the least. Without these ships there might be another story to tell today. Her men in naval operations and those manning her immense merchant marine have accounted for untold Allied advantages. When the story is all finally known and told we shall probably find that Norway has done as much against the Axis as she could have done as an unconquered land.

Mr. President, during recent months studies in the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the first deficiency appropriation bill brought Assistant Secretary of State Breckinridge Long before the committee, in conjunction with certain arrangements which it was desired be made with Norway on the subject of exchanging ships and replacing ships. At that time Mr. Long said:

Vessels and ships were very, very scarce—

Meaning when the war opened—and we still are finding them very difficult to obtain. The Norwegian Government had one of the largest fleets in the world. Its entire national life is wrapped up in shipping. At the beginning of the war it had 7,600,000 tons of shipping consisting of 1,051 ships. At the time that war broke out, Norway immediately gave concrete expression of her sympathy with what is now the Allied cause.

Senator NYE. Can you tell us how much of the shipping the Nazis had left there?

Mr. LONG. I am just getting into that.

Senator NYE. I beg your pardon.

Mr. LONG. At the very beginning of the war, Norway gave as much of her 7,600,000 tons as she could. She gave to Britain 2,200,000. She kept the others in a pocket and operated them as neutral vessels.

In April 1940, when Norway was attacked, she then had remaining 6,000,000 tons that were free which had not been sunk and which Germany had not captured. Germany took we do not know how many exactly, but somewhere around 50 percent of the difference between 6,000,000 and 7,600,000.

Senator BANKHEAD. When did Germany take those?

Mr. LONG. At the time she attacked Norway.

Senator BANKHEAD. What was the date of that?

Mr. LONG. In April 1940. All of those vessels since that time have been at the disposal of the British except those vessels which are in American control. When we went into the war those that were in American waters were added to the same general fleet. In 1943 Norway had left 3,800,000 tons consisting of 574 vessels, and in their entirety they were placed at the disposal of the United States and British Governments and operated through the War Shipping Administration on this side and the British Ministry of War Transport on the other hand.

TONNAGE OF NORWEGIAN SHIPS NOW AFLOAT

Now, subsequent to this time, and last July when this pocket of 194 vessels was open, we made the agreement with Norway to which I have referred. There are, as of this date, 3,800,000 tons of Norwegian ships afloat which includes 223,000 tons which have been added to the Norwegian fleet as replacement by Great Britain. Norway has suffered a loss of 44 percent in sinkings, of which 2,100,000 tons are cargo ships and 1,700,000 tons are tankers.

Mr. President, I submit that this contribution to the Allied cause by Norway is all out of proportion to the numbers of people involved on a population basis.

Again during that hearing I asked:

Senator NYE. I would like to come back to recheck to be sure of our figures at the beginning of the war. Norway had over 7,000,000 tons of shipping.

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Senator NYE. She must have had a quarter of the shipping of the world.

Admiral LAND. She was No. 4 as a merchant-marine country.

Senator NYE. How much tonnage did she have?

Mr. LONG. She had approximately one-tenth of the world's tonnage; she had 7,600,000 tons.

Senator NYE. Her contribution has been very real.

Mr. LONG. It has been very real.

Admiral LAND. Greater than was expected.

Mr. LONG. She has the whole wealth of the country tied up in ships and she has made available every ship she had to our cause.

In other words, Mr. President, Norway's entire wealth has been given to the Allied cause.

We should recognize the spirit of this day of Norwegian independence. It is a day marking the spirit of a great people, an ordinarily peaceful, law-abiding, God-fearing people. And when we know that Norwegian independence is as much prized by Norwegian people as American independence is prized by Americans, then we find ourselves wanting to do everything within our power to restore the opportunity for Norway to enjoy again her way of life and her complete independence.

Way open to Norway not easy

The way for Norway may not be easy, even though the Axis be driven from her lands and shores. We hear of late most disturbing accounts of alleged wishes and plans of Russia with respect to the future of Finland, Norway, and Sweden. I hope these accounts are wholly without foundation; that these lands shall all be favored by the victors in this war to the extent of complete freedom and the right to determine their own ways with preservation of the ideals they have long championed. I hope, too, that this day will bring to Norway assurances by all the Allied Nations that Norway need not fear the consequences of a peace dictated by the Allies. Such assurances could play a mighty part in building the right kind of morale with people who will be ready to strike a powerful and decisive blow when the time for it shall be ripe.

Any after-war planning by the Allies that does not honor the independence of Norway is not deserving the name of planning by forces which allegedly are fighting for the very thing which Norway wants most and deserves—freedom from its present oppression and freedom to go forward independently of any strings to be tied to it by any other power.

I AM AN AMERICAN DAY

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, yesterday was I Am An American Day.

This Nation witnessed the moving spectacle of millions of American citizens of all ages joining in public rallies in honor of those who, by coming of age or naturalization, have attained the status of citizenship in this free country. These public exercises were designed to assist the citizens to understand more fully the duties and opportunities of citizenship and its special responsibilities in a nation at war.

I Am An American Day also witnessed the inauguration of a campaign to rededicate the millions on the home front to all-out support of our fighting forces. This campaign is being undertaken jointly by the I Am An American Foundation and the Good Neighbor Foundation. The pledge of the Victory Volunteer reads as follows:

Victory depends on me just as much as it does upon our loved ones who are sacrificing their lives on the fighting fronts of the world. I will do my best.

To the righteous cause of complete victory over the forces of aggression and enslavement, and to the ideals of the "four freedoms" for the peoples of the earth, I dedicate myself without reservation. I am an American.

This campaign to rededicate ourselves to speed the day of victory is a movement of the people, by the people, for the people. As representatives of the people, the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and I join in calling to the attention of the Members of this honorable body the Victory Volunteer campaign to rededicate ourselves to all-out support of our gallant fighting forces.

DEVELOPMENT AND ACQUISITION OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS

Mr. CHANDLER obtained the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill which is on the calendar. If unanimous consent be not granted, of course I cannot have the bill considered now, and I shall not occupy any of the time of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of order of business No. 213, Senate bill 33 to provide for the establishment and operation of sampling plants and custom mills as an aid in the development and acquisition of strategic and critical materials which are essential to the national defense.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the bill, but I have every confidence in the distinguished Senator from Nevada. May I ask if the bill has been reported favorably and unanimously by the committee?

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say to the Senator from Oregon that the bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. McNARY. What is the general intendment and purpose of the bill? What will it accomplish?

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill is very succintly described in its title. Throughout the country there are a great many small mine activities in connection with which one or two or three men are working and producing either copper or lead or zinc or other war essential metals. If those men could be encouraged by the Government to bring in their ore in whatever tonnage they may be able to bring it to a market place, where the Government could sample it and take it off their hands, paying cash for it, the Government would then hold it until it had a carload, and would ship it to a treatment plant. The miners as a rule are unable to mine successfully unless they can mine and ship in carload lots, because the rate on less than carload lots is prohibitive. The purpose of the bill is to enable the Government to set up sampling plants throughout the country.

Mr. McNARY. That seems to be a commendable purpose. I observe also that the bill does not carry an appropriation.

Mr. McCARRAN. It carries no appropriation. It is merely an enabling measure.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 33) to provide for the establishment and operation of sampling plants and custom mills as an aid in the development and acquisition of strategic and critical materials which are essential to the national defense, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "critical", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals"; on the same page, line 6, after the word "such", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals"; on page 2, line 2, after the words "of the", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals"; on the same page, line 12, after the word "such", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals"; on page 3, line 2, after the word "such", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals"; on the same page, line 4, after the word "such", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals"; on the same page, line 11, after the word "critical", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals"; and in line 12, after the word "such", to strike out "materials" and insert "minerals", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to further promote and encourage the development of mines and deposits of strategic and critical minerals within the United States and in order to provide for the acquisition of additional stocks of such minerals, the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Mines, is authorized and directed to establish, equip, operate, and maintain, at such places as are deemed appropriate, sampling plants and custom mills for the sampling and treatment of ore which contains any of the minerals determined to be strategic and critical by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided in the act of June 7, 1939 (53 Stat. 811).

SEC. 2. From appropriations made pursuant to the authorization contained in this act or from any other funds allotted or made available for such purpose, the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Mines, shall purchase, at the time of delivery to any sampling plant, ore which contains any of such minerals, at prices fixed on the basis of the content of the ore and cost of treatment. The purchase price of any such ore delivered to any sampling plant shall be estimated and 60 percent of the price so estimated shall be paid to the owner of such ore when so delivered. The remainder of the purchase price shall be paid to such owner after the treatment of such ore has been completed in order to provide for any variance in the estimated and actual content of the ore and cost of treatment and in order to provide for deductions or additions, if any, on account of any such variances and on account of excesses of deleterious elements in the raw ore or in the finished concentrate.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Mines, shall provide for the storage and maintenance of such minerals and shall, at the request of the Chairman of the War Production Board, the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy, dispose of such minerals in such manner as shall be requested for the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior shall make an annual report to the Congress of his activities and expenditures under this act, together with the kinds and quantities of ores acquired pursuant to this act, the price paid therefor, and the strategic and critical minerals produced from such ores, and also the disposition of such minerals.

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the establishment and operation of sampling plants and custom mills as an aid in the development and acquisition of strategic and critical minerals which are essential to the national defense."

USE OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED SILVER FOR WAR PURPOSES

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 225, Senate bill 35, to authorize the use for war purposes of silver held or owned by the United States. The bill has been unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McCARRAN. What is the bill?

Mr. GREEN. The silver bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say Mr. President, that we are trying to work out that matter. We hope soon to have the atmosphere clarified in respect to it. The conference committee on the Treasury Department appropriation bill will probably meet in a day or so, and it is hoped that an amendment in that bill will be stricken. When that is done we hope to make no objection, but will probably assist the Senator from Rhode Island in having the bill to which he has referred passed. Until that shall have been done, however, I must object.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I hope the objection will not be pressed, for the reason that the bill has been under consideration for a long time. It was under consideration for several weeks at the end of the last session, and finally the able Senator was successful in preventing action being taken upon it. The bill was reintroduced on the first day of the present session, and has been considered by the committee. Hearings have been held by a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The subcommittee favorably reported to the full committee. The full committee has unanimously recommended that the bill be passed. Delay at this time is critical. The country's silver stock available for use in the manufacture of munitions is running out. Last week I was informed that there was available a supply adequate for only a week or 10 days. It is very important to the war effort that the bill be acted upon promptly and, I trust, favorably. However, action should be taken without further delay. Delay after delay has been encountered. The committee to which the bill has been referred includes in its membership Senators who represent the same silver interests as those represented by the able senior Senator from Nevada, and they have unanimously recommended its passage.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Rhode Island, as I have already stated, that I am trying, and, since Saturday morning, have been trying, to facilitate matters so that action may be taken on the bill, and may be taken expeditiously. While the form of the bill as it came from the committee may not have been altogether satisfactory to the senior Senator from Nevada, nevertheless the senior Senator from Nevada is ready and willing to go along toward the expedition of the bill to its passage.

There is, however, in the Treasury Department appropriation bill now pending an amendment which was added on the floor of the House while the bill was there under consideration. If the amendment should prevail, it would destroy even the effect of the Senator's bill as it now stands. We want to clarify the atmosphere. We want the amendment stricken out, and we want the House to recede. We hope that will be accomplished. We are working toward that end, and are working continuously toward the end that we may be of assistance.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the Senator's statement insofar as it relates to his attitude toward Senate bill 35. However, let me ask how long he expects the delay to be?

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope that we can clarify the matter today and can have the objections out of the way. I hope we can do so either today or at least before the Senate meets again. We are working on it every hour.

Mr. GREEN. That being the case, Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Senators are receiving many letters urging speedy enactment of the bill, as indicated by the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island, and I hope he will press for prompt action upon it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Taylor, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 1041) to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 17, 18, and 26 to the bill (H. R. 1648) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. MAHON, Mr. CURLEY, Mr. TABER, Mr. KEEFE, and Mr. DWORSHAK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has been recognized.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there may be a very good reason for the remarks which the Senator from Illinois desires to make; but the Senator from Kentucky has had the floor for some time for the purpose of making a speech. After he obtained the floor, we proceeded to consider certain measures on the consent calendar. Now we have concluded the consideration of those measures; and at this time I should like to have the regular order. It is a bad practice for a Senator who has the floor to yield until every other Member of the Senate has been satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded. The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

FUTURE CONDUCT OF THE WAR

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, with the surrender of the Germans in Tunisia the African campaign has ended in a brilliant victory for the United States and its Allies. According to Mr. Winston Churchill, the President of the United States was the author of this plan and Mr. Churchill, as he said, was his able lieutenant. With the African campaign won, the question now facing the Allies is how to conduct the war in the future.

Conferences are now going on here in Washington and consideration is being given this matter by the President of the United States and his advisers, and by Mr. Churchill and his advisers. It is the hope of every American and every citizen of the other Allied Nations that plans will be made for the successful prosecution of the war and that the war will be speedily won with the loss of the least possible number of American lives and lives of our Allies.

As an American Senator, deeply interested in America's making its full contribution, and with the full realization of the part our country must play in the peace negotiations after the war, I want on behalf of the millions of people in our country who want to make known their wishes and their desires, to make some suggestions with respect to the future conduct of the war. I do not claim to be a military strategist; but if, when the war has ended, the Senate of the United States is to be called upon to approve peace plans and treaties, it may be well for Senators to be consulted now by the leaders of the Government, and it may be well for them to have some understanding about the kind of world we expect to undertake to make in the future.

When the people of the United States were drawn into the present war by the attack of the Japanese at Pearl Harbor we turned our military forces against Germany, using only minor forces to hold Japan. We did that in spite of the fact that Japan had made the attack on us in the most foul and brutal manner, because we considered it at that time necessary to give Great Britain and the Soviet Union all possible support to prevent Germany from knocking out either one or both of them.

Let us survey the present situation and let us undertake to make plans now in the light of the situation as it exists today. Germany has lost the initiative, perhaps for the first time since the start of the war. The German Air Force is now weaker than the British Air Force alone, and the combined air forces of Great Britain and the Soviet Union are so much stronger than the German Air Force that Germany can no longer even hope to deliver a knockout blow against either Great Britain or the Soviet Union.

Furthermore the submarine threat to the supply lines of Great Britain is being overcome; and additional antisubmarine forces, which are coming into the battle against the submarine, make it probable that the rate of sinkings in the Atlantic will decrease each 6 months. Therefore Germany can no longer hope to win the war by the use of her submarine weapon.

We may, therefore, say with confidence that, together with the British and the Russians, we have made it certain that Germany now cannot knock out either Great Britain or the Soviet Union. Therefore our first objective in the war has been achieved.

By the victory that we and our allies have just won in North Africa, we have gone so far toward opening the Mediterranean that we need only capture now only a few islands—Sicily, Sardinia, and Crete—in order to insure safe passage for our shipping from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean by way of the Straits of Gibraltar and the Suez Canal.

A glance at the map will show that from Tobruk to Crete is about 200 miles; from Derna and Libya to Athens is about 360 miles; from Tunis to Sicily is only 90 miles; from Tunis to Naples is only 350 miles; and it is only 560 miles from Tunis to Genoa. So we have brought the war in Italy under the range of Allied bombers and fighting planes, and by the winning of the African campaign we have literally forged a ring of steel around the German Army and its Government.

We shall be able now to use our control of the Mediterranean either to strike at the Japanese forces in Burma, Siam, and the Malay Peninsula or to strike northward against the southern side of the continent of Europe, and we can, of course, use the British base to strike against the continent of Europe on the north.

Therefore, we in America have now, for the first time since this war began, a genuine choice of major objectives. We can now direct the greater part of our war effort against Germany or we can direct it against Japan. If we attack Germany first, we shall naturally be obliged to leave in the Pacific the relatively small American forces that are now keeping the Japs from advancing farther toward Australia, New Zealand, and Alaska, and if we adopt this strategy we must reopen the Burma Road and reinforce the American air forces in China. If we attack Japan first, we shall, of course, have to keep on giving Great Britain and the Soviet Union the support necessary to keep them going.

In a recent article entitled "How Japan Plans to Win," by Clark Lee, Associated Press Pacific correspondent, published currently in Collier's magazine, he has the following to say, which I believe is significant:

> Having accomplished every one of her major objectives, Japan is satisfied that she has won the war in the Pacific. All that remains, as she sees it, is to complete the unassailable wall of land, sea, and air defenses she is building around her huge, rich, new empire—a wall behind which she can grow fat and strong as she welds her "liberated" peoples together for the coming war of extinction against the white race. All she needs is time—just a little more time, please.

Let me read from the April issue of China at War:

> THE FAR EASTERN FRONT
> Japan is making good use of the respite that she is temporarily enjoying. One month after the Casablanca Conference—that is, around the middle of February—Japan started a vigorous consolidation campaign throughout the China front, aiming primarily at destroying the bases for a general Allied counteroffensive before it has a chance to get started. In some places, especially western Yunnan and northern Hunan, the enemy's renewed offensives would have developed into knock-out blows for China had it not been for stiff Chinese resistance. This campaign is now being pushed with increasing vigor in spite of repeated setbacks.
> The Chinese troops engaging over a million Japanese forces on these fronts are feeling more and more the strain of waiting after having done so for over 5½ years. But thus far they have held their own against repeated enemy attacks, knowing that they are fighting for the strategic positions that will one day be used to launch an all-out counteroffensive against the enemy.
> THE BURMA FRONT
> The Burma front remains unchanged. Although the Japanese forces defending southwestern Burma launched stiff counterattacks since March 13, the British troops still hold their positions along the Mayu River, about 20 miles northwest of Akyab.
> Meanwhile the Royal Air Force, the Tenth United States Army Air Force, and the Royal Indian Navy kept up their attacks upon enemy air bases and lines of communication in the Akyab area, as well as other parts of Burma. Damages inflicted upon the enemy included a 7,000-ton merchant ship off Rangoon, a troop-loaded launch off the Ramree Island southeast of Akyab, the Pazundung Creek bridge north of Rangoon, the Myitnge highway and railway bridge south of Mandalay, and, most important of all, the famed Gokteik viaduct, the railway link connecting Mandalay and Lashio.
> ENEMY PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN
> Another act by the Allies that may be considered as an effective countermove against Japanese propaganda was the formation of the Fourteenth United States Army Air Force in China under the command of Brig. Gen. Claire L. Chennault on March 10. Although this air force still remains numerically small at the moment, its becoming an independent fighting unit at this particular moment has the effect of giving the Chinese even in the occupied territories the unmistakable impression that more United States planes are coming and that the United States is not letting China down, as claimed by the Japanese propagandists.
> Even more effective would be the actual sending of more planes to China. The incessant explosions of bombs from American planes on Nipponese forces will automatically drown the din of their propaganda machine. Mere pledges of aid, however, will not produce the result.
>
> Still more effective in counteracting Japanese propaganda would be China's participation in the Allied council of war as an equal partner in the full sense of the word. Only by deeds of this kind can the tongues of the Japanese Goebbels be silenced and the people in occupied China be sustained in their resistance against the constant bombardment by the Nipponese propaganda machine.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator speaks of the very serious situation in which the Chinese find themselves. I wonder if the Senator, having investigated the subject pretty thoroughly, knows just how critical it is. My understanding is that it is extremely critical, and that the information coming to this country, both in official and unofficial ways, indicates that the Chinese find themselves in a desperate situation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator from New Hampshire is entirely accurate. I think it is barely possible that unless the seriousness of the situation is realized by those who are holding conferences and mapping the strategy in this war, we may find ourselves in a desperate situation. My understanding is that Chennault has reduced his request to 250 planes. He had said that if he were given 500 planes he could drive the Japs out of China, but we have never been able to find 500 planes to give Chennault to use against the Japanese in China. The reason for his presence here, perhaps, is that someone has finally realized the seriousness of the situation in China. Unless we give her immediate aid she may be forced out of the war. I dislike to think what the future might hold for us if China were completely out of the war.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that, many months ago, China sent a military mission to this country, that it was here in Washington and presented its case as forcibly and plainly as possible, and yet it is understood that it went back without assurances as to what aid could be given China?

Mr. CHANDLER. I know the mission was here. Apparently the results it obtained were not good. They certainly were not satisfactory to China. Over and over again I have said that it seems a shame that Australia, China, and other nations and commonwealths fighting with us are not given a place on a general board of strategy so that they may be able to present their case and get some definite action. I have been told by men high in authority that repeatedly decisions are made, and they hear about them months after the decisions are made. They continue to fight without knowing what has been decided for them. In my opinion, that is a very serious mistake.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has referred to the situation in Australia. I wish to submit this observation to him: The most startling thing I have heard in many weeks was the statement by a very prominent Australian newspaperman to a few of us recently that on the day he left Australia MacArthur had 75 fewer planes than he had 1 year previously. That scarcely seems like rating the Pacific theater according to the importance which it deserves.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with the Senator. It would be a serious mistake not to provide enough planes for MacArthur and for the defense of Honolulu to stave off attack. I am not sure that we have given them a sufficient number. It is suicide to fail to give them a sufficient number to stave off attack. What MacArthur wants is a sufficient number to conduct an offensive, and he must have it if we are ever going to win the Japanese war.

I am one citizen of this country who believes sincerely that the Pacific cannot wait, that if anything comes out of the conferences being held by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill, a major decision should be made to give the Pacific war the consideration which the facts justify it having in the general scheme of world affairs.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I noticed yesterday that the goal set by the President for the production of airplanes may be reached. Has the Senator any information as to where this enormous amount of war material is going?

Mr. CHANDLER. I regret to say that I have no accurate information. I have been unable to satisfy myself why we could not supply 500 planes for General Chennault in China, when the need is so desperate. I am quite certain we have not done it. I am quite certain that there have been times when we have courted narrow escapes. The escapes in the Pacific have been so narrow as to make it seem almost foolhardy to court them. We must support China, Australia, and our whole Pacific area. A failure to do so may bring unparalleled disaster to the people of the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Since the speech of the Senator a couple of weeks ago I tried to obtain information why planes were not sent to China. My information is that it is an easy matter to send the planes there, but the difficulty is in supplying the gasoline and oil properly to operate them. It seems that the transports which are now being utilized must not only carry sufficient gasoline to enable them to go to China but must carry sufficient gasoline to fly back. Because of that fact, the difficulty has been in supplying gasoline. I wonder if the Senator could inform us on that subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not underestimate the difficulties involved in transporting war materials, planes, gasoline, and other equipment to China. A little further along I had planned to refer to a certain fact. I will refer to it now, because the Senator's question makes it important that I do so.

There is a British army of 2,000,000 in India. They are being held off from Burma by about 60,000 Japanese. I assert that no determined effort has been made by the British to drive the Japanese out of Burma. In a week or so they will not be able to do it because of the monsoons. I have not been able to find any explanation for the fact that a determined effort has not been made sooner. Until that is done, until we reconquer Burma, we shall not be able to drive the Japanese out of China.

Airfields which could have been built near the Burmese border by the British have not been built. If such airfields had been built they would have helped our airmen in bombing the Japs out of China. While the British have built about 150 airfields in other places, for some reason they have not built them close enough to the border so that they could have been used to carry the war to the Japs in Burma and in China. In my opinion, that was a serious error. I am convinced that if Britain will not build such airfields we must build them, and we must have men who are willing, if necessary, to stand the gaff and make known the needs of the American people with respect to the seriousness of the Japanese menace.

We have received repeated warnings concerning the war with Japan. I should like to refer to a very short speech which was made over the Columbia Broadcasting System by Ambassador Grew. He said:

> Even before Pearl Harbor Japan was strong and possessed a military machine of great power—and when I speak of that military machine I include all branches of the Japanese armed forces, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the entire address printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR WAR WITH JAPAN

(Joseph C. Grew)

Even before Pearl Harbor, Japan was strong and possessed a military machine of great power—and when I speak of that military machine I include all branches of the Japanese armed forces, the army, the navy, and the air force. That military machine had been steadily strengthened and developed during many years, especially since Japan's invasion of Manchuria in 1931, an act of unprovoked aggression which, in effect, commenced the expansionist movement of Japan in total disregard of the rights and legitimate interests of any nation or of any people that might stand in the way of that movement. In 1937 came Japan's invasion of North China and Shanghai, which led to the past 6 years of Sino-Japanese warfare. The Japanese did not wish to clothe that infamous campaign with the name of war: They called it first the China Incident, and later, when great Japanese armies were trying desperately but futilely, year after year, to destroy the manpower and break the magnificent courage and fighting spirit of the ill-equipped but determined forces of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, the Japanese people, even with their own unbalanced humor, could not fail to perceive the sardonic humor of the term "Incident," and they then, with tragicomical deliberation, dubbed the campaign the China Affair, but never war. So it is today.

But during all these years of their unavailing effort to conquer China and to bring about the surrender of the Chinese National Government those Japanese armed forces were using China as a training ground in preparation for the greater war, already carefully planned, for their eventual conquest and intended permanent control of all of so-called greater East Asia including the South Seas and for the imposition upon the peoples of those far-flung areas of what Japan is pleased to refer to as the New Order and the Coprosperity sphere. We know what that flowery slogan "Coprosperity" means: It denotes absolute overlordship—economic, financial, political—for Japan's own purely selfish interests and the virtual enslavement of the peoples of those territories to do the bidding of their Japanese masters. This statement is not a figment of the imagination: It is based on practical experience in other regions already subjected to Japan's domination. Such a regime will be imposed in every area that may fall under Japan's domination.

During all of this period of preparation the Japanese military machine has been steadily expanded and strengthened and trained to a knife edge of war efficiency—in landing on beaches, in jungle fighting, and in all the many different forms of warfare which it was later to encounter. The jealous personal disputes, endless red tape, and face-saving expedients which characterize the civil life of Japan in times of peace wholly disappear in war; the various branches of their armed forces cooperate in well-nigh perfect coordination, and their staff work, strategy, and tactics are of a high degree of excellence. Furthermore, in war Japan is wholly totalitarian; her economy is planned and carried out to the last detail. No word of criticism of the Government or its acts is tolerated; the so-called "thought control" police take care of that. Labor unions are powerless. In war Japan is a unit, thinks and acts as a unit, labors and fights as a unit.

With that background, and having in mind the strength and power of Japan even before Pearl Harbor, consider for a moment the scene as it has developed in the Far East. Consider the tremendous holdings of Japan today—Korea, Manchuria, great areas in China proper, Formosa, the Spratly Islands, Indochina, Thailand, Burma, and the Andamans, the entire Malay Peninsula, Hongkong and Singapore, the Philippines, the Netherlands East Indies, and farther to the south and to the east myriads of islands, many of which are unsinkable aircraft carriers.

Those areas contain all the raw materials essential to the development of national power: Rubber, oil, tin, metals, and foodstuffs—everything that the most comprehensive economy can desire; and they contain furthermore millions of native inhabitants who will be enslaved as skilled and unskilled labor by Japan to process those raw materials for immediate and future use. Add to that the stores of scrap iron for the making of steel which have been accumulating these many years in the Japanese homeland and the further stores acquired in the many conquered and occupied ports. There you have a recipe and the ingredients for national strength and power that defeat the imagination even approximately to assess.

Now to this recipe and these ingredients add one further element of grimly ominous purport. During all of my 10 years in Japan I have read the books, the speeches, the newspaper and magazine articles of highly placed Japanese. Sometimes thinly veiled, sometimes not even veiled, has emerged their overweening ambition eventually to invade and to conquer these United States. In their thinking, even the megalomania of Hitler is surpassed. Fantastic if you will, but to them it is not fantastic. It was not fantastic when the foremost Japanese admiral, as recently occurred, publicly stated in all seriousness that he intends that the peace after this war will be dictated in the White House in Washington—by Japan.

It might be 1 year or 2 years or 5 or 10 years before that Japanese military machine would find itself ready to undertake an all-out attack on the Western Hemisphere; they themselves have spoken of a hundred-year war, but one fact is as certain as the law of gravity; if we should allow the Japanese to dig in permanently in the far-flung areas now occupied, if we should allow them to consolidate and to crystallize their ill-gotten gains, if we should allow them time to fortify those gains to the *n*th degree, as they assuredly will attempt to do, it would be only a question of time before they attempted the conquest of American territory nearer home.

What worries me in the attitude of our fellow countrymen is, first, the utterly fallacious pre-war thinking which still widely persists, to the effect that the Japanese, a race of little men, good copyists but poor inventors, are incapable of developing such power as could ever seriously threaten our home shores, our cities, and our homes, a habit of mind which is reinforced by the great distances separating our homeland from the eastern and southern battle fronts today. Second, I am worried by the reaction of our people to the current successes of our heroic fighting men in the Solomons and New Guinea, for after each hard won victory the spirits of our people soar. Moral stimulation is good but moral complacency is the most dangerous habit of mind we can develop, and that danger is serious and ever-present. For 10 years I have watched the aggression of Japan against her neighbors, and her spoliation of American life and property, and I say to you, without hesitation or reserve, that our own country, our cities, our homes, are in dire peril from the overweening ambition and the potential power of that Japanese military machine—a power that renders Japan potentially the strongest nation in the world—potentially stronger than Great Britain or Germany or Russia or the United States—and that only when that military caste and its machine have been wholly crushed and destroyed on the field of battle, by land and air and sea, discredited in the eyes of its own people, and rendered impotent either to fight further or further to reproduce itself in the future, shall we in our own land be free from that hideous danger and be able once again to turn to paths of peace.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to burden the Senate by reading the entire address, but I should like to read the latter part of it:

I am worried by the reaction of our people to the current successes of our heroic fighting men in the Solomons and New Guinea, for after each hard-won victory the spirits of our people soar. Moral stimulation is good but moral complacency is the most dangerous habit of mind we can develop, and that danger is serious and ever present. For 10 years I have watched the aggression of Japan against her neighbors, and her spoliation of American life and property, and I say to you, without hesitation or reserve, that our own country, our cities, our homes are in dire peril from the overweening ambition and the potential power of that Japanese military machine—a power that renders Japan potentially the strongest nation in the world—potentially stronger than Great Britain or Germany or Russia or the United States—and that only when that military caste and its machine have been wholly crushed and destroyed on the field of battle, by land and air and sea, discredited in the eyes of its own people, and rendered impotent either to fight further or further to reproduce itself in the future, shall we in our own land be free from that hideous danger and be able once again to turn to paths of peace?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. What is the date of the speech from which the Senator from Kentucky has just read?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have read from a solemn warning by Ambassador Grew. The address is published in the April issue of the Columbia Broadcasting System's "Talks." The actual date of the speech is not given, but it was made after the return of the Ambassador from Japan.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. In the light of what Ambassador Grew has said in the speech from which the Senator from Kentucky quoted, and in the light of the statements of the Senator, as well as the study of the situation which he has made, is it the judgment of the Senator from Kentucky that day by day Japan is growing richer in war materials and stronger from a military standpoint?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Japanese are digging in. They have control of 300,000,000 people. They have resources which would stagger the mind of the average citizen, who remembers that we used to claim we were blockading Japan. Japan is now really blockading the United Nations. She has oil, petroleum, rubber, tin, and all the other essential materials which she did not have prior to the outbreak of the war.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is it not a fact that if this situation should continue Japan might become a "have" nation, and we might find ourselves among the group which could rightfully call themseives the "have nots"?

Mr. CHANDLER. We face that prospect by a failure to recognize the strength, tenacity, and determination of this enemy.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is it true that the people in many of the conquered lands which the Japs have taken over, instead of being in rebellion in their hearts and souls against the conqueror, as is the case in most of the conquered countries of Europe, are working with their conquerors, the Japs, in developing the resources of the conquered countries, and exploiting many of the assets of the captured lands?

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe it would be safe to say that the Japs are having less trouble with the people they have conquered and subdued than the Germans are having with the inhabitants of the countries which they have conquered.

Under Manuel Quezon, one of the greatest friends the people of the United States have ever had in that section of the world, 90,000 Filipinos stood beside our American soldiers and fought through Bataan to Corregidor and never surrendered. Why did the Japs go to the Philippine Islands? Did they go there because they wanted to fight the Filipinos? Did they go there because the Philippine Islands were rich in materials which they wanted to possess? They did not. They went there because the American flag was flying over the Philippine Islands, and they could not afford to bypass them. It is a singular thing, but Tojo was in Manila on the anniversary of the fall of Corregidor and was trying by appeasement to win the Filipinos back to the Japanese side by telling them, "After all, we are all Orientals and those are white men. We belong to the same country." It is my judgment that except for the determination and spirit of Manuel Quezon, they might do the job.

Of course, if the situation of the Filipinos should become hopeless and they should come to believe that we will never come back, they would have no choice but to aline themselves with the Japanese. So far they have no reason to believe, except from our statements, that we will come back. When MacArthur was taken out of the Philippines he was promised that he would be able to organize, promote, and mount an offensive to recapture the Philippine Islands. More than a year has now intervened since then and the offensive has not been mounted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Confirming what the Senator has said, in a recent conversation with an American who had been a prisoner in a Japanese camp in Hongkong, he stated that his duties caused him to travel throughout all the islands in the area which is now a part of the war area of the Pacific, and that he was surprised to find an anti-Allied sentiment among the people to whom the Senator has referred. He said that they had no regard for the Japanese, that they disliked them, but they preferred them to the Allies. I was very much surprised, as he was, to find that to be the general sentiment in the Orient.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am interested to hear the Senator's comment. I am certain that unless we show some determination to mount an offensive those people will perhaps have reason to believe that we shall not be coming back, and that they will be left to their own devices.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. A few moments ago the Senator from Kentucky made the statement that there are 2,000,000 British troops in India, and that they are facing only 60,000 Japanese troops. What is the reason for the fact that 2,000,000 British troops are facing only 60,000 Japanese troops and nothing apparently is being accomplished?

Mr. CHANDLER. I cannot explain it.

Mr. WHEELER. It does not seem possible that that can be a fact, although I have heard upon very good authority that it is the truth. It seems incredible. It would indicate, it seems to me, that the British are not interested in that section of the world, although, from the standpoint of material, I should think they would have far more interest in the Pacific than would the United States, because of their interests in India, Burma, Singapore, and that whole general area. I cannot understand, and I do not think the American people can understand, why the British are not doing something about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with the Senator. As we all know, General Stilwell was run out of Burma. He did not like that and wants to go back. He said at the time the war was going on there the Chinese offered to go, but they were not welcomed, at least their offer to go was not accepted promptly enough to make them effective, and the result was Stilwell was driven out of Burma. I have been told that perhaps the British did not make this move because they feared an uprising in India, but 2,000,000 men ought to be able to quell an uprising in India and ought to be able to drive the Japs out of Burma. Two million of our boys could do it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, is it the Senator's opinion that the sooner an offensive against the Japanese is started in the Pacific, the more American lives will be saved?

Mr. CHANDLER. I intend to refer to that, and I should like to have the Senator listen carefully to what I shall say in that connection.

The decision to be made on the question of our net major objectives is one which will affect the life of every American, and we have a right to ask our leaders, now in conference, to make the decision on the basis of the interests of the American people and of world peace, which is our greatest interest.

Our aims in this war, into which we have been drawn by the dastardly attack of the Japanese, are neither complicated nor selfish. If I may be permitted by the Senate to summarize them briefly, the aims of our people in this war are (1) as speedily as possible, with the smallest possible loss of American men and women, to compel the unconditional surrender of Japan, Germany, Italy, and their satellites; and (2) as soundly as possible to lay the foundations for future peace in the world. Is it wiser to attempt to achieve these aims by attacking Germany or Japan first? Those who argue that we should attack Germany first base their argument on a perversion of the old military principle that when you have two opponents in a war you must try to concentrate as great a portion of your strength as possible against one opponent and destroy his force before attacking the other.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is it not a fact that, with the taking of north Africa, and the occupation of Dakar, we have removed the immediate threat to the Western Hemisphere from the European situation, and, therefore, we are freer now to act in the Pacific than we have ever been before?

Mr. CHANDLER. As I have said, I think we have taken the initiative away from Germany; I think we have the choice of the major objective for the first time during the war.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Bearing in mind the question asked by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], does not the Senator feel that it was almost necessary for us to clear north Africa of the Germans so as to ease our shipping difficulties?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it was highly desirable and timely.

Mr. ELLENDER. Was it not necessary?

Mr. CHANDLER. Many things are necessary that cannot be done.

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly. If we had not put all our might into north Africa, the chances are that the Germans would still be in possession of north Africa; but by concentrating almost our entire forces in north Africa we were able to clear the Germans from that territory. In other words, I feel confident that had we tried to fight the Germans and also the Japs at the same time, it would have been necessary to divide our forces and thereby weaken our striking power. As appeared in the newspapers yesterday and on previous occasions, our victory in north Africa will release in excess of 2,000,000 tons of shipping, which should go far toward relieving the situation of which the Senator complains.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is absolutely right. I have no quarrel with the African campaign. The plans for that campaign, according to Mr. Churchill, were made by the President, and he was his lieutenant, as he said, in helping to achieve that great victory. By doing that it has been made almost definite now that we have taken from Germany the power to carry the fight to us; and in this war if you are on the defensive you lose the power to carry the fight to the enemy and ultimately have but one choice, which is subjugation to the wishes of the fellow who is on the offensive. I agree that the African campaign was a fine thing, and I am glad it terminated as it did.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has the Senator had any indication that we will not, from now on, send more oil, more planes, more munitions and other implements of war to India, so as to drive the Japs from Burma and thereby relieve the Chinese?

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall have a little more to say about that later on. Promises will not do; we have to have performance.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator said, and I know he is correct, that Mr. Churchill gave all the credit for the north African campaign to the President, but I noticed the other day that Lord Halifax, in a speech at Chicago, gave the credit to Churchill; so I do not know who is right.

Mr. CHANDLER. There may be some dispute as to whom the credit properly belongs, after the victory has been won.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Are the 60,000 Japanese in Burma the only force that stands between the Allies and China?

Mr. CHANDLER. So far as we are informed that is so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That force holds the road by which we should go into Burma. As I understand, the Indian Ocean is now clear, so that we can get there by water and can get there by land. Does it not seem rather odd that, with the large force in India right next to Burma, between China and India, 60,000 Japanese can keep us from sending ammunition and supplies to China that could raise, I am told, two or three million men, and clear the way for us to get airports from which to bomb Japan?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is accurate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think those who handle our diplomatic affairs and the war should make plain to the people of the United States and to the British people why that is not done.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think we should have some immediate understanding.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not see how Great Britain could render a greater aid to Japan than doing what she is doing now.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are some situations existing which, from the standpoint of partners, are not to be explained. I shall take occasion a little further along to refer to specific instances where we have a friend that is supposed to be fighting with us but who is lending aid and comfort to the enemy that is trying to destroy us. Such things are irreconcilable, and I am not able to answer why that is done; but it is done.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We have another example of that in Russia and Japan.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We are informed that a very important decision was made in favor of Japan when Russia gave the Japs a weather station at Kamchatka, which could advise Japanese bombers about the weather when they undertook to bomb Kiska and Attu. I am also informed that our boys at Dutch Harbor have no weather station, but have to fly blindly through the fog.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Russians have just renewed their fishing treaty with Japan, and Admiral Yarnell, who served as chief of the American Fleet in eastern waters for some years, warned the other day that the Japanese fishing vessels were being used to supply weather information to the Japs. That is what has made it so difficult for us in the Aleutians.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say in connection with what the Senator from Minnesota said as to the Japanese having a weather station in Kamchatka that I am told by military people, who ought to know what they are talking about, because they spent a good deal of time in that area, that with the weather station which was given by the Russians to the Japanses the Japs are able to tell when the weather clears up on our side, but we are not able to tell as to the weather on their side because the warm winds which come up from Japan and China and strike to the north create the fogs. The Japanese can tell when the fogs have cleared up over there, but we cannot ever tell.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that they have the key to the weather situation whereas we have not, and that is one of the reasons for our great disadvantage in operations in that area.

Mr. WHEELER. That is what I have been told by men who have spent much time in that area, Americans who are familiar with conditions and circumstances, for instance, a resident of my State, who engages in commercial lines and is interested in fisheries and other activities in different sections tells me exactly the same story.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course the Senator realizes that, without knowing all the facts, it is very difficult to discuss strategy on the floor of the Senate; but suppose Russia had not renewed the fishing agreement wih Japan, and, because of that, suppose Japan had attacked Russia from the back or on her eastern frontier, does the Senator feel that Russia would have fared as well as she has fared against Germany?

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course, the answer to that would be a guess, and I will not hazard a guess, but I will say that when she renewed the trade treaty with Japan it was not friendly to us.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to make a comment on two statements the Senator from Louisiana has made. One is that there is certainly no indication that Russia has up to date shown any desire to take any hostile step toward Japan, or vice versa, is there?

Mr. ELLENDER. There may not be any on the surface that we can detect, but, I repeat, there is no doubt in my mind that if Russia had not treated Japan in a kind of friendly way, Japan might have struck at her, and if Japan had struck, I venture to say that Russia would be in an untenable position today. That goes without saying, and there should be little left for guesswork. Time will tell, and I venture to say that Russia will strike at Japan when it will be safe for her to do so.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator then approve the entire relationships which are developing between Russia on the one hand and Japan on the other?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not know because I am not in possession of all the facts and circumstances that prompt Russia to follow the course that she is now pursuing. I feel confident that those who are doing it must know what it is all about.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the Senator says "those who are doing it," whom does he mean?

Mr. ELLENDER. If I knew all the facts, I might be able to give the Senator a more complete and intelligent answer, but viewing the situation from the Senate floor, as an "armchair strategist," I would say that it might have been good strategy for Russia to follow her present course.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not mean on the part of Russia and Japan; I mean on the part of this country.

Mr. ELLENDER. I refer to Russia and Japan, not to this country. I am talking about Russia and Japan. I do not know what our country has done in that regard.

Mr. BRIDGES. I was talking wholly from the standpoint of the best interests of the United States, not of Japan or Russia; and I think that is the approach we should make.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course, but we "armchair strategists" do not know all the facts, and I do not believe we are in a position to say what should have been done, or what steps our country should adopt unless we know what the facts are. I am willing to trust the President and our Army and Navy officials who are now handling the matter here in Washington and abroad. In the light of our utter lack of preparedness before and soon after Pearl Harbor, I think our country's leaders have done a magnificent job. We are just beginning to fight and I would ask Senators to be patient and to watch the fur fly from now on.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, when the war shall have ended, the Senate of the United States will be confronted with the situations referred to, and it will be unfortunate if there shall be failure to consult Senators of the United States, and failure to apprise them of things about which they do not know. I know about many things, and I do not speak as a military strategist or as an "armchair strategist," I speak as an American Senator, representing the State of Kentucky and the people of the United States, and I say that when Russia made the recent treaty with Japan, it was not friendly to the United States, it was not calculated to help the United States in the war against Japan, and it does not help the United States in its war against Japan.

In spite of the fact that lend-lease material goes by the Japs and goes into Russia—and perhaps some of it comes back; who knows?—there is no showing that indicates, although the Russians are our partners, that they are ever going to fight Japan, and I want our country to fight Japan while we are strong, and while we are able to deliver the strongest possible blow against them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. We all hope that the war in Europe may be over the coming fall or perhaps the coming winter, and there is quite a substantial rumor to the effect that it will be. I have heard it from authoritative sources, from those who should know what they are talking about. Others tell us quite differently. But it is true that many people in the United States are suspicious as to what Russia is going to do about Japan, and there are a great many people—and I might say that in my judgment they are people who know something about military strategy—who feel that we should do something about Japan, that we should take the offensive against Japan now, and that we should do it now so that we will be in a better position at the peace table than we will occupy if Japan shall still be strong.

Russia has been claiming a large part of Poland. It has been stated to me by those who should know that the Russians are not only insisting on a large part of Poland, but that they want a part of the Balkans; they want freedom of the Bosporus; they want to control the Bosporus, and they even want other portions of Europe. I do not know that my informants are correct, but they are in a position to know what they are talking about.

Let us assume for the sake of the argument, that what they say is true. We would be in a much better position to deal with Russia when we came to the peace table, and to protect Poland, for which England went to war. England went to war to give freedom and independence to Poland. Now suppose Russia comes in and says, "We want a large part of Poland." Everyone who knows anything about the matter concedes that she is going to insist on a large part of Poland, and that she is going to insist on taking Lithuania, Estonia, and Latvia. It has even been said that she wants a part of Norway and Sweden, and she wants part of the Baltic states, and wants to control the Bosporus. England has heretofore gone to war over the Bosporus question, and if England went to war to protect the independence of Poland, and went to war to protect Finland and other independent countries of Europe, certainly we should be in a position at the peace table to protect those countries, and we are not going to be in as good a position if there is a strong Japan and we have to concentrate on trying to defeat Japan and turn all our forces against Japan at that time.

I think we should try to do everything possible to defeat Japan, and to weaken her as much as possible. I was shocked when I heard the Senator say that 2,000,000 British soldiers are facing 60,000 Japanese, and are not making headway, but in the last few days have been retreating.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish now to repeat a statement I have already made, and I should like to have Senators who are interested listen to what I am about to say, because at least from my viewpoint, I think the statement will portray the situation as it actually exists.

Is it wiser to achieve our aims by attacking Germany first, or Japan first? Those who argue we should attack Germany first base their argument on a perversion of the old military principle that when you have two opponents in war you must try to concentrate as great a portion as possible of your strength against one opponent and destroy his forces before you attack the other opponent. They argue that since the Red Army is in a death struggle with the German Army and since the Soviet Union is not at war with Japan, the United States and Great Britain should turn all possible forces into the fight against Germany, and then, after the defeat of Germany, the United States and Great Britain and the Soviet Union together will crush Japan.

There would be great strength in this argument if it were not for the fact that the Soviet Union is not at war against Japan, and shows no sign of going to war against Japan, and has made no promise to go to war against Japan. Stalin is a realist, and he promotes with all his strength and vigor what he believes to be the interests of the Soviet Union. He has been cultivating friendly relations with Japan.

If we defeat Germany first, the Soviet Union will be at peace. I want Senators to remember that, if we defeat Germany first, Russia will be at peace.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What cause would the Soviet Union have for going to war against Japan?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am about to come to that, and explain the reasons, if there are any.

If we defeat Germany first, the Soviet Union will be at peace, and it is difficult to imagine that Stalin will then wish to suffer further losses by attacking Japan if he can sit quietly in peace and watch us defeat Japan.

I am enough of a realist to know that we did not go to war until the Japanese attacked us. Nothing that happened in the European theater of war ever caused the American people, or a majority of its citizens, or its Government, to be willing to go to war. We were always short of war until the Japanese made the attack upon us.

To be sure, if the Soviet Union should go to war against Japan the defeat of the Japs would be rapid, or if Stalin would let us use air bases in Siberia for bombing Japan the defeat of the Japs would come quickly. But that also would mean war for the Soviet Union against Japan, since the Japanese would attack the Soviet Union, and that would be an end of the peace which the Soviet Union would be enjoying and using to repair the ravages of war at home and, as the Senator has said, to extend Soviet control over eastern, central, and perhaps western Europe.

We should, of course, expect that after we had sunk most of the Jap Fleet, and shot down most of the Jap airplanes, and fought our way close to the heart of Japan, and were about ready to make the final stroke, the Russians would come in and attack the Japanese Army in the Chinese province of Manchuria and seize Manchuria. The Russians were not at war with Poland in 1939, but when the Germans went into Poland they found themselves met by the Russians about half way into Poland. Of course, the purpose of the Russians in going into Poland was to establish a buffer in Poland between Germany and Russia, and to extend the territory held by the Russians a little bit farther out, and make it a little more difficult for the Germans in the war with Germany which Stalin knew was coming.

Mr. President, we criticized the Russian Government quite seriously when Russia attacked Finland. All of us know now that the purpose of Russia's attack on Finland was simply to obtain enough territory on the Karelian Isthmus so as to enable the Russians successfully to defend Leningrad. If it had not been for the fact that the Russians seized the Karelian Isthmus before the Germans attacked Russia, the Russians probably would have lost Leningrad.

If we do not press the war against Japan, and if we push in and finish the war with Germany very quickly, I hate to think how little influence the President of the United States will have when Russia and Great Britain begin to develop their spheres of influence on the continent of Europe.

Mr. President, I want all Senators to remember when it was that Woodrow Wilson lost his influence in framing the peace treaty. Everyone knows that he lost influence at the peace conference. Two great failures occurred there. One was the failure to take into account the fact that peace treaties had to be confirmed and approved by the Senate of the United States. There are some in the United States today who ridicule the idea that a Senator can exercise any judgment or has the right to say anything with respect to world affairs, because they contend a Senator is an armchair strategist and does not know anything about the matters involved. A newspaper editor, however, 500 or 600 miles away from Washington, who is very much interested in a certain question, can discuss it freely, and he is considered to be an expert on the subject.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Many persons in the United States have been led to believe that the Senate of the United States killed the League of Nations and the Treaty of Versailles. What killed the treaty? The first thing done in that direction was the repudiation of Wilson's 14 points, which was an important part of our war program. Italy, France, and England repudiated Wilson's 14 points.

The second thing that caused revolt on the part of the people of the United States was the secret treaties through which France and England had brought Japan and Italy into the war. Wilson refused to sanction those treaties; he claimed he knew nothing about them until he went to Paris the first time. The American people resented the fact that certain treaties had been kept secret, and the Congress of the United States resented it because our war program had been based on an entirely different plane. Our slogans were, "No indemnities," and "Peace without victory."

On the other hand, certain small uneconomic governments were set up with our money under the doctrine of self-determination. Members of the Senate knew that some of those new countries were uneconomic, unsound, that they were so small and so poor that they could not support a government or an army. Under certain sections of the League of Nations Covenant, the United States was asked to guarantee the borders of those countries.

Mr. President, Dr. Soong, Minister for Foreign Affairs of China, about 60 days ago in a speech made in New York, told the American people and the world who killed the League of Nations. He said the League of Nations was killed at the time of the Manchurian incident, when Mr. Stimson called upon the League of Nations to enforce the provisions of the Covenant of the League which its members had signed, and to protect the territory they had guaranteed to protect—territory which we had not agreed to protect. Dr. Soong said that that was when the League of Nations was killed. He said it was killed by the two great powers who controlled the Council of the League. The two great powers who controlled the Council of the League of Nations were England and France. Mr. Stimson said to the members of the League of Nations, "Do your duty and we will help you." The members of the League, however, would not do their duty. They appointed a commission to examine into the question.

Mr. President, there is an old saying that when the devil wants nothing done he appoints a commission. In this case nothing was done. Dr. Soong ought to know who killed the League of Nations. He said it was killed at the time of the Manchurian incident, and it was killed by England and France because, he said, they did not think it was necessary to act for their own security. So long as it was not necessary for them to act for their own security they did not care to act in behalf of China under the Covenant of the League of Nations.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota. From reading the history of the times and from speaking with men who were on the spot, I know that a time came when the great President of the United States lost his influence in dealing with the other leaders of the world. I do not want such a thing to happen to the President of the United States this time. I want to strengthen his arm so that he can have a voice in the peace which is to be made. I hope that he will, in his wisdom, consult with Members of the Senate on both sides, and give them some information about what to expect in the matter of a formula for world peace. I think perhaps a failure to consult directly with the Senate in the last war was responsible for at least some of our troubles.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator knows very well that President Wilson lost his influence at Versailles because he sponsored theories which were too idealistic for the practical, poker-playing representatives of other governments who wanted to get for their countries the loot they had promised each other.

Mr. CHANDLER. I appreciate the ideals of Woodrow Wilson as much as I am able to, because I was raised to believe that he was a man of the highest ideals, and believed that we could work out an association of nations which would make for the peace of the world. I regret anything that hindered him in bringing that about, because I believe that if his ideals had been successfully carried out we might have avoided the present war. I want this time to support our President or whoever undertakes to negotiate a peace on our behalf, so that he may not lose his influence and may not be humiliated and embarrassed and repudiated finally by the people of his country, especially if he stands for a principle which is right—the brotherhood of men all over the world.

Mr. President, I think Stalin is a realist. Let us be realists, too, with respect to the matter. It is difficult for me to believe that the Soviet Union will give us any real help against Japan. Others may think the Soviet Union will. I repeat, it is difficult to believe that the Soviet Union will give us any real help against the Japs, and the cost to us of not being able to bomb Japan from Soviet territory will be great. We have not been able to obtain bases in the Soviet maritime provinces from which to bomb Japan. That failure has already cost us, and will cost us in the future the lives of many of our boys in the United States Army Air Corps and the other services. It will greatly prolong the war. Failure to obtain such bases, Senators, will prolong the war. It will put gold stars on many a mother's flag. But realists are realists, and we must face the facts.

What of the help we shall get from Great Britain against Japan after the defeat of Germany? The answer is clear. Great Britain will fight until the unconditional surrender of Japan, but Mr. Churchill has already warned us and promised the British people that after the defeat of Germany there will be at least a partial demobilization of the British Army.

If we fight Germany first and help bring about the defeat of Germany, we will not be able partially to demobilize any section of the American Army. We have a right, then, to ask ourselves just how much fighting spirit the British will put into the war against Japan once the pressure of immediate danger to Great Britain has been removed by the defeat of Germany. We would hope devoutly that the recent campaign—and I refer again to that recent campaign—of the British Army in India against the Japanese in Burma will not be typical. The British have had in India 10 soldiers for every 1 the Japanese have had in Burma, but so little energy has been put into the campaign that the British Army is now back where it started on the border of India, and the same weary lack of spirit has been exhibited in the building of airfields from which airplanes can take off to keep open a faint line to our gallant and isolated ally, China. In all the arguments for striking Germany first, China is our forgotten partner. She is the partner who for 6 long years has borne the burden and the heat of the battle against Japan, and she is our most vital partner in the war against the Japanese; because, inasmuch as we cannot use the Soviet airfields, it is vital to our victory over Japan that we shall have the use of Chinese air fields from which to bomb Japanese shipping from Chinese ports and along the China coast, and ultimately to bomb Japan itself.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I think everyone appreciates the great fight the Russians have put up. They have exceeded anything that anyone in America thought they could do, and I believe the American people are deeply appreciative of the fight of the Russians, and admire the fight the Russians have made. But, as the Senator has well said, Stalin is a realist. He did not meet with the conferees at Casablanca. We do not know the word he sent there, but we know that word was sent there, and we know he did not come. If Europe is in the condition in which we think it is, we know that after this war, regardless of whether Stalin says, "I want these countries," the seeds of communism will have been planted in those countries; and because of the economic conditions which will exist after the war, communism will be very likely to spread throughout Europe. Certainly it will be an extremely difficult matter to prevent it from doing so.

Unless Japan is defeated, no matter how willing England might be to try to help us in the Pacific, she will have a tough job on her hands in Europe, even with the coming of peace there. She will have a very difficult time in straightening out some of the conditions which are bound to prevail in Europe. So she will be at least partially tied up there. Certainly Russia will look after herself; and Russia wants to rehabilitate her own country. In my judgment, the United States of America will be left alone to fight the war against Japan; and Russia and the other countries will be sitting on the sidelines while we are carrying on that war.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am so much of a realist that I remember that we let them fight alone for quite a long time.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was when many of the American people thought it was not to our interest to fight because of another war in Europe, and we literally told them it was not our war. I am enough of a realist to believe that the Russians may tell us that the war in the Pacific is our war. If they do, we shall have to look out for ourselves.

Mr. President, the Generalissimo of China will not surrender. He has a great spirit. That strong man and his good wife, who was educated in the United States, in schools in Georgia and Massachusetts, have a tremendous Christian influence. The heart of every citizen of the United States was thrilled when we watched her, in her return to this country, moving among the people of the United States and telling her story. The Generalissimo and Mme. Chiang Kai-shek are democratic, they are Christian, they are striving desperately in China, almost barehanded, almost without weapons, and almost without food, and with the full realization that millions of their people will be destroyed and starved; but nevertheless they continue the fight, absolutely without fear. Neither one of them fears anything. They do not even fear death, as they have said. Mme. Chiang Kai-shek has said that they will never go until their time comes. She has said that when their time comes they will be ready to go, but that they will live out their lives for their people, and will fight for them until the final tick of the clock. There is not a person in the world who does not approve and appreciate such loyalty and devotion as that. However, Mr. President, sheer exhaustion or starvation too long continued may force them into inaction. There is a limit to human endurance.

No single factor in this war is so essential to the interests of the people of the United States as is the continuance of the fight of China against the Japanese. Since we do not have the use of Russian airfields, we must have the use of Chinese airfields. Without them, it would take us many years to defeat Japan; and it is barely possible that without them we might never accomplish Japan's defeat. The opening of the Burma Road, therefore, is of vital importance to the people of the United States. As far as my voice will carry, I will say that. Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill are making plans for operations as far as the human eye can see; and if my voice could go that far, every step of the way I would say to them, "Open Burma and supply China, because that is vital to the people of the United States, and because we owe it to our gallant ally who has fought so long on our side, who has fought during the heat of the battle, when the sun beat down upon her."

Mr. President, it seems strange to me—and to this moment it is unexplained—why, with 2,000,000 fighting men in India, the British have apparently not so far made a determined effort to open the Burma Road. If they will not do so, we shall have to, in our own interest. If the spirit and the will to open the Burma Road cannot be found in the British in India, we shall have to supply the spirit and the will from America. If the British soldiers and the tribesmen of India will not open it, we shall have to call upon the boys from Kentucky, Massachusetts, Montana, Georgia, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, California, and the other States of the United States, and they must open it; because its opening is of the most vital importance to the interests of our country.

Whether we attack Germany first or Japan first, we must strike in Burma and must strike victoriously; and from our present vast store of equipment we must supply the transport planes, the pursuit planes, and the bombers which are so desperately needed by General Chennault, who has so superbly used the few he has had. He is in Washington. Talk to him and ask him what he needs in China in order to drive out the Japs. Talk to Gen. Joe Stilwell. He is in Washington. See what they say. General Stilwell is one of our finest generals. He said he was chased out of Burma and did not like it. I am sure he would be both willing and able to lead a victorious army into and through Burma.

What, then, are the prospects if we attack Germany before we attack Japan? Let us now consider that question. Of course, we would incur great losses. The defensive positions which the Germans have constructed on the continent of Europe are strong. Anyone who talks to one of the raiders who was in the expedition to Dieppe, as I have done, will get some idea of the terrific fire power of the German defenses on the Continent. Of course, we can overcome those strong defenses; but if we plan to do so we must face the fact that in doing so we shall lose the finest boys our country has produced—the finest tank men, the finest air-corps men, the finest marines, and the finest Navy men. I am convinced—I do not know it, but I am convinced—that the defenses on the continent of Europe, in France and in the provinces north of France, may extend to a depth of hundreds of miles; and in my opinion, judging from what I have learned from men who have been there, it would be almost mass suicide to attack them. The raid at Dieppe cost the lives of more than 50 percent of the Canadians who undertook to make the raid to test the German defenses. Of course, if the order is given, our men will go, and they will succeed; but again they will leave the flower of American manhood and womanhood on Flanders Field, between the channel coast and the Rhine River. I do not want that to happen, except as a final resort.

We have now surrounded Germany. She has lost the initiative. She has lost the position of carrying the fight to the enemy. The only thing she has in store for her in the future is surrender, as she surrendered on the peninsula in Tunisia. The Germans did not fight there as the British fought at Dunkerque. The Germans gave up. They did not fire the last shot. They did not use the last shell. When we carried the fight to them, they gave up. At Bataan and Corregidor our men ran out of food, ammunition, and supplies. They had no chance.

Mr. President, Japan now rules 300 million people. The Japanese are working feverishly to fortify every strategic point they have seized. We know that they are developing improved weapons of war. We know that if we put off our attack against Japan until Germany has surrendered we shall meet a very strong Japan, much stronger than we face today; and we will have suffered appalling losses on the continent of Europe.

We have already taken losses in Africa that we do not know about. The hardest job I ever had in my life was to vote for war. I followed the leadership of the President of the United States because I felt that he wanted to keep us out of war. I still believe that. Last week I wrote 50 letters to men and women in Kentucky, many of whom I know personally. I knew their lads. Some of their fathers had served in the last war. Their boys were lost in Tunisia.

Have Senators any responsibility in this matter? Is it of any concern to us? Ought we to be interested? Whatever the final result is to be, we shall pay for it with the blood of our sons and the tears of their mothers. There will be nothing that we can say or do that will lessen the distress of mothers whose sons have been lost, or strengthen them for the long journey ahead, because when they have lost their sons they have lost all.

Have we not, as Senators, a right to be concerned over where the sacrifices of our men are necessarily made in the cause of victory? I want Great Britain to succeed. I voted for lend-lease and all the other things. I voted for every measure that I thought would support Britain in her gallant stand to preserve her homeland. If Britain had fallen, I still believe she would have prevented a serious menace to the people of the United States.

I have vigorously supported every measure which has been brought here to assist Russia in the war; but I am an American Senator. I am not willing to be silent when the interests of my country are at stake. I do not know whether Senators are attending the conferences which are being held here to map the strategy for 134,000,000 people. I do not know whether they ought to attend or not; but I have an idea that it would be better if they did.

No citizen of this country is more anxious to win the war than am I, and to do everything humanly possible to end it as soon as possible. I claim for myself sufficient determination and sufficient courage to speak out when I feel that it is time to speak. The time is now. In a few days the decision will be made. I want the decision to be made in the interest of the people of the United States. I have a right to ask that. Every other Senator has a right to ask it; and the tough, hard-fisted realist who rules the country across the seas has not the slightest objection. In fact, he has the greatest respect for men who stand up for their own country.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. I am particularly glad to hear the Senator take that theme. We welcome Churchill to America. All America feels kindly toward him and respects him because he is a great representative of his country. We admire Stalin because he is a great champion of his country.

The Senator spoke kindly of the fortitude and leadership of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and his delightful wife, who thrilled this body as I have never seen it thrilled during my short period of service here. They are respected because they represent their country. We have been extending our aid to all the world. It is high time for someone to start shouting, louder and louder, for the interests of America. I commend the Senator for taking the lead at this time, when the conference for mapping future strategy is being undertaken in the Capital of America.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall never undertake to be a civilian strategist in connection with the conduct of this war. I do not know whether the able Senator from Kentucky is right or wrong in his technical analysis. If I had an opinion, it would be that he is wholly right. Whatever the validity of his opinion, I wish to give myself the privilege of saying to him that I should be very proud to be making the speech which he is now making.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the tribute of the Senator from Michigan touches me very deeply. Yet I will be accused in some quarters of speaking from the standpoint of emotion. I am a southerner. Southerners are emotional—some more so than others. Southerners sometimes have more emotion than do others. I rather admire those who do not have so much because they bear just as heavy burdens, and they bear them without a tear. I cannot do that.

I should be ashamed to fail to speak when I should have spoken. Every Senator who heard the speech which I made on the 16th of April, and who is listening to the one I am now making, knows that I was never more earnest in my life with respect to the situation which confronts the people of the only country I have, and the one which I love devotedly.

We have a right to ask that in the conferences which are being conducted in Washington by the leaders of the world, with the exception of the Russian leader, who so far has not agreed to meet in conference with the other two leaders, the interests of the United States shall be given consideration. I wish we might get all the leaders together. I wish the Generalissimo could meet with the others. I hope that some day we may have a peace in Europe which will result in making Europe democratic. We say that we want to have democracy in Europe. I am not certain that that is what we shall get, but it is worth fighting for.

We know that if we put off our attack against Japan until Germany has surrendered, we shall face a very strong Japan, much stronger than we face today, and that we shall have taken severe losses on the continent of Europe.

If we attack Germany first, therefore, we shall suffer all the losses—hear me, Senators; I believe this sincerely—if we attack Germany first, therefore, we shall suffer all the losses that it is possible for us to suffer, both in Europe and the Far East. Does any Member of the Senate disagree with me? One of the fundamental interests of our people in this war is to win it with the loss of the smallest possible number of American soldiers.

What kind of a peace in Europe shall we be able to establish if we have to turn all of our strength into the war with Japan, and if the Soviet Union is at peace, free to use the pressure of all its strength on Europe? We shall have little or nothing to say about the peace in Europe—I believe that—and we shall see set up a Europe divided against itself, divided into an area controlled by Great Britain in western Europe, and an area controlled by the Soviet Union in central and eastern Europe. In such a settlement of Europe there could be no peace. If we are to follow such a course, defeat Germany, and leave Great Britain and Russia with their spheres of influence on the continent of Europe, does any Senator believe that they will consult us if they seek to divide Europe as they see fit? Suppose Russia should want Sweden, suppose Russia should want Finland, suppose Russia should want Estonia, Lithuania, or Latvia, would we be able to do anything about it? Suppose she should want the Bosporus and the Dardanelles, do Senators think the United States could do anything about it after Germany is out of the war?

If we should attack Germany before attacking Japan, therefore, we should have to expect that:

First. We would have no peace, and peace is one of our two chief aims.

Second. We should incur the maximum of American losses, and to defeat Germany, Italy, and Japan, with a minimum of American losses, is our other chief aim.

What if we should attack Japan first? We would, of course, continue to give the British and the Russians support to the extent that they must have it to continue successfully their fight against Germany, but we are strong enough now to do that and still defeat Japan. We must keep China in the fight, and we must bomb Japan from Chinese bases. We must attack Japan across the Pacific, North Pacific, Central Pacific, South and Southwest Pacific, by whatever route seems best to our Naval and military leaders, and attack as well from the Indian ocean. After the defeat of Japan we could return with all our forces to Europe and finish Germany. Germany would be much weaker then than she is today, and we would be able then to have something to say about the settlement in Europe. We might be able to set up a Europe of democracy and peace.

The war in the Pacific must not be neglected. We must, in my opinion, attack Japan first.

If a sufficient number of Senators of the United States, and a sufficient number of the people of the United States would make manifest to the Commander in Chief their wishes and their fears concerning this deadly enemy, we would attack Japan first.

If we should attack Japan first, we would suffer fewer losses than by attacking Germany first, and would have a better chance of achieving peace. If we attack Japan first, we will be acting in the interest of the people of the United States.

The policy of the United States should be controlled by the interests of the people of the United States. The Government of the United States is the servant, not the master, of its people. We are citizens, not subjects. That situation is not true everywhere. In some countries the people are subjects, but in America we are citizens and not subjects, and we have a right to ask our Government to act in accordance with our interests.

I repeat that it is in the interest of every citizen of the United States that we defeat Japan first. We are today a strong Nation.

I speak as an American Senator who has supported loyally the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the people of the United States. I supported his efforts to prepare this country for war before it came upon us. Since we have been in the war upon no occasion have I failed to support vigorous prosecution of the war, and I have not in any wise failed to place in the hands of our Army, or the army of our allies, every possible means successfully to achieve victory. We have a right to ask our Government to take the leadership in deciding how this war shall be fought and when. We have the right to ask our Government to make that decision on the basis of America's interest, which are also the interests of peace.

I therefore ask earnestly that in the conferences now being held that our leaders assert themselves to the extent that when the war is over we shall take our place among the nations of the earth in such a way that we shall have great influence in building a secure and lasting peace. We must not repeat the failures of the last war. China must remain in this war, and she cannot remain in it unless we go quickly to her aid. We must reopen the Burma Road, however difficult the task may be, and I do not underestimate the difficulties involved.

We must establish a lasting peace at the conclusion of this war. The war is not yet over; it is not yet won. I would not undertake from information which I have, and which I can obtain, to forecast a time when the war will be over. In my opinion, it will depend in large measure on the decisions made at the Washington conference which is now being held between Prime Minister Churchill and the President of the United States. If we agree to fight Japan first, the war may be over much sooner. But if we continue first to fight Germany, it may never be over.

I appeal to all Senators—I know they are just as concerned and just as anxious as I am—to see that our aims and objectives shall be achieved, that victory shall come at the earliest possible moment, and at the least cost. I appeal to them to show their concern. It will be too late if we wait. Some day we will be handed a treaty to ratify. We will not know anything about it in advance. It will be too late then. By what we do then affirmatively, or by what we refuse or fail to do, or by acting in such a manner that we shall have no influence, we will, all of us, whether willfully or not, become parties to laying the groundwork for a repetition of this terrible war in another generation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me that a complete and adequate illustration of the point the Senator from Kentucky has so ably made lies in the fact that at the end of the last war the countries which had made up the associated and allied nations, without any of them knowing the reason for it, in the peace treaty put Japan in the possession as mandates of the bulwark, the buttress of islands which the Japanese improved and used as a jumping-off place for their campaign of supremacy and aggrandizement in the Pacific. It seems to me, unless some attention is given to that matter at the proper time, that a similar result may follow after the next war. Japan was with us, or pretended to be with us, in the First World War, but she made no sacrifices and contributed nothing to the common victory, nevertheless, in the conferences on the treaty, in which the American people took no interest at all, the negotiators of the treaty put Japan in the possession of this invaluable chain of islands which have enabled her to make her attack on the whole world.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Missouri is exactly right. As I say, either knowingly or unwillingly, in many instances, we were persuaded to bring about either by inaction or failure to recognize them, the desperate situations which have been created in the world and which have brought about the terrific losses the whole world has suffered in this war.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In reference to the statement of the Senator from Missouri about what Japan got out of the last treaty, Clemenceau, after the protest of Wilson, said:

> We had destroyers in the Mediterranean; we had to get them from Japan, we had to pay for them, and we had to give them what we promised them.

I wish to compliment the Senator from Kentucky on the speech he is making. He has several times alluded to the fact that Russia is not represented at the conference now being held and has not participated in other conferences which have to do not only with the conduct of the war but also with the peace. Did it ever occur to the Senator that Russia was an ally of ours in the last war, possibly lost more men than any other nation engaged in that war and yet before the war was over we joined with Japan, Great Britain, and France, and sent an army to Russia and conducted a war against the Russian people for several years? I thought it significant that Stalin in one of his very rare speeches called attention to the fact that the allies of the last war had finally attacked the Russian people, as he claimed, without justification. I thought it significant also that he said the Russian people had not forgotten it. Having had that experience in the last war, they may be a little coy about their allies at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator for his observation.

Mr. President, I desire to close with this word——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, will he permit an interruption?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. First of all, I should like to say that, regardless of whether one agrees or disagrees with the position of the Senator from Kentucky, I think no one can fail to appreciate the high courage, the candor, and the basic patriotism which have inspired him to speak out on a subject in a manner which will probably make him a target of attack. I know that everything he says is inspired by an earnest desire to serve the country of which we are all citizens.

As I listened to a portion of the Senator's speech, one thought which occurred to me is to what extent the future military policy of our country is influenced by the advice of our high Army and Navy officers. In the nature of things, of course, there must be a political side to every war; alliances between countries and agreements between countries of one kind or another during a war are inevitable; but, in the last analysis, it would not be wise, in my humble judgment, to take action of a political nature binding this country to any course of action without, at least, the tacit, if not the express, approval of those who have actually the responsibility of fighting the war. One of the disadvantages of a democracy is that in time of war we do not know to what extent the opinion of the military and naval leaders influences the political action of the Government, or vice versa.

I wish there were some way by which we could all be reassured, as it were, concerning what the military leaders think is the best procedure for us, that is, from the standpoint of our own interest, as every other country is thinking of its interest; and, secondly, from the standpoint of the combined allied interest. If I could feel that the high military leaders were in favor of a second front in Europe, largely composed of our own troops, first, with a sort of a mark-time procedure in our war with Japan, I should feel somewhat reassured, because their judgment, in my opinion, would be the best judgment we could employ. But if, on the other hand, they favored a more aggressive war in the Pacific, and were induced to forego what they believed to be a wise strategic and military operation for a consideration which was largely political, I feel, then, that we would be embarking on a road of doubtful worth, and that the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, if such were the case, would be a very fine warning for us all to absorb.

I am wondering—of course, there is probably no answer to the question—what our high Army and Navy officers feel is the role of the United States in this war, in view of the conditions as they now stand. Are they in favor of making the attack in the Pacific the primary objective, and the opening of a second front in Europe the secondary objective, or vice versa? I have a sort of feeling, which I cannot substantiate, that the military leaders are more inclined to take a larger interest in the Pacific than has been taken up to now; but that, of course, is merely an opinion; and it may not be accurate.

Mr. CHANDLER. First, may I express my deep appreciation to my friend from Maryland for his generous comment concerning this feeble effort of mine. He and I were friends before I became a Member of the Senate, and he knows of my devotion to him and of my sincere appreciation of any compliment which may come from him.

We know how difficult it is to get Army or Navy officers to talk, because if they talk, and make a mistake, and say the wrong thing, they usually become civilians. A military man wants to do his job as best he can, and carry out orders. The Senator from Maryland was a distinguished soldier, and he knows the soldier's business is to do what his superior says should be done, and not to make any question about it; the soldier merely carries out orders. I know that to be so from the standpoint of an Army private. A soldier does just what he is told to do and asks no questions.

However, I have a feeling that the great majority of the high-ranking Army and Navy officers, who, after all, must fight the war and must die for their country if the occasion comes, would like to do what I am urging, if our Commander in Chief and Mr. Churchill would arrange for them to do it. I have the feeling that if that were done, they would approve it, and would go into the fight with a little more enthusiasm, if that were possible, and with a little more spirit of determination, because I have a feeling that they consider in their hearts that that is the course of wisdom for this country to pursue.

The speech I made here on the 16th of April I made on my own responsibility and without any encouragement from anybody. I received some encouragement from some level-headed persons—and one always thinks a man is level headed if he agrees with his own conclusions. I received some discouragement from some who did not agree with me; and I do not complain about that, for men have a right to agree or disagree, and each one of us should figure out as best he can his obligations to his people and his country, and do the utmost he can to represent the country's best interest, and I know my colleagues are doing that. I may be permitted to say that for this speech I received much more encouragement from those from whom I wanted to have encouragement, and I have spoken to the Senate today not only my own feelings but the feeling of quite a number of military and naval men in the United States who think that the course I have suggested is the right one for us to pursue.

If we could somehow exert, not political pressure, not pressure of any kind, but if we could exert such correct influence over the discussions now proceeding that in the long run finally we could cause those who are making the plans for the future, those who have the right to make the strategy, to adopt our suggestions, it would be better for our country. Congress has the right to declare war, or the right to say that a war exists, but under our Constitution, the President of the United States has to make the war. We cannot make it. But I do not think that should mean that we should not be interested. If somehow we could have brought to bear upon the consciences of the men who are conferring that what we suggest is proper, it would be well. They are not all in agreement; I take it there will be quite a contest over many questions, but if we could convince them that it is to the best interests of the United States—convince our leaders first, and then the leaders of the other countries—that we fight Japan and then fight Germany, that such a course would be in the interest not only of the American people, but of the peace of the world, we would have done a good job. I should not like to be a party to a bad job; I should not like to make a mistake.

I want Senators of the United States to be sufficiently interested—and, if it is necessary, to assert their interest—that they will receive from time to time more information, so that when we are confronted with treaties to establish the peace of the world in the future, we will do a better job than our predecessors did 25 years ago. I do not criticize them; they did the best they could under the circumstances, and their action was not influenced by any other than a patriotic motive; but the result was a mistake—indeed, many mistakes were made, and if we learn anything from wars which have to be fought over and over again, we should not repeat the mistakes which have been made time after time.

Mr. President, there is One who holds the destiny of all of us in the hollow of His hand, and without Him and His spirit men fail; they fail all over the earth. I hope that somehow in His wisdom He will give to the leaders of the people of the United States a vision that will show them to path to peace in such a way that we will be able to avoid, in another generation, a repetition of this terrible, destructive war.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator has stated in his very able and patriotic address that he knew he might be attacked for making it. Other Senators have referred to the same possible action. The Senator knows, as does every other Senator, that it sometimes takes as much courage to meet attacks made in forensic battle in the Senate as it takes to meet the bullets of enemies in military ventures. Of course, the Senator may be attacked, but I am very proud of the fact that he has had the courage to say what he has said, that in the Senate today he took the trenches in defense of the Nation and of his convictions. If the Senator should be attacked, let him consider his wounds as wounds of honor, for which he may not be decorated with the Purple Heart, but for which I am sure American citizens of the future will give him due credit.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator from Minnesota, and I say to him that what happens to a single Senator or many Senators is not of great concern, in the long run of the years, to the people of the United States, but what happens to this country is of grave concern to every citizen of the United States.

When I finish my present term, I shall have been in public office almost continuously for 20 years, and I still claim fewer years than many of my colleagues. For the honor I have enjoyed so long I am grateful to the people of Kentucky, and I hope to merit their confidence, and whenever I fail to merit it, I do not want the position longer.

I have undertaken to explain my views as to what, in my opinion, is one of the most serious and desperate situations that has ever faced the people of the United States. Somehow I have a feeling that out of this may come some bit of wisdom and encouragement which may assist our soldiers in prevailing.

Whenever we participate in an international conference, I am reminded of an aphorism by a wise American, and it always frightens me. Will Rogers once said that we never lost a war and never won a conference, and I become nervous every time we engage in a conference. Of course, conferences are necessary, but, in my opinion, out of this conference will come defeat for all the people of the United States if the United Nations do not decide to wage a vigorous war against Japan. Japan is still planning to invade the west coast of the United States. A Japanese admiral said he expected to dictate the peace terms. Where? In Tokio? In Rome? In Berlin? No; but in the White House at Washington. Of course, to the average American that seems foolish and silly, but the Japs have done so many things which we thought they could not do, it is high time we took into account the fact that this is a treacherous, dangerous, powerful enemy, becoming more powerful every day, skilled in the art of what is possible, not the impossible. They believe in the art of the possible.

I wish that at some time when my colleagues have opportunity they would review American public opinion of September, October, and November 1941. Just read the statements and see how they sound. American magazines, American newspapers, Cabinet members, high-ranking Army and Navy officials, said: "The Japs are slant-eyed; they cannot see. Their planes are top-heavy; they cannot fly. Their guns are bad. They have no money. They have no morale. They are worn out with the war against China. If they dare to provoke us, we have our finger on the trigger, and it will not take us more than 2 or 3 weeks—or, at the outside, 2 or 3 months—to brush them off."

Do not think it was not considered by military and naval men that the Japs could probably assault Pearl Harbor, but it was ruled out. It was too far away. We were prepared for what? We had all our ducks on the pond.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. We were prepared at Pearl Harbor for war.

Mr. CHANDLER. I could not agree with the Senator about that, because if we were, we made the poorest showing that was ever made in the history of war.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator that he is not being quite fair. Pearl Harbor was prepared for war. The failure at Pearl Harbor was human failure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I cannot agree with the Senator about that. In my opinion we were not prepared for war at Pearl Harbor, because we did not know there was going to be the kind of war which came. Can it be said we were prepared for what happened? We had all our planes out together, with wire fencing, and people standing around looking at them, and everything seemed to be all right, and we had all our ships in the harbor together, as I said, like ducks on a pond. I know the Senator thinks what he said is accurate, but I do not think it is. We were not prepared for war at Pearl Harbor. If we had been prepared, what occurred would not have happened, in my opinion. Mr. President, I do not want anyone to prepare us in a similar way if we are to get into a fight. If we are to have a fight I want our country to be much better prepared to take on an enemy and do a better job than we did that day at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I repeat, Mr. President, we were prepared, we had the men, we had the material, we had the equipment, and I say, as I said before, the failure was human failure, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I simply do not agree with the Senator from New Mexico. I have no objection to the Senator feeling as he does, but I am going to continue to feel the way I do about that matter.

I wish to say to the Senator that we are not now so well prepared for war in the Pacific area as I wish we were, and we are not so well prepared for war in Australia as I wish we were. We were not very well prepared for war in the Philippines. We were driven from the Philippines, and I want the United States to arrange to go back sometime so that we can liberate the followers of Quezon, our devoted friend. If we do not soon prepare to do so, Senators, it may be too late.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I think all of us who are familiar with Civil War history will not forget the proceedings in the Congress at that time, when a committee was created to direct the war operations, at least to direct them so far as they could. My friend the Senator from Kentucky will recall some of that history. The results were awkward, to say the least. Generals were called before the committee and asked why they had not moved in a certain way and in a certain direction. Probably no field officer in the world can tell a Senate or House committee why a commander moved his troops in a certain direction at Chancellorsville.

Mr. President, while I agree to a considerable measure with what the Senator from Kentucky says about the grim necessities in the East, I am wondering how far the Congress should go in giving the Army and Navy directives. I know that I am not prepared to say how many men should be in the Far East or how many should be sent to Europe. I for one have had a very wholesome respect for the Japanese. I know they are a capable fighting people. I have lived among them, and I have no illusions with respect to them. They are a smart people. I recall my flesh almost shrinking on my bones when I heard statements made in this very Chamber that we would clean up the Japanese in a short time and set Tokyo and Yokohama in flames in a matter of days. We all remember hearing statements of that kind.

I wanted to get up and walk out of the Chamber when I heard them, and a sort of feeling of depression came over me, because I knew what we confronted.

Now I notice in the newspapers loud demands, even from military and naval leaders, for an enormous addition to the number of planes we have on European fronts, so that we can bomb Germany out of the war. That pressure comes just at a time when the pressure in the Far East is growing. I am wondering how far those of us in this Chamber and in the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol should now go in pressing a viewpoint which may be persuasive and perhaps dominating to some extent. One hesitates to take on that responsibility. If we could only know the real truth! But even that suggestion does not in any way militate against the argument made by the Senator from Kentucky. It is merely a question which is in my mind, and I know it is in the minds of other Senators. How far are we entitled morally to go in telling the Commander in Chief and the War and Navy Departments what they should do in the disposition of troops and planes?

I think everyone wants this war won on both fronts, and certainly no man dares minimize the seriousness of the far eastern situation, for it is a deadly thing. My own private opinion was that Japan in her Chinese venture was really giving her troops a dress rehearsal, and getting her divisions trained one after the other, for the coup down through the southwest Pacific was one of the most astounding performances in all human history. The speed and certainty with which it was accomplished following the attack on Pearl Harbor will stand out as one of the great military and naval accomplishments of all time.

So we are dealing with a resourceful, purposeful, hard people. One of the ablest men, I think, in defense operations in this country, said to me that the Japanese were good fighters, good navigators, good flyers, and good soldiers, and had good equipment, and that we faced a real, purposeful enemy. The tragedy is that it is almost necessary to kill him, for he will not surrender.

Mr. President, when dealing with such people one feels tempted in contemplation of the situation to go back and freshen ones memory of the Saracen invasion of Europe. Europe then was dealing with a people who were an atavistic throwback to the Dark Ages. They had no fear. They were people the average men of Europe could not understand. The Japanese is like that. He presents a most bizarre and weird picture to the world. It is staggering to contemplate what this thing means with 75,000,000 or 80,000,000 of those people. They are intrenched over there, and they have all the assets of the Far East. The problems is a desperate one, I will admit.

I am sorry I missed most of what the Senator from Kentucky has said. I was called away from the Chamber.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish the Senator from Washington had heard the remarks I made at the outset and during the course of my speech, because he would know that conferences dealing with strategic questions are proceeding now, and in a few days perhaps a decision will be made, a decision which will be of the greatest moment to the people of America and perhaps of the world. I have been urging that that conference decide that it is in the interest of the American people that we fight Japan first.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, is it the Senator's view—and I ask the question because I was called out of the Chamber and did not hear all his remarks—is it the Senator's view that there should be a public announcement of a very momentous and decisive policy—that is, a policy of turning most of our energies toward Japan and easing off our pressure on the European situation—or does the Senator think that that would be the part of wisdom?

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no; I would not make any public announcement. I have not asked that public announcement be made, but I ask, and will continue to ask, that our treatment of Japan be in accordance with the facts, as I understand them to be, and as the circumstances justify; that we treat Japan as a No. 1 enemy, because it is in the interest of the people of the United States to do so, and that we make arrangements to fight Japan, because Japan presents an imminent danger to the people of America.

Mr. BONE. And would we furnish that information to the people by telling them or by actually doing it? Ordinarily the chain of events informs us.

Mr. CHANDLER. The information will come to the people all right if we take action. It does not make any difference how much information we give to the people with respect to what has been done in China—and not much has been done.

Mr. BONE. That is correct.

Mr. CHANDLER. We do not know how long China will stay in the war if nothing is done to help her. But certainly the people will receive information respecting that situation if nothing is done, and if something is done, the accomplishment of the job will speak for itself.

Mr. BONE. The only way attitudes of mind can be developed is by giving information to the people. Then a body of public opinion is developed, and people are satisfied one way or the other, or dissatisfied, as the case may be. I do not think there is anyone who does not want the war against Japan carried on aggressively, but I think there is also a feeling in many quarters that if we can smash Germany with tremendous air forces, and perhaps by a sortie on the south coast of Europe, and force Hitler out of the war—if that is even remotely possible—then both nations, Britain and the United States, and perhaps Russia, can turn their attention more completely to the Far East and knock Japan out of the war.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have rather carefully given my view of that question, so I do not wish to go into it any further.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to refresh the memory of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, entirely aside from the moral interest in the questions which he has been propounding, of the fact that we have a direct, sworn obligation in the matter. I am not passing upon the controversial features at all, but I would refresh the memory of the Senator with respect to article I, section 8, of the Constitution, which places on us the duty to declare the war, the duty to make rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces, the duty to raise and support armies, the duty to provide and maintain a Navy, and the duty to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers thus conferred. These discussions do not rest on a mere matter of persuasiveness or on a mere matter of moral interest. They touch a vital, sworn part of our duty.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with the Senator from Colorado. I am not one of those who subscribe to the view that a Senator should be disinterested in these questions, that the only time he should be consulted is when another appropriation is wanted for a new battleship or for a new gun, and that on all other matters Senators should not be consulted at all. So far as I am concerned, I am going to have my say when I think I should have it; and when I think I should have it, no one will keep me from having it.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. I am sure I agree with the Senator that we should have a vital interest in these questions, both now and in times to come.

At the time when we entered the war, it seemed to me that we should have the greatest responsibility in winning it, and it also seemed to me that if Germany and the other Axis Powers were able to win the war in Europe, we would be in a tremendously dangerous situation in attempting to win by ourselves. Therefore, the attack was made largely on the European front.

I assume that the premise on which the Senator is now proceeding is that we have now gone far enough ahead in Europe so that we can let go there, and can start against Japan.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Is the Senator satisfied that there is sufficient assurance that Germany will collapse or weaken, to justify us in running the risk that Russia will be able to get along if we do not start a second front? Is the Senator satisfied that we can let go there now?

Mr. CHANDLER. At the outset of my remarks I said that after the campaign in Africa has ended—and it has now virtually ended—the next goals will be the islands in the Mediterranean and the nearby points in Italy. I gave the distances from points in Africa to the next objectives, or to what probably will be or should be the next objectives. I said it was approximately 200 miles from Tobruk to Crete, and only 90 miles from Tunis to Sicily, and only 175 miles from Tunis to Sardinia. When we reduce those islands, as I assume we will, by means of attacks from airfields along the northern coast of Africa—airfields which probably are now being built—I do not believe the Germans or Italians can stay in those islands. If the Germans and Italians do not have any more air support in those places than they had in Tunisia, I am confident that they cannot stay there. Once they lose those islands, the length of the Allied supply lines to India will be greatly reduced. Then it will be possible to use the route by way of the Mediterranean, through the Suez Canal, and into the Indian Ocean, instead of the much longer route around the southern end of Africa.

Then it would seem to me—I do not claim to be a military strategist or an armchair strategist, but I can read and I can see pictures, and I understand some of the things I read and some of the pictures I see—it would seem to me that we shall have Germany ringed on all sides with hostile forces. I happen to be one of those who believe that Germany is not now in a position—and I have said so—to knock out either Russia or England. There was a time when she might have been in a position to knock out one or the other of them, but she did not knock out either one. If from Dunkerque, when she had 250 divisions, she had gone across the Channel at the time when England had only 1 division, the chances are that she would have knocked out England.

I also believe—but not because I consider myself to be a military strategist—that we cannot win unless we carry the fight to the enemy. In other words, as wars are waged today, I do not think it is possible to win by staying on the defensive.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. I share the Senator's enthusiasm for fighting Japan and for being aggressive against Japan.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has been out there and has seen some of the things I have seen. He knows Japan's quality as a fighter, and knows how narrowly we escaped from having her do to us some of the things she did to others. The Senator knows about those matters.

Mr. BURTON. At the same time I feel that it is essential that we check the enemy on the European front before we go to the other coast, and that we do not leave the European front in danger.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree.

Mr. BURTON. Therefore, I believe that in the present critical situation, as the Senator has described it, we must bear in mind not only our enthusiasm and desire to attack Japan, but the question of what would happen if Germany should win in Europe. Are we ready to take that tremendous chance? If Germany should win after we let go over there, we would have made the wrong guess.

Mr. CHANDLER. The reason why I bring up the matter is because conferences on strategy are now proceeding and those who have the right to decide as to what shall be the strategy will decide it. They may even be making the decisions now. However, I am not one of those Senators who believe that we should be interested only to the extent of taking an active interest. Of course, I do not claim that the Senate can conduct the war; but I do claim that the Senate, as the representative of the American people, has a profound interest in the way the war is conducted, and should make its wishes known if it can do so. Whether in the final analysis the statement of any one man will be found to be accurate, and the statement of another to be inaccurate, only time will tell.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator any possible estimate of the total number of British soldiers—not American soldiers—and all others except Americans who now are fully trained and equipped in the British Isles?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I have not.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not, either; but I think the number is in excess of 2,000,000. I assume it is already recognized by everyone that the rate of production of war planes of the British alone is greater than that of the Axis Powers.

Mr. CHANDLER. I said so earlier today. I said they have a larger air force than Germany has.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is also recognized, I think, that the British have perhaps 50 times the available merchant marine that the Axis Powers have.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is also recognized that the British have a naval fleet which probably is many times—let us say four or five times—the size of the combined Axis fleets, if all categories of vessels are considered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is likewise recognized that one of the great difficulties confronting Hitler at the time of Dunkerque was the lack of water transportation to enable his troops to cross to England. At that time it was also rather a matter of conjecture whether, if Hitler did get over to England, the British Fleet might fall into Hitler's hands. That was the reason for lend-lease and for other things—not particularly because the invasion of Britain alone would be bad for the world, but because of the possible resultant effects on the safety of our own country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand the Senator's position, he is not against supplying airplanes and weapons to Russia or to Britain.

Mr. CHANDLER. No. On the contrary, I said we should do so, and should continue to do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is talking primarily about the sending of additional manpower. If there are, let us say, in Great Britain over 2,000,000 British soldiers who have been there ever since Dunkerque, but who, we assume, have been sufficiently armed only for the last 18 or 24 months, if the British have a navy five times as great as the combined navies of the Axis Powers, if the British now have an air force exceeding in every way that of the Axis Powers, and in view of the fact that a great Russian Army is holding the Germans at bay, the Senator's point of view, as I understand it, is that he does not want either of the two fronts to become so strong that the other might be a danger to us.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the Senator has drawn the comparison more or less after the fashion in which I have briefly sketched it, to show that the situation over there is, not that victory is around the corner or that the war is over——

Mr. CHANDLER. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. But that from our standpoint, and viewing the whole picture, at the moment the European front is less dangerous than is the front in the Pacific.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has stated my position better than I have done, and I believe that what he has said is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I am only asking the Senator these questions because, in view of what the Senator from Ohio said, I do not want to leave in the RECORD the inference that the Senator from Kentucky is in favor of drawing everything from the European front and sending it into the fight against Japan.

Mr. CHANDLER. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand the position of the Senator from Kentucky he is perfectly content to let what is at the European front remain there—whatever is there, either in the way of manpower or personnel or matériel—but his wish is that from now on, until the situation on the European front appears to be more dangerous, more of an effort shall be made on the Pacific front, and less on the Atlantic or European front. It is not that the Senator believes at all that the developments on the European front are a certainty; but I understand that the Senator does believe there is today on the European front a great wealth of manpower and of naval power which, since the fall of Dunkerque, 3 years ago, has been employed to a very limited extent.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has accurately stated the feeling I have with respect to the general situation. We have the Germans completely surrounded. We have superior air power, as was demonstrated in the Battle of Tunisia. The German air force practically disappeared.

Mr. TYDINGS. And in Russia.

Mr. CHANDLER. And in Russia. We have been told by high military authorities that we have superiority in the air over every place where we are fighting. If that is so, and we have a ring around Germany, I think we can strangle Hitler.

The other reason for asking that that situation be not gone into except to the extent I have indicated is that an invasion of the continent of Europe by American boys, British boys, or Canadian boys would, in my opinion, result in terrific losses.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to pose as a military expert, because frankly I know very little about the military angles involved. However, let us look at the beaches in France, Belgium, and Holland. First of all, I think it is reasonable to assume that in the waters near the beaches the Germans have planted many thousands of mines. It is fair to assume that on the beaches themselves they have planted many tens of thousands of land mines. There is no doubt that on the beaches themselves they have erected many miles of barbed wire. There is no doubt that all the way from southern France to the entrance to the Baltic Sea the Germans have built concrete machine-gun emplacements, trench mortar emplacements, one-pounder emplacements, and artillery emplacements. There is light artillery, medium artillery, and heavy artillery.

What we are thinking of is a situation somewhat like that in World War No. 1, when both sides had stabilized their positions and set up all the permanent emplacements which human ingenuity could conceive. The Senator knows that in that case, even with tanks and with poison gas, it was very difficult to drive a wedge in for ever a short distance and hold it. The conquest of the St. Mihiel salient, for example, was very elaborately planned. The element of complete surprise was one of the factors which permitted us to take it. The Senator knows that after Chateau Thierry the reduction of the German thrust which came down from the Vesle River required considerable time. Germany had done her utmost.

Coming back to the beaches, I am not saying that we should make an invasion or that we should not. I do not know. However, I can well recognize the hesitancy of Mr. Churchill, President Roosevelt, General Marshall, and the British generals to jump into an invasion too quickly, because unless the attack is well planned, unless our forces are prepared to the *n*th degree to make such an attack, and unless every factor we can employ is employed, the invasion may fail. If the invasion should fail, we might prolong the war. So for the moment I am not advocating the opening of a second front unless our military experts think it wise.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand the Senator's argument, he is not advocating it or opposing it. What he is saying is that we cannot afford to overlook the Pacific, because the clouds gathering there are so dark that, if we overlook them, we may have to pay a greater price on all fronts in blood and treasure than we would have to pay if we should give more attention to the Pacific from now on.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have said so in the course of my speech. I repeat, the Senator has stated it better than I could. I do not know, but I have an idea that, if we were to talk to any soldier who went with the Canadians on the Dieppe raid, and learn what actually happened there, we should find that the defense in depth is tremendous. An invasion of the channel coast would be almost mass murder. Any force which undertakes it will suffer. If we were to fight Germany first, in my opinion, we should suffer maximum losses everywhere. I have reason to believe that the American fighting men in all services would rather make it a war of attrition. I do not think Germany can defeat any nation now. If we should let her alone, she might defeat some of her enemies, but I believe that the danger of a direct threat to Great Britain and Russia from Germany is virtually past. I think she has lost the initiative. I think we can carry the fight to her from now on. I think it would be best to employ tremendous forces against Japan and knock Japan out of the war. I have said that I am not certain that later we should have much assistance in defeating Japan. I would rather defeat Japan while we have allies than to have to defeat her by ourselves later, perhaps in a situation in which we could not defeat her.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Is it the past action of the military authorities which causes the concern of the Senator, or is it knowledge of proposed plans of the military authorities which causes concern?

Mr. CHANDLER. I cannot tell the Senator from Arizona what causes my concern. It would require too long. I am concerned about many things. The Senator has not heard my speech. I do not intend to deliver it again. I gave a rather detailed explanation of my concerns.

Mr. McFARLAND. But what causes the Senator to be concerned?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am concerned because this is my country. This is the only country I have, and I am anxious to raise my boys. For that reason I wish to see policies adopted which will more abundantly succeed, and save the lives of citizens of the United States.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator has made some statements which I have heard, which have caused me considerable concern. One of them was that we are not now as well prepared as we should be at Pearl Harbor. Does the Senator have some knowledge which he has gained through the Military Affairs Committee, or from some other source, in regard to Pearl Harbor, which the rest of us do not possess? The Senator cannot make such statements without causing us to have some concern. Personally I feel that discussions as to what the strategy of the War Department should be are very unfortunate, unless there is some real reason for them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not feel that way. I make these statements on my own responsibility, and because of my own concern. The Senator can discuss the question or not, as he chooses. I am not urging the Senator to be concerned.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. It was my purpose in interrupting the Senator a little while ago to bring out the point that I was sure the Senator would want to take into consideration, the fact that the authorities who determine our policies must consider the fact that the front in Europe is vital, and that if we were to lose there, the result would be practically fatal in the conduct of the World War. Therefore, the Senator must premise any demand to direct greater attention to the attack upon Japan upon the conclusion that we can hold our own without putting in any additional weight in Europe, because we must not lose there, whatever happens.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand. If I did not believe that we were in a position to give greater attention to Japan, I would not advocate it. To do so would be to advocate something which would be dangerous to the country.

Mr. BURTON. It would be practically fatal if things were to go wrong in Europe. Therefore the opinion of our military leaders on that subject is vital. We do not have that opinion before us. That is precisely the thing on which they are working at this time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think the Senator from Ohio means, by the questions he asks, to convey the impression that England now is in grave danger of a German invasion.

Mr. BURTON. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. TYDINGS. There was a time when England was actually threatened with a serious likelihood of such an invasion.

Mr. BURTON. What I wish to emphasize is that it would be practically fatal to us if anything should go wrong on the European front. Therefore we must not let anything go wrong there, and we must be sure not to run any risk of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me go back to the premise on which we agreed awhile ago. We agreed that as wars are conducted today, no country can win a war on the defensive. Does the Senator still agree to that?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I agree to that. The question is when to stop the offensive. We have a pretty good offensive now under way.

Mr. CHANDLER. If those who have the right to agree do agree that Germany has at least temporarily lost the offensive, and that at the present time England is not in danger of an invasion from Germany, and that the Soviet Union is not in danger of being overrun by the German Army, then the question is, Where should we turn our attention?

Mr. BURTON. It is at that point that I think it is vital for our military commanders to determine whether we should stop our offensive at this time, because when Germany had the offensive at the time she was attacking England, if she had continued she would have won the war. We must be careful not to stop too soon.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are only two points which I wish to reaccentuate. The first is that there are—as I recall without knowing the facts—in excess of 2,000,000 fully trained, fully equipped, ready-for-combat soldiers in the British Isles, plus an air force whose superiority over that of the Axis nations is overwhelming, plus a navy which is four or five times as great as the Axis navies, to say the least, plus the fact that the whole psychology and strategy of the war has gone from one of defeat on our side to defeat on the other side. The Russians are fighting and dying by the hundreds of thousands, and, indeed, by the millions. It seems to me that to supply an invasion army of 2,000,000 men will be a rather big job. It is pretty hard for us to supply a small force which runs only into the hundreds of thousands. It seems to me that if the invasion can be made and is to be made, while the Germans are reeling, the forces which are idle in the British Isles, to the number of two or two and a half million men, who are ready for it, should be utilized. I do not like the idea of having that great force mark time until we can send over two or two and a half million men to make the invasion, while we fight in the Pacific at the same time.

Perhaps I should not have said that. Perhaps what is now being done is the wise thing to do. If General Marshall and Admiral King believe it is wise to do what is now being done, I will retract what I have said. I am for them. They are skilled. But inasmuch as we are debating the subject, I am curious to know what, in their inner hearts and minds General Marshall and Admiral King really think about it as trained and skilled military men, who have the responsibility of winning the war, not only in the Atlantic, but in the Pacific as well.

The second point which I should like to accentuate is somewhat kindred to the first. How much are political considerations—I do not mean election considerations when I use the word "political"—how much, let me say, are political considerations in the international field influencing the better judgment of the experienced and seasoned Army and Navy men who have the real fighting to do, the responsibility to bear, and, as the Senator from Kentucky has said, the possibility of dying in order to prove the substance, merit, and soundness of their views? That is what I should like to know.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that if I had not believed I was speaking in their interest I should not have said a word. When I do think I am speaking in their interest I intend to speak.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator was well within his rights in making his statement, but a situation might evolve—I do not say it exists—in which the high Army and Navy men might be opposed to this policy, but being under the Commander in Chief, even though being opposed, they would do the best they could to carry out the political policies of the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator and I know the Army and Navy of the United States will in the future carry out the policies adopted at this conference and not raise a voice in opposition to them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Kentucky have both put their fingers on the particular problem which seems to me to be well worthy of consideration. We hear much about military decisions being made by military men. A short while ago the Senator from Illinois put into the RECORD an article by Mark Sullivan. Everybody who has any sense agrees with the article.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Military decisions are being made and should be made by military men, and no civilian should feel competent to set up his judgment against the best military judgment, with all due respect to some of the columnists and radio commentators who attempt to do that very thing.

The thing which would concern me as being a matter of very great strategy, and which should concern everyone else in the United States, is the question to what extent the best military and naval brains of the Allied forces are free to act and free to make decisions. Take the case of Mr. Churchill, for example. I have great respect and admiration for Mr. Churchill. I think he is one of the greatest orators who has lived, certainly in my time. He has been in the United States a great deal lately, and I am glad always to have him here. Mr. Churchill is one of the greatest English orators in the English-speaking world. Perhaps time will prove that he is one of the greatest statesmen who has ever lived. That is something which only time can settle. He is certainly one of the most attractive, intriguing, and colorful writers we have all been privileged to read during our lifetime. But Mr. Churchill has been notably and tragically unfortunate, both in the last war and in the present war, on occasions when he has made military and naval decisions. We all remember that Mr. Churchill was responsible for the ghastly fiasco at Gallipoli. We all remember when he went to Belgium and almost opened up the channel ports by his faulty strategic decisions as a civilian member of the British Cabinet. Without any reflection on Mr. Churchill's statesmanship, his patriotism, or his great ability as an orator, it rather gives me pause when I stop to think that in a matter of such terrific importance to the whole world as that which the Senator from Kentucky has been discussing here today, these decisions might not be made actually by the responsible military or naval chiefs who, as the Senator from Kentucky has said, would loyally carry out any decision, but the decisions may be made by superiors of the military and naval experts. It seems to me that when we are talking about leaving military decisions to military men and naval decisions to naval men, that is a consideration which should be taken under advisement.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I read Mark Sullivan's article in the Post this morning, and I am not willing that any columnist, or any Senator, for that matter, should tell me when I can speak on a question which is important to the people of my country. I know this conference is going on, and I know someone will make a decision. I do not know who will have the strongest influence in the making of the decision.

I do not know whether Mr. Churchill will make it or whether Mr. Roosevelt will make it. Perhaps both will make it. One may be as strong in his influence as the other. One may be the stronger and have his way. But I have a right to put my oar in. I want to assert my views with regard to the situation in the interest of the people of the United States only, and not because I am a military strategist or claim to be. So long as I am a Senator I am not one of those who will permit anyone to accuse me of trying to run the war by politics or by armchair strategy because I happen to assert what seems to me to be of prime and vital interest to the people of the United States.

I repeat, I have reason to believe that there are thousands upon thousands of soldiers and sailor boys as well as marines, and their officers, who would rather follow the course I have suggested. In the long run, Senators are not going to have to die; those who make the decisions will not have to die. Those in the armed services will have to die, if anyone dies, in the fighting, and they should have a chance, and strategy should be adopted which would give them a chance. I do not assert that any citizen of the United States is more or less anxious to win the war than I am, or more or less anxious to do it with the fewest number of losses, or in the best way, but I repeat that I am just as anxious as any of them, and just as much concerned. If in some way we can strengthen the arm of one who is making arrangements for our side so that he may prevail in the interest of the American people, and if I may have a small part in that success, I shall be very glad; and a small part is all that it will be, if any at all. But I will not let anybody divert me from the purpose I have, which is a good purpose. I think it is right. If I did not think so I would not do it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I simply wanted to say, in connection with the statement of the Senator from Missouri, that, in enumerating the military adventures of Mr. Churchill, he failed to mention the expendition to Russia during the last war after Russia had been our ally. History has recorded that Churchill, more than anyone else, was responsible for the expedition not only to Archangel but to Vladivostock, and was joined by other former allies of Russia. Japan, France, and the United States joined Britain in that expedition at that time. We were told it was a question of saving the Russian people; afterward it was stated that it was in an effort to make the Kerensky government guarantee the loans which had been made by certain lending institutions in various countries. The expedition was not successful, but our boys died in the snows of Archangel and of Vladivostok.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have the greatest respect for Mr. Churchill. He is a Britisher; he is not an American. I think he represents vigorously, as he understands them, the best interests of the British Government. I recall that he wrote a number of books—While England Slept, and others—in which he undertook to warn his people of the impending danger. They did not pay very much attention to him. It was an ironic incident that when it came to their darkest hour they called him to take them out of their trouble, and he has done a magnificent job.

I do not think Mr. Churchill represents the people of the United States on any council; I think he represents England, and the British Empire, and I do not blame him for that. I do not think Joe Stalin represents the people of the United States on any council, and I do not think he will represent them if he becomes a member of any council. He will represent Russia, and do a good job of it. He is a realist; he really knows how to add! I like to deal with people who know how to add, and I like people to deal with me who know how to add, because such people know what the figures tell them and get the right answer.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield long enough to enable me to read the article by Mark Sullivan to which the Senator from Missouri referred? It will take about 5 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before the Senator does that——

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish the Senator from Illinois would do that in his own time. I do not want it in my speech. I read it, and if I had wanted it in my speech I would have brought it here this morning.

Mr. LUCAS. I thought the Senator said in his talk to the Senator from Missouri that he would place it in the RECORD.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought the Senator had placed it in the RECORD.

Mr. LUCAS. I wanted to read it, and I shall do so later.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the Senator read it in his own time. I do not want it in my speech. I would have put it in my speech if I had so desired.

Mr. LUCAS. It contains a philosophy to which I subscribe.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the article the Senator has mentioned, but I want to ask the Senator a question. He is speaking about the representation of this country by Great Britain and by Russia, and he said Joe Stalin did not speak for the United States?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think so.

Mr. HATCH. I want to say to the Senator that the Russian armies which have been fighting German armies and have hurled them back in defeat have been representing the people of the United States bravely and well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not disagree with the Senator on that, and I have not said anything that would indicate any lack of appreciation for the magnificent job the Russian Army has done in defense of the country of Russia. If we got the benefit of it, as I think we did, I have not the slightest disposition to take a single bit of credit away not only from Joe Stalin, but from all the Russian armies for the fight which they have made. I hope they will continue it. But they have not fought Japan as yet. If they will fight Japan for us, then I shall be glad to advocate that we do something in the direction of Germany. At the moment, if they will fight Japan or if they will give us bases in their territory so that we can bomb Japan, I will be much more enthusiastic about it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. In the discussions I have heard during the course of the Senator's speech this afternoon, I have heard the Generalissimo referred to as being a great leader and a great representative of the Chinese people.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; I think he is.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have heard the Senator say time and time again, and I have heard other Senators mention the fact, that Churchill is over here representing Great Britain and the British Empire and the people of the British Empire. I have heard the fact referred to that Stalin is representing the Russian people and the great Russian Empire. I have not heard mentioned up to this time the name of the great leader who is representing the United States and the people of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Wait a moment. The Senator did not hear my speech.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me say——

Mr. CHANDLER. Wait a moment; I do not want any more along that line; that is as far as I want the Senator to go. I knew before he got up what he was going to say. He did not listen to my speech. If he had done so, he would know that I started out by saying that I wanted to strengthen the hands of the President of the United States. I do not yield to any other Member of the Senate, either on the Democratic side or the Republican side, in loyal support to him in his effort to prepare this country before we got into the war and to fight it after we got into the war. I claim now that he is doing a good job, and I want his hands strengthened. The Senator did not hear that part of my speech. If he had been here, he would have heard it, for it is in my speech.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am very sorry I have not heard every word the Senator said.

Mr. CHANDLER. So am I.

Mr. MURDOCK. I apologize to him that on two occasions I had to leave the Chamber briefly. I wish to say now that when he speaks of our own great leader he should bear in mind, and so should every other Senator, that of all the leaders in the world today he is the only one who is chosen by the people whom he represents. I am exceedingly proud of the last statement the Senator from Kentucky made—that he wants to strengthen the hands of that great leader, who, in my opinion, is greater than all the others put together.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want him strengthened so that he can show it. Woodrow Wilson was the greatest leader in the world at that time, and very few people disagreed until, as the boy used to say in Kentucky, the butcher cut him down.

Mr. LUCAS. He was not upheld in the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; he lost his influence before he got back here, and every student of history knows it. I have said before, and I repeat, the Senator from Utah, who loves the President, has not supported him any more wholeheartedly than I have in his plans and program, not only as he sought to prepare them before we got into the war, but vigorously to prosecute it since we have been in it.

Now, the question which arises is, Are we going to permit the President of the United States now to have happen to him what happened to Woodrow Wilson at Versailles 25 years ago, when suddenly the whole world dropped out from under him? I have not only read the history of it, but I have been told by men who were there that he got along fine up to a certain point, and then suddenly he learned that Clemenceau and Lloyd George and Orlando had made divers arrangements and treaties which he had known nothing about, and then all he could do was to go home because the others had the whole thing arranged. It was a pitiful thing. Woodrow Wilson was a great man; he had great ideals, which I hope some day may be realized, and they ought to be realized for the good of everybody in the world; but he was repudiated by these other men. When he went there he was, I think, the greatest leader man had at that time; there was not any leader greater than Woodrow Wilson at the hour when he left there.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at the moment. When Woodrow Wilson left there he was broken in spirit, broken in health, and when he came back here he carried his fight to the American people and lost it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator might point out that within a few days after the armistice was signed, and even before Wilson went abroad, the Democratic Party lost the House of Representatives.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh. yes; I have referred to that before now. I think, perhaps, it was occasioned by failure to consult a sufficient number of influential Members of the Senate of the United States. I hope that mistake will not be repeated, and I hope those who in their blind loyalty follow the leader without reason or question will not fix it so that the rest of us may also become yes men, because it is necessary to be realistic, it is necessary to be determined, and we have got to try to figure out a thing not as we wish it, but as it is, in order to help this President of ours to keep his influence right down to the last line and right down to the last signature, and it is my judgment—I do not claim it to be accurate, but it is mine, and I have a right to have it, and no one can keep me from having it—it is my best judgment that if we fight Germany and whip her first, he will not have any influence over there, and I do not know of any reason why he should have.

If Russia takes what she wants—and we will not be able to keep her from it, and no one else will—and if England takes what she wants, and they divide up Europe between them, what will happen? Suppose Russia wants Estonia, and Lithuania, and Latvia, and Finland, and Poland, what are we to do about it? We cannot do anything. We may protest, but they will not pay any attention to it. They will divide Europe up, unless a spirit of philanthropy moves them, and they become imbued with a desire to give things away. They have not given away anything yet; we are the ones who have given away. I have no objection to that so long as we are fighting a war with them which threatens us. But matters have shifted. Our danger is in the Pacific, our danger is in the east, and I want to fight a Pacific war vigorously and actively, and if we do not fight it vigorously and actively, we will by our failure create such a situation that we will never win, but will always be in war with Japan, because they are growing stronger every day and every hour.

Mr President, I do not say to someone else, "You do it." I say, "Come on; let us do the job together." That, in my opinion, will strengthen the hand of the President of the United States. It will make him more effective in his dealing with these two strong men, Churchill and Stalin, and we will be more apt not to lose. We always win the wars, but we lose the peace. This time we will not only win the war, but we will win the peace, and have something to say about it.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate longer than I had intended. I appreciate the interruptions of Senators who have agreed with me, as well as the comments of those who have disagreed. I did not expect that all my colleagues would share my views. I have stated as positively as lies in my power the views I have with respect to the present situation. They may not be important to anyone else, but they are important to me. If they shall be adopted by those who have the right to decide the strategy at the conference now in progress, I believe earnestly and sincerely that the decision will be in the best interest of all the people of the United States.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR LEGISLATIVE BRANCH AND THE JUDICIARY

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2409, making appropriations for the legislative branch and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no present desire to oppose the motion, but I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	George	O'Mahoney
Austin	Gerry	Overton
Bailey	Gillette	Radcliffe
Ball	Green	Reed

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is absent on official business for the Special Committee to Study and Survey Problems on Small Business Enterprises.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is out of the city conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] is a member of the committee attending the funeral of the late Representative ENGLEBRIGHT of California, and is, therefore, necessarily absent.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are detained on important public business.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on account of illness. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] is absent because of the death of his wife.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MILITARY DECISIONS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is certainly not my intention to address the Senate on any matter affecting the policy or conduct of the war. I regret that I did not hear all the address made by the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] with respect to what should or should not be done in the Pacific at this particular time.

I doubt that I would have taken the floor had not the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] referred to an article I placed in the RECORD this morning, written by the famous writer, Mark Sullivan, and entitled "Military Decisions." Early this morning I picked up the Post and found this column by Mark Sullivan, which so impressed me that I had it placed in the Appendix of the RECORD. I think it is the only article written by Mr. Sullivan which I have ever placed in the RECORD.

I wish to read what Mr. Sullivan had to say, and discuss it as I proceed because it is diametrically opposed to the theory and the philosophy of the Senator from Kentucky with respect to what should be done in connection with military decisions.

It does not make much difference what we may think about a given situation in respect to the conduct of the war, because in the final analysis we in the United States Senate and the people as a whole must place our trust and confidence in someone. As I have frequently said in the past, this country has spent literally billions of dollars in training men at Annapolis and West Point and throughout this land to defend our security and our institutions and our rights in a great crisis like that through which we are passing at the present time, and, if we cannot trust those men on whom we have spent these billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, then it is just too bad for us all. In the humble opinion of the Senator from Illinois, we must sink or swim with the military, air, and naval leaders of this country.

I am a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I believe that committee has about as much to do with the Pacific and the problems in that vast expanse as any other committee of the Senate.

Time and time again the best informed men in the United States Navy have come before our committee in executive session with respect to the very problem which has been discussed here this afternoon. Certainly no one can gainsay that the war up to this point has been going quite well for the United States Army, Navy, and Air Corps. When we think how unprepared we were when the Japs struck us in the back at Pearl Harbor in December 1941 and how disunited we were in this country, and honestly so, with respect to the great problems which exist here on the home front, we must conclude—and I think history will show in the final analysis—that one of the greatest miracles of all times has been accomplished not only on the home front by way of production but on the military front, so far as the fighting men are concerned and so far as military strategy and tactics are concerned.

And, Mr. President, we have only begun to produce and we have only begun to fight. Mark Sullivan's article deals with some of the things the military and naval strategists have done in the past and discusses different criticisms and castigations which have been indulged in by various individuals as the result of a certain type or kind of military policy.

Mr. President, why does anyone suppose that at this very hour generals and admirals from different sections of the world are here in Washington if Churchill and Roosevelt are not going to listen to them, take their advice and counsel, and take into consideration what these men, who have been on the actual fighting fronts, say about the military situation? If Roosevelt and Churchill are going to make decisions, as has been intimated here, for political reasons or for the furtherance of some international policy in the future, then why bring in all these individuals to discuss the tactical, the military, the naval, and the strategic activities of this global conflict?

Mr. President, I cannot believe that such a thing as has been intimated is being done. Franklin D. Roosevelt is Commander in Chief of the American Army, and notwithstanding all the utterances against the third term, the people of the country during the greatest crisis the country has ever experienced, elected him in 1940 to serve another 4 years. Under the Constitution, he is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. H has a right and it is his constitutional duty to make decisions in connection with the military and the naval operations just as Winston Churchill has, as Prime Minister of Great Britain. Of course, President Roosevelt would be foolish and unwise to make tomorrow's decisions in connection with the great world military problems unless he does have before him the advice and counsel of military, naval, and air experts.

Mr. President, I know Admiral King fairly well. He has been before our committee many times. I know Gen. George Marshall. I served with him in the National Guard in Illinois from 1935 to 1938, when he was the senior instructor of the National Guard. During those summer months when I was in training with him I had close contact with him, I saw him, I observed him, and I have heretofore paid him the highest compliment a Senator can pay another on the floor of the Senate. I think he is one of the greatest military men of all time. I hold the same opinion of Admiral King, so far as the Navy is concerned. Thank God, the Army and the Navy are in the hands of men like Marshall and King. It is fortunate for the 137,000,000 people in this country that those men are exactly where they are.

Mr. President, this is what Mark Sullivan says in his article:

> The common assumption in Washington is that President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and their respective staffs are deciding the next move against the Axis.

Is there anything wrong in that? Was there anything wrong in Roosevelt going to Casablanca and meeting Churchill there to make the decision as to what should be done in connection with the military and naval operations in that section of the world? He is still Commander in Chief, even though he goes to Casablanca. Has there been anything seriously wrong with our strategy in sending troops to north Africa? Have not events proved conclusively that, whoever devised the strategy, the north African policy has been a success?

Mr. President, coming back from Bermuda 2 weeks ago I met one of the great journalistic military strategists of this country. He is recognized as being one of the outstanding newspaper writers on military strategy. That was the first time I had met him. I talked to him about what he thought was happening in north Africa, because he had been on the ground for 2 solid months. He told me that he was somewhat disappointed with respect to what was going on over there. I asked him what in his judgment would be the earliest date we could defeat the Germans in north Africa. This newspaper writer on military strategy, this individual who furnishes information to millions of readers about our Army and our Navy and our Air Force, said it would be the middle of June at the latest before we could be able to drive the Germans and Italians out of north Africa, and 1 week's time proved his judgment to be erroneous, although he had spent 2 months over in north Africa on the military front.

Do Senators think that Generals Eisenhower, Alexander, Patton, and other generals told the newspapermen anything about their strategy or their technique in connection with what is going on in that military field of war? Of course not. Here was a man who had spent 2 months in north Africa, an individual who is recognized in this country as one of the leading newspaper military strategists, an individual who speaks over the radio and on radio forums on military matters, an individual whose articles are consistently read by many people, making a bad guess upon strategy. I am not condemning him or criticizing him. I make this statement only to demonstrate how easy it is to be wrong in connection with any military problem which exists in this war of men, planes, bombs, and ships.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Anent what the Senator has said, a month ago I had the good fortune to meet one of the most distinguished military correspondents in this country. He had just returned from north Africa. In fact he had first gone to the southwest Pacific, and had gone from there to north Africa. He was in north Africa with the American forces when they landed in north Africa, and he had stayed there for some months thereafter. Now he had just returned from north Africa. He told me that it was the opinion of the military correspondents in north Africa at that time, about a month ago, that we had only a 50–50 chance to get the Germans out of north Africa by next Christmas. That showed, as the Senator from Illinois has said, that these men who do not know and cannot know exactly what the situation is, cannot arrive at an accurate conclusion.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Alabama. Right at a time when we have achieved the greatest military victory in this war, at a time when we have captured approximately 200,000 Germans and Italians in north Africa, at a time when our victory demonstrates to the conquered countries of Europe, and the despicable Hitler that after all we have done a pretty fair job from the standpoint of strategy and tactics in eliminating these 200,000 Germans and Italians in this area, now certain persons want to change the strategy and let somebody else make the decisions. I cannot understand this type of condemnation of our conduct of the war.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Not only have we won a great victory in taking those 200,000 Germans and Italians out of the war, out of opposition to us but by that great victory we have augmented our own forces by some 300,000 men, because by our victory and our conquest of north Africa we brought to our side, to fight side by side with us, some 300,000 Frenchmen.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator for his remark, because it is in line with what Mr. Sullivan says with respect to the military decisions. I will go into that matter in a moment.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will further yield to me—and I do not want to take too much of his time——

Mr. LUCAS. That is all right. These matters are important, and I want the Senator to take all the time that it is necessary to take.

Mr. HILL. Le me say that in connection with what the Senator has said, I hope the Senator will thoroughly discuss the implications of the victory in north Africa. When we speak of the war against Germany and Japan, it seems to me that the war in north Africa was just as much a war against Japan as it was against Germany.

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly.

Mr. President, who knows what the strategy will be from now on? It is possible that when the Mediterranean is cleared and the road to India is open, thousands upon thousands of troops will pour through India into Burma and into China, and toward Japan. No one knows what the strategy will be.

Mr. HILL. And, of course, as the Senator well knows, the first step against Japan was to prevent the Germans and Italians from gaining control of north Africa and of the Suez, and from spreading into India and forming a connection with the Japanese, who have been in Burma and on the eastern edge of India. If that had happened, the Germans and Italians would have been able to send supplies to the Japanese by means of relatively short supply lines, and our task and China's task in the Pacific would have become immeasurably greater.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is precisely correct. When we opened the Mediterranean the overnight effect was to double our tonnage of shipping. Shipping is one of the vital factors in connection with the sending of supplies to India, to our men, and to the men of our allies, all of whom are fighting side by side in India, in the move toward conquering Burma and the adjacent lands.

Mr. HILL. Furthermore, Mr. President, if we had not opened the campaign in north Africa when we did, and had not forced the Germans to use so much matériel and so many men in that campaign, it might have been necessary for the Russians to withdraw men and matériel from Siberia to such an extent that Japan would have moved into Siberia, and we would have lost all chances of obtaining bases in Siberia.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator is eminently correct, Mr. President.

All those speculations and conjectures can take place, and rightfully so, with respect to what is going on over there; but in the final analysis the individuals who are there, who understand those matters, and who have made a lifetime study of them, are the ones who have to make the decisions; and so far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, I am going to stand with them. I am going down fighting with them if they lose, or I am going to come up with them if they win. Every other individual should take the same position with respect to the type of unity we have to have in order to keep the morale of this country as it should be, and to keep our soldiers and their leaders secure in the knowledge that the American people are behind them.

Mr. HILL. The Senator knows, too, that in time of war the Government and its military and naval leaders cannot tell the people what the situation is or what the Army and the Navy are doing. The Senator referred to the election in November 1918. As the Senator will recall, in the campaign before that election, campaign orators went over the country proclaiming and shouting that we should put at least one million men in France. At that very time we had in France, not one million men, but over two million men; and within a few days after the election the Germans signed the armistice.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Let me say that I am in entire accord with what the Senator has said in tribute to the Army and the Navy. There is one question which I should like to ask: Does the Senator feel that unless we defeat the Japanese today we may have to fight them alone later on?

Mr. LUCAS. Not at all.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not feel that way. That is a view I never have entertained; and I should like to ask the Senator what his feeling is in that respect.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, I do not know. The Senator from Kentucky may have better information on that score than does the Senator from Illinois. I do not want to challenge any statement the Senator made. I have discussed these questions with some Englishmen and with some Americans. We have heard what Churchill said with respect to going all the way with us in connection with the fight in the Pacific; therefore, I simply cannot believe, Mr. President, that we are not in this fight to a finish to destroy forever, as Roosevelt and Churchill have said, nazi-ism and Japism and fascism. Certainly England is not going to desert America and become an ally of Japan.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am glad to hear the Senator say that because I certainly feel the same way.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, Mark Sullivan further says:

> About the decisions, one thing is sure.

He is talking about the conference in Washington.

> They are for the high commands alone to make. The public cannot have information about them, because such information would be valuable to the enemy. Because the public cannot have information, it cannot have judgment.

I think that is a very sound statement. Mr. Sullivan continues:

> This is illustrated by something that went on throughout most of last year.
> Beginning early last year there was popular clamor for a second front in Europe—that is, an invasion of the European Continent and an attack upon Germany by a British and American force.

We heard all that. We heard the constant clamor by certain individuals in this country for a second front. Some great men went across the ocean, came back, and went around the country preaching for a second front; we remember that at one time the English tried to open a second front, at least on a minor scale. That was at Dieppe. We all know what happened there. There is no question in my mind that if the British had been successful in landing, and had not lost a large percentage of the some 12,000 men who started on this military venture, they would have continued the invasion. But they found the Germans quite strong at that point and were compelled to turn back.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I should like to have the Senator's response to the following question: Does he think it is quite fair to assume that when the leaders of the Allied Nations meet to decide upon the strategy, they will be working entirely for their own nations, not for the success of the whole cause? I noticed the implication in some of the statements, particularly the statements as to Stalin or Churchill, that they have not been representing the general cause, but instead have been representing their own particular countries. I should like to hear the comment of the Senator from Illinois on that particular point.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, I cannot speak for any of those men. However, my judgment insofar as Churchill and Roosevelt are concerned—they are the two who now are in Washington—is that they are working for the common cause, and for the destruction forever of what I spoke of a moment ago as nazi-ism and Japism and the similar Fascist movement in Italy. I have confidence in Stalin and his great Red Army. We all owe much to their heroism, sacrifice, and bravery. I cannot feel any other way about the matter. Then again, Mr. President, I am willing to take my chances with Franklin D. Roosevelt when it comes to negotiating with Hitler, or Stalin, or any other individual in connection with the war or the post-war problems. He has done a magnificent job to date, and he is not a bad fellow to have around when it comes to dealing with other nations.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. There is a suggestion that there is a fear on the part of some Senators that Churchill and President Roosevelt will be the ones to make the decisions, rather than the military leaders of the country. Does the Senator know of the outcome of any of the strategy heretofore planned that would justify such a fear?

Mr. LUCAS. No. I do not know who has done the planning; but whoever is responsible has done a pretty damned good job. [Laughter.]

Mr. TUNNELL. And, again, should it not be said that under our Constitution there is bound to be someone who is Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that the Constitution so provides.

Mr. TUNNELL. Prior to the last general election in 1940 it was pretty generally known that there was a possibility of just this situation, and the American people selected Franklin Roosevelt over another great Democrat because they believed that he had more ability for such a situation. Is that not true?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know what the reasons of all the people were for the decision which they made, but the verdict in 1940 was fairly decisive.

Mr. TUNNELL. The precedent as to a third term was set aside, so that the present occupant might have the position which he now has, and the right to make determinations.

Mr. LUCAS. Obviously there is no longer any precedent.

Mr. TUNNELL. I do not know who should have the right to make decisions if he and Churchill do not have it at this time.

Mr. LUCAS. I think they are acting in the best interests of humanity as a whole and the free institutions of the world, and for no other reason. They are trying to do whatever is necessary to win the war in the quickest possible time. They are bringing their military and naval advisers to sit with them for that one purpose.

Mr. TUNNELL. I understand from the newspapers that Mr. Churchill has about 100 strategists with him, who are familiar with the situation. I assume that President Roosevelt, being at home, has at least that many.

Mr. LUCAS. If we are to believe the statements of some persons, he might have brought the 100 along merely to carry his luggage. However, I think they are here for a pretty good purpose.

Mr. TUNNELL. I believe the Senator is willing to admit that the combined judgment of those gentlemen on Army and Navy strategy is equivalent to that of the United States Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. It is, so far as I am concerned. I am willing to yield to them. That is what I am talking about at the present time.

Mr. Sullivan's article further states:

The clamor—

With respect to the second front—

continued in England and America throughout the summer. While some of it was inspired by Communists, a great deal was spontaneous and reflected a genuine popular wish. Toward this popular demand the attitude of the British and American Governments was one of diplomatic stalling. They knew that a second front in Europe in sufficient force to be at once formidable and safe was impossible. But to say that would have been to give valuable information to Hitler. Moreover, continuance of the demand for a second front provided the British and American Governments with camouflage for what they were really about to do Beginning about June the British and Americans knew they would undertake to occupy north Africa. That was as much as they were able to do under the conditions existing last year

What last year's conditions were became known to the public a few weeks ago. By a report of the Truman committee of the Senate, followed by statements from Secretary of the Navy Knox, it became known that throughout last year enemy submarines were sinking a larger tonnage of Allied ships than the number of new ships being built.

Mr. President, that is something that we could not tell the American people at that time, because it would have been giving aid and comfort to the enemy to make that kind of a revelation to the public as a whole.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. If it is the intention of the strategists, at the end of the conference, to attack Japan, might it not be possible that it would be considered wise by them not to notify Japan of what they plan to do, and when they plan to do it?

Mr. LUCAS. Exactly.

The article continues:

The excess of destruction by the enemy was such that at the end of 1942 the Allies had about a million tons less shipping than they had at the beginning. In that condition of diminishing tonnage, a second front in Europe was impossible. This the allied high command knew. The public did not.

Yet, Mr. President, a certain portion of the public was constantly crying for a second front. That was true not only in this country but in England as well. Who could know about the sinkings other than the naval and military authorities? To have given out that information then would have been aiding the enemy.

Another experience of last year is useful to apply now. When American General Eisenhower set out to occupy French north Africa, he expected that the territory would be delivered to him by a French general named Giraud. For this purpose, General Giraud was sent secretly to north Africa, by submarine. It turned out, however, that the French Army in north Africa would not take orders from General Giraud.

To General Eisenhower this was extremely embarrassing. It looked as if he might have to fight and conquer the French Army in north Africa before he could even begin to fight the Axis. Actually, there was some fighting between the American and French Armies with material loss of life.

It happened, however, that there was in north Africa a representative of the Vichy French Government, Admiral Darlan. Darlan offered to order the French Army to cease firing on the Americans, and further to join the Americans in fighting the Axis. General Eisenhower accepted the offer, of course

This decision of General Eisenhower ended the fighting between the Americans and French, saved many French and American lives, and hastened our occupation of north Africa, according to an estimate made by President Roosevelt at the time, by "a month or two."

Nevertheless, as soon as General Eisenhower's arrangement with Darlan became known in America, there was an outcry here, chiefly from liberals and radicals. Their outcry was mainly that American military authorities ought not to enter into any agreement with any official of the Vichy French Government—no matter how valuable the arrangement was in a military sense. Those who took this view kept up for many months a din of criticism against President Roosevelt, Secretary of War Stimson, and Secretary of State Hull.

In other words, Mr. President, because Eisenhower made the military decision to go along with Darlan so as to save thousands and thousands of American boys, many individuals in this country who believe more in some political theory or ideology than in saving the lives of American boys criticized the action. So far as I am concerned, Eisenhower made the correct decision. If I had had anything to do with military strategy at that time on the African front I would have done the same thing. I would deal with Al Capone or any other type of individual on the military front in north Africa or any other front if it would save my army or a great portion of it.

That action did not mean for one moment that Darlan would have charge of north Africa after this thing is over. If I were in a street brawl with three other men, I would be willing to take help from any individual who might come along. The tougher he might be the better I would like it. That was the situation with Darlan. They were dealing with a tough hombre, and a smart, profound man. The result was that they got from Darlan what they did not get from Giraud. It was a great piece of strategy. I do not know who was in on it, but I am for it. That type of a military decision is primarily responsible for having the enemy out of north Africa today.

The article continues:

This Eisenhower-Darlan incident is here told very briefly. It had many ramifications. For some of the opposition to the arrangement, there were appealing reasons.

But the fundamental lesson is plain. Military decisions should be left to military men. When a military high command, or a military leader in the field, has made a decision for a military purpose, for the purpose of bringing the war to an end in the shortest possible time with the least loss of life—when such a decision has been made by a military commander, he should be free from criticism from those who may deplore the decision on grounds of ideology. This lesson is the more important to remember because, when and as we invade Europe, scores of situations will arise similar to the Eisenhower-Darlan one in north Africa.

That is true, Mr. President. When the American, British, and French Armies finally invade Europe and go from one country to another, they will find in the various countries the same type of situation that Eisenhower found in north Africa. They will have to deal with the situation as they find it. Probably that is one of the things now being discussed in the present conference. I do not know. Those in the conference are discussing a great number of things. Whatever they do, I am satisfied that in the final analysis it will be for the best interests of this beloved country of ours and the best interests of free institutions throughout the world. Everything they do will militate against the cruel tyrants in Japan, Germany, and Italy.

I am just as bitterly and viciously opposed to the Japanese as is any other Senator. I can never forget, and nobody will forget, what the Japanese did to us on December 7, 1941. American soldiers will have their day of vengeance. It is a long way out into the Pacific. It is a long way to where our boys are at the present time. Mark Sullivan has told us about shipping. Shipping is the real reason we occupy the position we do today in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. President, I am not going to suggest what Admiral King, President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, General Marshall, or General Arnold should do on this eventful occasion. They have done an excellent job to date. So far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, he is willing to leave the decision of such questions to the judgment of the military and naval men.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator think that any man in the Senate of the United States, or outside the Senate of the United States, who is not participating in the conference, with all the facts and the full picture before him, with the complete story of the situation in every part of the world as it affects this war, is in a position to make suggestions as to what should be done?

Mr. LUCAS. I can only answer for myself. I believe, as a Member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I have as much knowledge of the situation as have most Senators. Yet under such conditions, if I were to attempt to lay down the strategy and map the plans for the future of this war, I should be hurting the war effort rather than helping it. I believe I would be doing my country a disservice.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR LEGISLATIVE BRANCH AND THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 2409.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2409) making appropriations for the legislative branch and for the Judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish briefly to say that this is the regular appropriation bill for the legislative branch and for the Judiciary. The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $40,659,273.

The amount of increase by the Senate committee was $284,505. The amount of the bill as reported to the Senate was $40,943,778. The amount of the appropriation for 1943 was $43,826,092. The amount of the regular and supplemental estimates for 1944 was $41,804,350. The bill as reported to the Senate is $860,572 less than the estimates for 1944. It is $2,882,314 less than the appropriations for 1943.

So there is a considerable saving in the bill. The increase of $284,505 granted by the Senate Committee on Appropriations deals for the most part with a $100,000 item for the revision of the laws. Aside from that, the appropriations are purely routine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Legislative Branch—Senate—Office of the Secretary," on page 3, in line 14, after the figures "$1,440", to insert "and $420 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent", and in line 20, after the words "in all", to strike out "$150,020" and insert "$150,440."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Committee employees", on page 5, line 2, after the figures "$2,220", to strike out "additional clerk, $1,800" and insert "two additional clerks at $1,800 each;"; in line 19, after the figures "$3,900", to insert "assistant clerk, $3,000, in lieu of assistant clerk provided by Senate Resolution No. 321 (77th Cong.), agreed to December 15, 1942;", and on page 7, line 19, after the words "in all", to strike out "$507,740" and insert "$512,540."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Clerical assistance to Senators," on page 8, after line 21, to strike out:

Senators and chairmen of standing committees may rearrange or change the schedule of salaries and the number of employees in their respective offices or committees: Provided, That such changes shall not increase the aggregate of the salaries provided for such offices or committees by law or Senate resolution: Provided further, That no salary shall be fixed hereunder at a rate in excess of $4,500 per annum and no action shall be taken to reduce any salary which is specifically fixed by law at a rate higher than $4,500: Provided further, That Senators and committee chairmen, on or before the first day of the month in which such changes are to become effective, shall certify in writing such changes or rearrangements to the disbursing office which shall thereafter pay such employees in accord with such changed schedule.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Senators and chairmen of standing committees may change the number of employees in their respective offices or committees, and may rearrange the schedule of basic salaries of such employees in multiples of $5 per month: Provided, That such changes and rearrangements shall not increase the aggregate of the salaries provided for such offices or committees by law or Senate resolution: Provided further, That no salary shall be fixed under this paragraph at a rate in excess of $4,500 per annum, and no action shall be taken to reduce any salary which is specifically fixed by law at a rate higher than $4,500 per annum: Provided further, That Senators and committee chairmen, before the day on which they are to become effective, shall certify in writing such changes or rearrangements to the disbursing office of the Senate which thereafter shall pay such employees in accordance with such certifications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper" on page 10, line 15, after the word "clerks", to insert "one, $3,300."; in line 16 after the figures "$2,200", to strike out "one $2,100,"; in line 19, after the figures "$2,280" to insert "and $120 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent"; in line 21, before the words "assistant doorkeeper", to strike out the comma and "one $1,500"; on page 11, line 4, after the figures "$3,360", to strike out "upholsterer and locksmith, $2,600; cabinetmaker, $2,040; three carpenters at $2,040 each;" and insert "cabinetmakers—chief, $2,780; one, $2,300; one, $2,040; finisher, $2,300; upholsterer, $2,040;"; in line 7, after the figures "$2,400", to insert "and $300 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent"; in line 14, after the word "each", to strike out "attendant authorized by S. Res 252, adopted May 13, 1938, $1,500;"; in line 24, after the word "each", where it occurs the first time, to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-eight", and on page 12, line 3, after the words "in all", to strike out "$277,228" and insert "$274,028."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, at the end of line 23, in the item for reporting Senate proceedings, to change the appropriation from $66,340 to $69,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, at the end of line 17, to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$35,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 22, to strike out:

Senate restaurants: For repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building, and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $35,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Senate restaurants: For payment to the Architect of the Capitol in accordance with the act approved September 9, 1942 (Public Law 709, 77th Cong.), $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "House of Representatives—Contingent Expenses of the House", on page 27, after line 13, to insert:

For preliminary work in connection with the preparation of a new edition of the United States Code, including the correction of errors as authorized by the act approved March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1541), $100,000, to be expended under the supervision of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Architect of the Capitol—Capitol Buildings and Grounds", in the item for Capitol buildings on page 33, at the end of line 9, to strike out "$289,200" and insert "$291,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 11, after the words "in all", to strike out "$313,560" and insert "$306,955: Provided, That the unexpended balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation of $7,300 for the maintenance of the Senate Office Building, contained in the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943, approved October 26, 1942, shall continue available for the same purposes until June 30, 1944."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II, the judiciary, miscellaneous items of expense," on page 57, line 2, after the word "assistants", to strike out "$2,542,900" and insert "$2,570,280."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 2, to strike out:

No part of any appropriation in this act shall be used to pay the cost of maintaining an office of the clerk of the United States District Court at Anniston, Ala.; Florence, Ala.; Jasper, Ala.; Gadsden, Ala.; Grand Junction, Colo.; Montrose Colo.; Durango, Colo.; Sterling, Colo.; Newnan, Ga.; Benton, Ill.; Salina, Kans.; Chillicothe, Mo.; Roswell, N. Mex.; Bryson City, N. C.; Shelby, N. C.; Ardmore, Okla.; Guthrie, Okla.; Aberdeen, S. Dak.; Pierre, S. Dak.; Deadwood, S. Dak.; Ogden, Utah; Casper, Wyo.; Evanston, Wyo.; or Lander, Wyo.; but this paragraph shall not be so construed as to prevent the detail during sessions of court of such employees as may be necessary from other offices to the offices named herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 8, after the words "provided for", to strike out "$987,100: Provided, That the compensation of secretaries and law clerks of district judges shall be fixed by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, except that the salaries of secretaries, exclusive of the differential allowed for higher living costs in the Panama Canal Zone, shall not exceed that of the senior clerical grade and the salaries of law clerks shall not exceed that of the principal subprofessional grade: Provided further, That none of this fund shall be used for the pay of a law clerk appointed by a district judge unless the senior circuit judge of the circuit (the District of Columbia being considered a circuit) in which the district where the clerk is needed is situated shall certify to the necessity of the appointment" and insert: "$1,137,100: Provided, That the compensation of secretaries and law clerks to circuit and district judges shall be fixed by the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, except that the salaries of the secretaries, exclusive of temporary additional compensation, and exclusive of the differential allowed for higher living costs in the Panama Canal Zone, shall correspond with those of the assistant administrative grade (grade 7 of clerical, administrative, and fiscal service) and their basic salaries shall be adjusted by the Director as of July 1, 1943, so that they are given credit for one rate of $100 in grade 7 for each 18 months' prior service as secretary to any Federal judge or other United States Government official: Provided further, That the annual basic compensation of the secretary to a circuit or district judge shall not (exclusive of temporary additional compensation) exceed $3,200: And provided further, That the salaries of law clerks shall correspond with those of the assistant professional grade."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 8, after the word "issued", to strike out "$390,000" and insert "$391,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am authorized by the committee to offer from the floor an amendment which would require suspension of the rule. The amendment which I offer, as to which I gave notice, is more or less pro forma, but I should like to have it read, and then I will explain it very briefly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

Notwithstanding the provisions of the third paragraph under the heading "Clerical assistance to Senators" of section 1 of the Legislative Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928 (2 U. S. C. 92a), in the case of the death of a Senator during his term of office, his clerical assistants on the pay roll of the Senate on the date of such death shall be continued on such pay roll at their respective salaries for a period of not to exceed 60 days: Provided, That any such clerical assistants continued on the pay roll shall, while so continued, perform their duties under the direction of the Secretary of the Senate, and he is hereby authorized and directed to remove from such pay roll any such clerks who are not attending to the duties for which their services are continued.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, when a Member of the Senate dies, it has been customary——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I recall the statement which the Senator from Maryland made heretofore. It was very clear. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in order to protect the committee clerks from being included in this provision, it is necessary that there be a further proviso, which reads as follows:

Provided further, That this shall not apply to clerical assistants of standing committees of the Senate when their service otherwise would continue beyond such period.

I believe the proviso speaks for itself, and that no explanation is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk. I ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Terms of court at Greenwood, S. C.: Section 105 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "at Greenwood the first Mondays in February and November", in the third paragraph thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "at Greenwood the second Mondays in May and December."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, that amendment is satisfactory to the committee. The Senator from South Carolina has corresponded with the court and has letters from the judges concerning the matter. The amendment would cost no money. It is merely an arrangement for hearings, and I can see no objection to it.

Mr. McNARY. Is that the amendment concerning which the Senator spoke to me earlier in the day?

Mr. MAYBANK. It merely provides for a change in the dates of the court, in the interest of the judges, the district attorney, and those who appear in court.

Mr. McNARY. I understand it is intended as an accommodation in the public interest.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, a letter addressed to me from Mr. Henry P. Chandler, Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, under date of May 17, 1943.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR MAYBANK: I have just been informed that the United States attorney for the western district of South Carolina is desirous of changing the times of holding terms of the district court for that district in Greenwood, which are now designated by section 105 of the Judicial Code (title 28, U. S. C., sec. 186) as the first Mondays in February and November to the second Mondays in May and December. I am further informed that Judges Wyche and Timmerman, the United States district judges who hold the terms of court in the western district, join in recommending this change.

Although I have had no opportunity to confer about the proposed change with the judicial conference of senior circuit judges under which I act, it is a local matter and in view of the approval of the change by the district judges who are familiar with the conditions, I have no doubt that it is advisable. It would produce a more even spacing of the time between the winter or spring and fall terms of court and lessen the time which persons indicted under the present schedule after February in any year and unable to furnish bail may have to stay in jail awaiting trial.

Hon. John J. Parker, the senior circuit judge of the circuit, happens to be in my office this morning. I have therefore consulted him and he authorizes me to say that he approves the proposed change.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HENRY P. CHANDLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 2409) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. GREEN, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. WHITE conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the statement by Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, before the Senate Finance Committee this morning on the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act and the extension thereof.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By this time, it should be crystal-clear to each and every one of us that during the interval between the two wars there were committed some of the most colossal blunders in the experience of the human race. Otherwise, the world would not be in its present critical position.

There never was a time, therefore, when it was more necessary for every one of us to examine and reexamine the nature and causes of mankind's tragic failure in the last two decades to build an enduring structure of law, peace, and prosperity. None of us, who prizes freedom and who has at heart our national interest for the sake of which we are now pouring out blood and treasure, can permit any preconceived notion, however long and strongly held, to stand in the way of an understanding of the crushing blunders of recent years and of resolute effort to make sure that such blunders will not recur in the future.

This is not the occasion for a thorough and comprehensive examination of this all-important matter in its entirety. But this is an eminently fit occasion for a discussion of one of its essential phases—the problem of international economic cooperation as an indispensable basis both for peace and for prosperity.

For the past 9 years the reciprocal-trade-agreements policy has been carried forward by cooperative action of the legislative and executive branches of the Government. It was originally enacted in 1934, and has been, since then, twice renewed. The House of Representatives, after exhaustive hearings and debate, has just voted, by an overwhelming nonpartisan majority, to renew it again.

In the course of the hearings held by the House Committee on Ways and Means I made a comprehensive statement of the essential considerations involved in the question which is before you. I shall not take your time to reiterate the points presented in it. But I should like, if I may, to dwell upon one or two of these points.

In making its decision at this time whether or not to renew the Trade Agreements Act, the Congress is faced with the first significant test of this country's basic attitude toward the future. The issue is whether or not our country is determined to cooperate with other peacefully inclined nations in economic matters.

After the last war, we, as a Nation, faced the same issue, and we have paid a terrible price for the fact that our answers to some of the questions raised by that issue were neither clear-cut nor consistent. Following the war of 1914–18, international economic relations soon fell into a pattern of rapidly narrowing nationalism. Recovery from the dislocations produced by that first world conflict imperatively required a revival and growth of international trade. Instead, the nations of the world surrounded themselves with ever-mounting barriers to an exchange of goods across their boundaries. To that destructive piling up of trade restrictions, our country contributed its full share.

During the decade of the twenties, the evil effects of trade restrictions were somewhat mitigated and disguised by the vast volume of international loans. Our country supplied billions of dollars in loans, which enabled us to maintain our exports on a relatively high level while we were putting immense obstacles in the path of our imports.

That unhealthy situation could not continue long. And it did not. By the end of the first post-war decade, the structure of international trade became disrupted, and the resultant dislocation served as a powerful contributory factor to the general economic collapse which descended on our country and the world.

In the first bitter days of that profound depression, our country and other countries could think of no expedient, except to intensify and extend the very course of narrow economic nationalism which was so largely responsible for the tragic plight in which we found ourselves. Trade barriers rose to unprecedented heights. The structure of currency and credit was shattered. Countries resorted to a multiplying variety of economic weapons, and all suffered in consequence.

Fortunately for us and for the world, this country, after more than a decade of noncooperation with others, at last had the vision and the courage to shift gears in the all-important field of commercial policy and to move in the opposite direction. That was the historic significance of the original enactment of the trade-agreements policy.

In the trade-agreements program we had a flexible and easily adjustable instrument for dealing with the two great obstacles to a healthy development of mutually beneficial international trade. The first of those obstacles was the immense variety of restrictions on imports—excessive tariffs, quotas, exchange controls, and many others. The second was the use of these devices in a discriminatory manner. By means of trade agreements, we sought to eliminate or diminish these destructive barriers. The trade-agreement method enabled us to accomplish the reduction of trade barriers in other countries through a reciprocal reduction of some of our own tariff rates. It enabled us, by the use of the most-favored-nation principle, to press for an abandonment of discriminatory practices. Amid the growing deterioration of all international relationships during the years which preceded the outbreak of the present war, the trade-agreement program was the most important single support for the hope that the nations might find a way toward cooperative action for the establishment and maintenance of peaceful international relations.

As we face the future, the renewal now of the Trade Agreements Act will have perhaps an even greater historic significance than that of its original adoption.

Our people are fully aware of that fact. For months past, in Congress and throughout the country, there has been discussion of the post-war world and of what should be our part in it, a free give and take of views and ideas in the best American tradition. This is as it should be. Only in this way can public opinion crystallize and the Congress be enabled accurately to register that opinion. We must chart the general direction of our post-war course, begin to make decisions on policies, necessarily leaving until later the working out of details in the better knowledge we will then have of specific conditions. Public opinion has not yet crystallized in regard to some aspects of the extent and nature of our cooperation with other like-minded nations with a view to making the world, after this war, both fruitful and secure. But it has, I feel confident, overwhelmingly reached the conclusion that the minimum indication of our willingness to cooperate with others in the economic field to the mutual benefit of all would lie in the clean-cut extension of the trade-agreements program.

That program has served us well in the past 9 years. There has been an ample demonstration of its usefulness as an effective instrument for the promotion of mutually beneficial trade on a basis of fair dealing and nondiscrimination—the only possible basis of fruitful international cooperation in the economic field. It is thus a practical and tested method which the Congress has already endorsed twice since its original adoption, each time after an exhaustive appraisal of its results. The Congress is being asked, therefore, in making this first decision on post-war policies, not to commit the country to some new and untried experiment, but to reaffirm a proven program, sound in principle and in operation, and essential for a stable economic, political, and peace structure in the post-war years.

We know from bitter experience that trade between countries is the main foundation for any and all economic dealings between peoples. It provides the goods they need, and furnishes employment for industries suited to each country. If it is discouraged by cloudy political skies and mistrust, or made impossible by national shortsightedness, there is no possible sound basis for any of the other economic or financial dealings between the countries.

Without substantial trade, our shipping industry is certain to decline to small dimensions. Without substantial trade, any capital investment that we may undertake abroad would sooner or later end in disappointment and reproach. Without substantial trade, there cannot be certainty or stability in the monetary relationships between countries. These will always be subject to disturbances and disputes. The prospects for maintaining a coordinated international monetary system would be dimmed. Without substantial international trade, the future value of gold is certain to be in doubt, for countries will not indefinitely accumulate gold supplies unless they can freely obtain goods therefor. International trade is thus the key to all our international economic relations—and a powerful factor in our domestic prosperity as well.

The trade-agreements program is the sole practicable method by which we can hope to restore our post-war foreign trade to a healthy basis. It is a method of trade regulation through which obstacles to commerce can be removed with fullest regard for the position and interest of every branch of our production and the general interest of the Nation as a whole. Administered as it has been by experienced and disinterested officials, with infinite care and caution, it is the one method so far devised for constructive action in this vitally important field.

There is no possible effective alternative for it. Our history has shown how strong would be the tendency were the Trade Agreements Act discarded or crippled, to resort to the position of extreme and ruinous trade barriers. Any such course by this country at this time would spur on all countries in the world, many in greater difficulties than we ourselves, to place high barriers and restrictions about their own countries, provoke them into special arrangements from which we would be excluded—and as a consequence of these measures, destroy the interchange of needed goods by which all countries of the world can gradually repair the damage of the war and improve their economic condition.

In the conduct of our trade with the rest of the world and in the administration of the Trade Agreements Act, we, of course, take full and detailed account of our domestic situation, our domestic measures, and the forms of trading abroad. The act is flexible enough to permit all measure of wise adjustment. In fact, without the act we could not meet satisfactorily the changing conditions which will confront us.

Without the Trade Agreements Act we would be thrown back on the kind of extreme policy that culminated in the Tariff Act of 1930.

It has been suggested that the trade-agreements program be retained, but the agreements negotiated under it be made subject to approval by the Congress. Let me recall briefly some pertinent history.

During the entire history of this country, only three reciprocity tariff treaties have been ratified and made effective. All of these were of a special character and were with countries with which the United States had particularly close political or geographic ties: Canada (1854), Hawaii (1875), and Cuba (1902).

Twenty-two other reciprocity tariff treaties have been negotiated by the Executive, 10 under the general treaty-making powers and 12 pursuant to the express statutory provision in section 4 of the Tariff Act of 1897, but not a single one of these became effective. Seventeen of these were either rejected by or failed to come to a vote in the Senate, 1 was rejected by the foreign government because of amendments by the Senate, 1 failed to receive congressional legislation necessary to place it in effect, and 3 were withdrawn.

In contrast to the record of reciprocity treaties requiring Senate, or Senate and congressional approval, is the record of executive agreements negotiated under authority delegated by the Congress and not subject to subsequent approval by the Senate or Congress. Under the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890, 12 reciprocity agreements were made effective, and under section 3 of the Dingley Tariff Act of 1897, 15 such agreements were brought into force.

In 1933 the United States Tariff Commission, after summarizing the reciprocity experiences of this country up to that time, concluded:

"The past experiences of the United States with respect to the difficulty of obtaining reciprocal tariff concessions by means of treaties and the greater success in negotiating executive agreements under previous authorization by the Congress may be significant as a guide to future policy regarding methods of tariff bargaining" (U. S. Tariff Commission, Tariff Bargaining Under Most-Favored-Nation Treaties, p. 13).

Since the Trade Agreements Act has been in operation, 30 agreements have been negotiated and made effective. One agreement, that with Iran, signed on April 8, 1943, has not as yet become effective.

No one in his right senses would dream of asking the Congress for an unlimited grant of authority to adjust our tariff rates. No Congress would ever dream of making such a grant of power—and no Congress ever has. The Trade Agreements Act involves a strictly and specifically limited delegation of power, with the terms of which you are all familiar. Its periodic review by the Congress is a fully effective safeguard against the abuse even of these limited powers. In the light of the record of disastrous experience which I have just recited, a demand for congressional action on trade agreements is a demand for the abandonment of the whole program without which our country's hands will be tied in a field in which it must either act or accept overwhelmingly disastrous consequences.

I shall not dwell on other equally important reasons why it is imperative that the program be continued in its present form, without weakening change. Many of us, both within and outside the Government, including the almost unanimous voice of the public press, have strongly urged such action as an early indication to other nations of our post-war intentions. We have all referred to the interest and anxiety with which other nations would follow the debates in Congress on this question. Developments since the introduction of the legislation in the House have confirmed this. Reports received from country after country, particularly in the neighboring American republics, reveal the marked attention by government officials, the press, and the public to this legislation. The universally expressed hope—except in the Axis countries—is for the trade-agreements program to be extended, both for its practical significance and for the reaffirmation of the principles of cooperation and fair dealing which it embodies.

When post-war economic readjustments are sought we shall need to be in a position, in our own national self-interest, to play our part in establishing conditions favorable to mutually beneficial trade, full employment, and generally to fruitful and friendly relations between the peoples of the world. Only through enlarged market opportunity abroad and at home shall we be able to establish and maintain our peacetime economic activity and the employment and living standards of our people on anything like a satisfactorily high level.

The experience of the two decades which elapsed between the end of the World War and the outbreak of a new war in Europe has brought out in sharp relief the validity of two basic propositions. The first of these is that our Nation, and every nation, can enjoy sustained prosperity only in a world which is at peace. The second is that a peaceful world is possible only when there exists for it a solid economic foundation, an indispensable part of which is active and mutually beneficial trade among the nations. The creation of such a foundation is a primary objective of the trade-agreements program, which seeks the advancement of our domestic prosperity and the promotion of world peace.

These great objectives cannot, of course, be accomplished by trade agreements alone. But they cannot be accomplished without them.

RELIEF OF OWNERS OF RESORT AND OTHER PROPERTIES

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on the 11th of January, last, I introduced a bill—S. 276—for the relief of owners of certain properties rendered inoperative by reason of restrictions arising from the war effort. The bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and by that committee referred to Hon. Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce. I have had several conferences with the chairman of the committee and Mr. Jones. I think they have reached really a solution of the problem whereby it can be handled under existing law.

Mr. Jones wrote me a letter on May 12 which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, as well as a statement by him, which indicated that the owners of so-called vacation and resort properties who are now having financial difficulties may be carried over during the period of the war. In order that the matter may be known generally, I am asking that the letter and statement may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

I may add that I received fine support from the chairman of the committee, the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and from the ranking Republican member of the committee, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. To them I want to pay this brief tribute for their great assistance covering a subject matter which has brought distress to hundreds of owners of so-called resort properties.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, May 12, 1943.

Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCNARY: I enclose copy of a release with respect to loans on improved properties that have lost their earning power by reason of wartime restrictions and regulations.

As I understand it, this should meet the situations intended to be covered by S. 276, which you introduced.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE H. JONES,
Secretary of Commerce.

Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce, today announced that the RFC Mortgage Company will consider applications for loans against improved real estate with an established net earning capacity including stores, privately owned gasoline and service stations, resort hotels, and business properties generally that have lost their earning power by reason of wartime restrictions and regulations.

The conditions under which such applications will be considered follow:

"A. Participation loans: To the extent the available net income of the owner is insufficient for the purpose, the Mortgage Company will make advances for interest, taxes, special assessments, insurance, and necessary maintenance in instances in which (a) the property is encumbered by a mortgage or mortgages, (b) the total lien indebtedness does not exceed 60 percent of the normal value of the property as determined by the Mortgage Company, and (c) agreements are executed with the mortgagor and all respective mortgagees providing, among other things, that—

"1. The Mortgage Company will make such advances during the period ending with the expiration of the unlimited national emergency proclaimed by the President on May 27, 1941, provided that the total lien indebtedness shall never exceed 75 percent of said normal value of the property.

"2. All advances shall be secured by the first mortgage, except interest on junior mortgages which shall be secured by the mortgages to which advances for interest are applicable.

"3. The Mortgage Company shall have a continuing option to purchase the respective mortgages at par and accrued interest.

"4. The existing notes and the mortgages securing them shall be modified as follows:

"a. During the period terminating 1 year after the expiration of said national emergency, (1) the interest rate shall be 4 percent per annum, and (2) no foreclosure will be made without the written consent of the Mortgage Company.

"b. At the end of such period, (1) the interest rate shall be that of the original notes, and (2) the total indebtedness secured by the respective mortgages shall become due in equal annual installments extending over periods equal to those remaining under the respective notes at the time of their modification but in no event less than 5 years; provided, however, that all of such indebtedness shall immediately become due and payable when the total amount thereof equals 75 percent of said normal value of the property.

"B. Refunding loans: The Mortgage Company will make a loan to refund all or any portion of existing lien indebtedness in instances in which (a) a loan cannot be obtained from private sources; (b) the total lien indebtedness does not exceed 60 percent of said normal value of the property; (c) lienholders decline to cooperate by carrying preferred participations in the loan, or otherwise; (d) the Mortgage Company determines that the property will be capable of producing a post-war income sufficient to amortize the existing lien indebtedness; and (e) all junior lienholders consent to the loan and agree to forbear as required by the Mortgage Company. Thereafter, the Mortgage Company will make advances when necessary for taxes, special assessments, insurance, and necessary maintenance during said national emergency: Provided, That such advances, when added to the total lien indebtedness, will not exceed 75 percent of said normal value of the property. Interest shall be at the rate of 4 percent per annum and the principal shall be payable in installments approved by the Mortgage Company commencing 1 year after the expiration of said national emergency.

"C. Care and preservation loans: Where the property is unencumbered, the Mortgage Company will make a loan sufficient to cover taxes, special assessments, insurance, and necessary maintenance during said national emergency to the extent the available net income of the owner is insufficient for such purposes. The proceeds of the loan will be advanced as needed to preserve the property. Interest shall be at the rate of 4 percent per annum and the principal shall be payable in installments approved by the Mortgage Company commencing 1 year after the expiration of said national emergency."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Capt. Charles E. Rosendahl to be a rear admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from July 9, 1942.

By Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

CHARLES H. CARR

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary this morning unanimously endorsed and approved the nomination of Charles H. Carr, of California, to be United States attorney for the southern district of California, vice William Fleet Palmer, deceased. My information is that, owing to the death of the former occupant, it is very important that this nomination be acted upon at the earliest possible time. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be now considered and disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

The Chair hears none, and the nomination will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles H. Carr, of California, to be United States attorney for the southern district of California vice William Fleet Palmer, deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I move that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

BEN LEAR—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maj. Gen. Ben Lear to be lieutenant general, which had been previously passed over.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination of Ben Lear to be lieutenant general in the Army be passed over until Wednesday. We hope to secure action at that time. I am taking this action at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not know whether a date should be fixed for the consideration of the nomination. I have not conferred with the distinguished acting majority leader. I thought that if Mr. Churchill occupied a considerable time on Wednesday, we would probably have time on Thursday to take up the calendar and other matters such as the nomination referred to.

Mr. HILL. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Kentucky, I suggest that he ask merely that the nomination be passed over, which will mean that it will come up the next time the Executive Calendar is called.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should not like to ask that it be taken up at any time sooner than Wednesday.

Mr. HILL. The Senate will adjourn today until Wednesday, so the nomination could not be taken up before that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the nomination be passed over? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the other nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John F. Leonard to be postmaster at Marmarth, N. D.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for appointments in the War Manpower Commission.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of John D. Talbott, of Kentucky, and the other nominations under the War Manpower Commission be confirmed. I wish to say that John D. Talbott is one of my closest friends, and he is one of the best officials we have ever had in the Commonwealth of Kentucky. I rejoice in his appointment, and predict that he will do a fine job for the people of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations under the War Manpower Commission are confirmed en bloc.

The nominations confirmed en bloc are as follows:

Floyd W. Sharp, of Arkansas, to be area director, at $5,600 per annum, Little Rock area office.

John Francis Daly, Jr., of Connecticut, to be senior training supervisor, at $4,600 per annum, Hartford area office.

John D. Talbott, of Kentucky, to be senior manpower field representative, at $4,600 per annum, Cleveland regional office.

Milton G. Young, of Oklahoma, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, Oklahoma City area office.

Nathan H. Gowing, of Virginia, to be area director, at $6,500 per annum, Hampton Roads area office.

Russell A. Rasco, of Florida, to be area director, at $5,600 per annum, Miami area office.

Joseph T. Flakne, of Alaska, to be senior placement specialist, at $4,600 per annum, Seattle area office.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified forthwith of all confirmations made today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVITATION TO VISIT CAMP LEE, VA., AND OTHER MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS

As in legislative session,

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the War Department trip over the past week end to Fort Monmouth, N. J., to Edgewood Arsenal, Md., and to Fort Belvoir, Va., proved most informative and interesting for those who were able to make the tour.

This trip was arranged for the Senate Military Affairs Committee, the Appropriations Committee, the Truman committee, the Murray committee, and several other committees.

Invitations have been sent to the same committees for a second trip to be made on Tuesday, May 25, and Wednesday, May 26, to visit Camp Lee, Va., the Richmond Quartermaster Depot, and the New York Port of Embarkation. As I am told that this trip will be even more interesting than the first, I am planning to take it myself, and I urge all other members of the committees invited, especially the Military Affairs Committee, to take advantage of the opportunity.

Since I feel that this trip will be exceedingly valuable to all Senators, I have arranged with the War Department to take any Senator who would like to make the trip.

As to those who are not members of one of the invited committees, as heretofore mentioned, who are desirous of going along, all that will be necessary is for them to contact Colonel Watt, General Staff Representative with the Military Affairs Committee, and the War Department will reach their respective offices and provide full details in regard to this matter. In other words, Mr. President, the War Department has extended a very generous and kindly invitation; and if any Member of the Senate who is desirous of participating in these interesting trips, and particularly that of May 25 and 26, will let us know, we will see that proper provision is made for their transportation and maintenance while on the tour.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. HILL. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, May 19, 1943, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 17, 1943:

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

APPOINTMENTS IN THE WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

Floyd W. Sharp to be area director, at $5,600 per annum, in the Little Rock area office.

John Francis Daly, Jr., to be senior training supervisor, at $4,600 per annum, in the Hartford area office.

John D. Talbott to be senior manpower field representative, at $4,600 per annum, in the Cleveland regional office.

Milton G. Young to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Oklahoma City area office.

Nathan H. Gowing to be area director, at $6,500 per annum, in the Hampton Roads area office.

Russell A. Rasco to be area director, at $5,600 per annum, in the Miami area office.

Joseph T. Flakne to be senior placement specialist, at $4,600 per annum, in the Seattle area office.

Joseph G. Dellert to be principal manpower utilization analyst at $5,600 per annum, in the Philadelphia regional office.

Clarence A. McGowan to be housing and transportation specialist, at $4,600 per annum, in the Philadelphia regional office.

Eugene J. Ronan to be senior manpower utilization consultant, at $4,600 per annum, in the Philadelphia regional office.

TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

Robert Wood Johnson to be a brigadier general.

POSTMASTER

NORTH DAKOTA

John F. Leonard, Marmath.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 17, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Ellis A. Fuller, D. D., LL. D., president, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., offered the following prayer:

Our gracious and holy Father, we acknowledge Thee as the giver of every good and perfect gift. Let Thy favors be upon this great Nation and upon those who direct its affairs. Let Thy protecting care be about our men in arms. We acknowledge Thee as the giver of every good gift. Forgive us of our sins and give us liberally of Thy wisdom. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 14, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 2570. An act to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. DANAHER to be conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 151):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT, late a Representative from the State of California.

Resolved, That a committee of four Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that pursuant to the provisions of the above resolution the Presiding Officer had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of California, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. MURDOCK, and Mr. SCRUGHAM members on the part of the Senate to the above committee.

GASOLINE RATIONING

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BROWN of Georgia addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—JOHN B. SULLIVAN AGAINST LOUIS E. MILLER

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 3, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read (H. Res. 240) as follows:

Resolved, That the time allowed for taking testimony in the election contest, John B. Sullivan, contestant, against Louis E. Miller, contestee, Eleventh Congressional District of Missouri, shall be extended for a period of 65 days, beginning May 18, 1943, and the testimony shall be taken in the following order:

The contestant shall take testimony during the first 30 days, the contestee shall take testimony during the succeeding 30 days, and the contestant shall take testimony in rebuttal only during the remaining 5 days of said period.

The resolution was agreed to.

TREASURY-POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 1648) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, and move to agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. LUDLOW, O'NEAL, MAHON, CURLEY, TABER, KEEFE, and DWORSHAK.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KIRWAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from yesterday's Post by Carl Sandburg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

THE LATE JOHN B. TOWNLEY

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein two short editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. EBERHARTER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE COAL SITUATION

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, I stated on this floor on the 7th day of May that it was my firm conviction agreements could be reached between Harold Ickes and John L. Lewis, and further said I was just as sure that the powers behind the War Labor Board do not want them to agree.

To substantiate those opinions I called to your attention the division of authority within the War Labor Board, and the added authority of other committees and men to deal with this coal situation, a most serious national predicament, none of whom seem to have the power to settle the difficulty between the United Mine Workers of America and the operators.

I challenge the War Labor Board and Judge Byrnes to place the power to settle this matter in the hands of Harold Ickes for 48 hours. If this is done, the operators and the coal miners will settle their grievances and proceed to do the job the Nation expects of them. If this is not done and authority remains divided, no one can be blamed except the power back of all these different committees and individuals. If Harold Ickes was sent in to handle the coal situation, just why was he restricted and his power curtailed in handling the dispute and settling it?

The next few days will definitely disclose whether the administration wants this matter cleaned up, or if the fight between John L. Lewis and the fourth termers is the real issue.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein two letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CONTRIBUTION OF FRED M. HOUGHTON AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, one of the pleasant experiences in a Congressman's public career is the fine letters he receives from his constituents back home.

I recently received a letter from a friend of mine in my home village of Clio, Mich. This friend, Fred M. Houghton, has been operating the Houghton Elevator in the city of Clio for many years.

He has always been a thoroughly patriotic American citizen, generous and philanthropic, with a broad view of the responsibilities and duties of citizenship.

In the letter which Mr. Houghton sent me was a certified check for $900, payable to the War Department. This gift came from Fred M. Houghton and his employees, Richard L. Houghton, Verna E. Lembach, Lawrence Pace, Floyd Pace, Eugene Miller, Leonard Verus, and August Yaester, as their contribution to the boys in service. The letter was thoroughly patriotic. The check which was enclosed put that expressed patriotism in action.

It is the voluntary actions of men and women like Fred M. Houghton and employees that renew our faith in the patriotism and soundness of our citizenry.

The American people have one abiding thought, and that is to win the present war. Right at this moment we have approximately 6,000,000 boys in uniform in the Army, more than 1,300,000 in the Navy, and more than 500,000 in the Coast Guard and marines.

These nearly 8,000,000 men in service today have dedicated their lives to the perpetuity of American institutions and to the establishment of freedom throughout the world.

All honor due to our citizens back home who not only pay taxes freely and gladly, but, in addition to that, make substantial contributions for the continuance of our constitutional form of government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, one on the question of insurance in wartime, and in the other to include an address delivered by Col. Oveta Culp Hobby on yesterday before a breakfast given by the Texas State Society.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a tribute paid to the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps by the President of the United States, and one paid by its director, Col. Oveta Culp Hobby.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, on two subjects, and to include in one of them an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[Mr. POULSON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein two newspaper articles from the Boston Herald on the milk situation in Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a speech by W. S. Hallanan, at an estimated cost of $105.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

NUTS

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GAVIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include a statement contained in a radio broadcast made by myself, outlining the contribution of Hawaii to the war effort.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE COAL STRIKE

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, when the Government took over the coal mines in face of the tragedy that confronted us, the President appointed the ablest available man, in my judgment, to handle that dangerous and difficult situation, Mr. Ickes. Now the War Labor Board, true to bureaucratic instinct and method, has stepped in and is seeking to "defend the sovereignty of this country," meaning, of course, its own sovereignty.

Mr. Ickes said when he got this job that it was a wildcat placed in his lap. When the Labor Board came in, the wildcat had kittens, each more troublesome than its parent. Let us hope that Mr. Ickes will be left in charge, free from bureaucratic meddling, and will succeed in solving this acute problem in honor and satisfaction to himself, the Government, and the people.

The American people are opposed to a coal strike. What they want and what they demand of the Government, since it has taken possession of the coal mines, is a reasonable settlement of this labor dispute which will insure justice to the miners and operators and an uninterrupted and abundant supply of coal for our war purposes and civilian needs at a price which the consumers can afford to pay.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from John Landenfeld, of the West Side Motor Co., Centralia, Ill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE NORWEGIAN CONSTITUTION

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BURDICK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

DIRECT OBLIGATIONS OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT AS COLLATERAL SECURITY FOR FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1041) to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and ask the gentleman to explain the matter.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Banking and Currency has reported by unanimous vote a bill identical with the bill S. 1041, which was passed by the Senate. The bill simply would extend for 2 years the time within which the Federal Reserve banks may issue Federal Reserve notes covered by the required 40 percent of gold plus the additional required percentage in direct Government obligations, instead of eligible paper, as was the case under the original provisions of the Federal Reserve Act. In 1932 the Federal Reserve banks found that commercial paper had declined in volume until there was not a sufficient amount of eligible paper to afford the required coverage for Federal Reserve notes. They were carrying at that time about 80 percent of gold as security for Federal Reserve notes, and the law was amended so as to permit the use of direct Government obligations, instead of commercial paper or other eligible paper. That act has been extended from time to time, and it will expire at the end of this fiscal year unless the authority is extended as provided in this bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the bill provide any safeguard for the American people against the Federal Reserve banks withdrawing this money from circulation, these Federal Reserve notes, and bringing on another panic as they did in 1921 and 1929?

Mr. STEAGALL. The bill now before us makes no change whatever in the Federal Reserve law, except as I have indicated, but in response to the gentleman's suggestion I call attention to the fact that the very purpose of this legislation is to provide expansion of the currency that is indispensable to the financing of the war program.

Mr. RANKIN. So far as I am individually concerned, I would rather see the Government expand its own currency and hold control of it than to see it expanded through private banks, without Government control. I am not so much worried about the Government controlling its own finances as I am disturbed for fear that we will run into the same trouble we did in 1920, when the head of the Federal Reserve Board and its directors raised the discount rate and called loans all over the country and brought about a depression that almost wrecked business, and did wreck the farmers, in practically every State in the Union, and I should like to have some safeguards thrown around a measure of this kind to protect the American people against repetition of that catastrophe.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman that the passage of the original act, in 1932, was designed to remedy the condition to which he has referred. Undoubtedly there were mistakes of policy made by those in control of the Federal Reserve System, and we found it necessary to liberalize that act in many particulars, which was done. This particular act was, of course, a liberalization measure as it is today. We are increasing Federal Reserve notes now in the amount of $100,000,000 a week, with something like $20,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes that will be issued by the end of this year. We will soon run out of necessary gold to cover them unless some measure is adopted which will permit further issuance of notes to meet the requirements confronting us in connection with the war program.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I appreciate the force of what the gentleman from Alabama has said. In 1919 and 1920 at the close of the last war, currency was circulating at $53.21 per capita. On the 28th of February this year it had reached $118.92 per capita, largely Federal Reserve notes. If this war should close this year, which we hope it will, these Federal Reserve banks could do just exactly what they did in 1920, and if they were to begin to recall those loans, or raise the rediscount rate, they might bring on a panic the like of which this Nation has never seen. For that reason I would much prefer to see my Government issue its own currency against its own securities instead of permitting private banks to put up those same securities of the Government and issue currency against them and have the right to recall that currency and bring about a depression at any time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, the Government is in full and complete control of the issuance of its currency through our control of the Federal Reserve System. I do not think anybody anticipates that we will ever be foolish enough to make the mistakes that were made back during the years of the depression, to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I understand it, this Senate bill is an exact copy of H. R. 2634, which was unanimously reported by the House Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It simply extends the provisions of section 6 of the Federal Reserve Act for an additional 2 years.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is all.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Without any change at all in the law?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right. There never could have been any logical objection to the use of Government obligations as cover for Federal Reserve notes upon the same basis as commercial paper, which was simply the obligation of some mercantile establishment somewhere on other private obligations.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman said a moment ago he did not think the Government—I suppose he meant the Congress—would ever be foolish enough to permit a repetition of what happened in 1920. It was not brought on by the administration. It was not brought on by Congress. It was brought on by the Federal Reserve System. I go back to my original proposition. I would much prefer to see my Government issue its own currency against its own securities than to see it sell those securities to private banks and permit them to issue currency against it, to loan us at interest, with the right and power to withdraw that currency, depreciate it, and bring on a panic at any time. I am not going to interfere with the gentleman's program, but I am afraid we are making a terrible mistake in not throwing around the issuance of these Federal Reserve notes ample protection for the American people against bringing on another depression such as we had in 1920 or 1929 as soon as this war is over.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Unless the Congress takes some action for removing the present limitation in respect to rediscount rates and reserve requirements, he should have no fear that the Federal Reserve banks will be able to withdraw this currency by raising the reserve requirements and the rediscount rates, because, as I understand it, they have almost completed their authority in that respect, and we have not seen fit to give them additional authority. So if we do not give them additional authority to further increase their legal reserve requirements and rediscount rates, it will be impossible for the Federal Reserve to take the course which the gentleman cites.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. That is exactly the same thing they told us in 1918 and 1919, and it is the same thing they told us in 1926 and 1928, up to the time of the crash in 1929. But there is absolutely nothing to prevent those men who get this currency issued to them from taking those Federal Reserve notes back and turning them in and having them canceled, and take up their Government securities against which they are issued. There is absolutely nothing, unless you change the law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might say that that is not the danger of this program, because that is regulated at the present time by the Open Market Committee, which can compel the banks to keep those bonds and not put them on the market for sale. The danger of this program was when we originally launched it, and the House was warned at that time——

Mr. RANKIN. When was that?

Mr. WOLCOTT. In 1934. The House was warned at that time that if the Federal Reserve used all of the authority which was given to it to create the money with which to buy Federal obligations and then put those Federal obligations up as security for new issues of money, that was the most inflationary practice which we could indulge in, to increase prices. We have been doing that, and do not fool yourself, we have been financing this war through this act, and we are going to continue to finance this war through this act. If you cut off this power today, as I would insist upon doing if the situation were otherwise, you would stop just as precipitously as you can imagine the financing of your war.

That is the only reason I am going along with this program.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will consent to go along with the program following this war to isolate that part of Government obligations which is not essential, isolate the gold and isolate the silver as a base for our currency, Congress will get back the power to coin and issue money and regulate the value thereof and we shall divorce our national debt from our currency; but during this emergency, during this war, because of the financing program of the Treasury you have a lion by the tail and you cannot let go.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman that the original act was passed with the approval of President Hoover on the 27th day of February 1932.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might add it was for the purpose of inflating, to increase the cost of commodities; we wanted to bring the price of commodities up.

Mr. STEAGALL. No. It was to relieve our gold position.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course, the gentleman knows that to be the case; that was the justification for it, to increase the price of commodities; and if it was the right thing to do at that time, then when we are entering an inflationary period the process should be reversed.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that I appreciate his invitation for me to wait until after the next panic to try to cure the monetary situation. As I said to the gentleman from Alabama a moment ago I am not going to interrupt this program, but I think the Congress is making a terrible mistake and probably leading to the disasters we had before by not providing safeguards to prevent these private banks from depressing the currency and bringing on another panic.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the benefit of the House and to be very reassuring to your people I want to read this short statement:

> Dollars are not a problem. Cash for bonds turned in can come from other bonds sold to other investors or to banks. After the war all the holders will not sell their War bonds at once. Furthermore, the Government can create more deposits as fast as bonds are offered for sale, and, if buyers for new bonds can't be found, the Federal Reserve System can step in and buy. The Government has guaranteed to supply dollars in exchange for its bonds, and there is nothing that can interfere with that guaranty.

Take that report and message home, there will always be plenty of dollars. You will not perhaps have dollars that will buy as much, but you will have the dollars.

In closing I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the trouble that you had in 1922 was with the type of loans made. We have not made that sort of loan lately, but you need not worry, even that kind may return again.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; they have made exactly the same kind of loans many times.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking therefrom the words "until June 30, 1943" and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "until June 30, 1945".

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 2634) was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in three particulars: In the first extension to include an article from the Catholic weekly Commonweal; in the second to include an article from a labor leader in my district; and third that I may include an article from the National Geographic magazine by the Governor of Alaska. This latter article exceeds the limit. I have a statement from the Government Printing Office that it will cost $135. Notwithstanding this I ask unanimous consent to place it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman's requests are granted.

There was no objection.

REASONS FOR HAVING PACIFIC NORTHWEST REGIONAL OFFICES OF THE WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION AND THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, from June of 1940 through February of 1943, war contracts awarded to the area now covered by the San Francisco regional offices of the War Manpower Commission and War Production Board amounted to approximately $18,300,000,000. Only three other regional offices in the Nation; namely, Detroit, Philadelphia, and New York have jurisdiction over that much war business. Of the total war business governed by the San Francisco offices, contracts amounting to approximately $6,500,000,000 have been awarded to the Pacific Northwest and Alaska. This amount of war business in the Pacific Northwest and Alaska is too great and too important to be administered at long range from San Francisco.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL—1944

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 2719) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 455), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MICHENER reserved all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a recent address I made over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor on the Ruml plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

AMENDMENT TO NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar (H. R. 1291) to amend the Nationality Act of 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the first of four bills on the Consent Calendar reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I understand that some of these bills are to be called up under suspension of the rules or that they have a rule.

Mr. MASON. They have a special rule on three of the four bills and this is one of them.

Mr. COLE of New York. What bills have a special rule?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We would like to dispose of these. They are on 22, 25, and 27. We have no rule on 26.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN PERSONS NOT CITIZENS WHOSE SONS OR DAUGHTERS HAVE SERVED WITH THE LAND OR NAVAL FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1941, permitting the naturalization of certain persons not citizens whose sons or daughters have served with the land or naval forces of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Messrs. STARNES of Alabama, RANKIN, and CLEVENGER objected.

REPATRIATING NATIVE-BORN WOMEN RESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1289, to repatriate native-born women residents of the United States who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

PRESERVING THE RESIDENCE FOR NATURALIZATION PURPOSES OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1295, to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 to preserve the residence for naturalization purposes of certain aliens who serve in the military or naval forces of one of the allied countries during the Second World War, or otherwise assist in the allied war effort, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Messrs. RANKIN, STARNES of Alabama, VINCENT of Kentucky, and ELLIS objected.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A WOMEN'S ARMY CORPS FOR SERVICE IN THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 495, to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, in view of the agreement to consider this bill after consideration of a bill from the Naval Affairs Committee dealing with the Women's Auxiliary of the Navy, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST]?

There was no objection.

SECOND-CLASS APPLICATION FEES OF NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICAL PUBLICATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1004, to relieve newspapers and periodical publications which have voluntarily suspended publication for the duration of the war from payment of second-class mailing fees upon resumption of publication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no newspaper or other periodical publication which has been accorded second-class mail privileges, and which has voluntarily suspended publication, or shall hereafter voluntarily suspend publication, for the duration of the war because of economic conditions directly or indirectly attributable to the war effort, shall be required upon resumption of regular publication to pay any of the fees provided for by the act entitled "An act to provide for fees for entry of a publication as second-class matter, and for other purposes," approved July 7, 1932, as amended, if such newspaper or periodical publication resumes regular publication prior to the end of the sixth month following the expiration of the unlimited national emergency proclaimed by the President on May 27, 1941.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "of", strike out "economic conditions directly or indirectly attributable to the war effort" and insert in lieu thereof "conditions attributable to the war effort."

Page 2, at the end of the bill, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That before any such newspaper or periodical shall be entitled to reentry as second-class matter without payment of any application fee the publisher shall furnish to the Postmaster General satisfactory evidence that the suspension of his publication was because of conditions attributable to the war effort."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to relieve newspapers and periodical publications which have voluntarily suspended publication for the duration of the war from payment of second-class application fees upon resumption of publication."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMISSION TO WOMEN IN COAST GUARD RESERVES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1616, to amend the Coast Guard Auxiliary and Reserve Act of 1941, as amended.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

GEN. DOUGLAS MacARTHUR LOCK

The Clerk read the next bill, H. R. 1258, instructing the Secretary of War to henceforth designate the new lock in the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., as the "Gen. Douglas MacArthur lock," and designating the lock at that point now known as the fourth lock as the "Col. L. C. Sabin lock."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, irrespective of any previously enacted legislation and irrespective of any previous regulations or customs, the Secretary of War shall be, and is hereby, instructed to immediately and henceforth designate the new lock in the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., as the "Gen. Douglas MacArthur lock" and designating the lock at that point now known as the fourth lock as "Col. L. C. Sabin lock."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the new lock now in the course of construction by the War Department in the Saint Marys River at the falls, Michigan, shall be designated 'MacArthur lock,' and the lock at that point now known as the fourth lock shall be hereafter designated 'Sabin lock.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

NATIVES OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 329, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to incur obligations for the benefit of natives of Alaska in advance of the enactment of legislation making appropriations therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Alaska if there is any limitation as to the amount of such purchases?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, there is a limitation of 75 percent of the existing appropriation. The cost of materials, supplies, and equipment for any year will not amount to more than one-third of the total appropriations for the services.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may authorize such officer or officers as may be designated by him to incur obligations in excess of appropriations currently available for the benefit of natives of Alaska, whenever said Secretary may determine such action to be necessary in order to insure the proper functioning of activities of the Office of Indian Affairs and of the Fish and Wildlife Service in Alaska during any ensuing fiscal year, payments of such obligations to be made from the respective appropriations for the new fiscal year when they become available: Provided, That such authority shall not be exercised earlier than the 1st day of January in any one fiscal year: Provided further, That excess obligations may be incurred only for the purchase of supplies, materials, and equipment; the amount of advance obligations so authorized shall not exceed 75 percent of the total available in the current appropriations for such purposes: And provided further, That such obligations incurred in connection with the activities of the Office of Indian Affairs may be liquidated from the Indian Service supply fund, which fund shall be reimbursed from applicable appropriations, when made, for the ensuing fiscal year.

SEC. 2. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TITLE TO SALINE LANDS IN JACKSON COUNTY, ILL., CORRECTED

The Clerk read the next bill, H. R. 2047, to correct an error and to confirm, as of March 2, 1861, the title to certain saline lands in Jackson County, State of Illinois, to Edward Holden.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to correct an error and to confirm, as of March 2, 1861, the title of Edward Holden to certain saline lands in Jackson County, State of Illinois, so much of the act entitled "An act for the confirmation of the title to the saline lands in Jackson County, State of Illinois, to D. H. Brush, and others," approved March 2, 1861, as reads "To Edward Holden, the northeast, southeast, northwest, and southwest quarters of the southeast quarter of section 7, township 9, of range 2; northwest, southwest, and northeast quarters of the northwest quarter of section 1, township 9, of range 3" is amended by striking out the word "northeast" where it appears the second time and by inserting in lieu thereof the word "southeast."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND FOR PARK, RECREATIONAL, OR WILDLIFE-REFUGE PURPOSES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 629, to authorize the conveyance of certain public lands in the State of Minnesota to such State for use for park, recreational, or wildlife-refuge purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, upon payment of a reasonable price set by him, through appraisal or otherwise, to convey to the State of Minnesota the following-described lands located in Morrison County, Minn.: Lot 6, section 10; lots 1, 14, 15, and 16, section 14; lots 9, 10, 11, and 12, section 15; lot 1, section 22; lot 9, section 23; and lots 1 and 5, section 25, township 42 north, range 32 west, fourth principal meridian; lot 4, section 4; and lot 3, section 9, township 130 north, range 29 west, fifth principal meridian; lot 5, section 18, and lots 4, 5, 6, and 7, section 32, township 131 north, range 29 west, fifth principal meridian.

SEC. 2. The lands authorized to be conveyed by the first section of this act shall be conveyed to the grantee for use for park, recreational, or wildlife-refuge purposes. The patent conveying such lands shall provide (1) that such lands or any part thereof may, with the approval of the Commissioner of Conservation of the State of Minnesota, be used by the United States for such military purposes as do not conflict with or are not incompatible with the use thereof for park, recreational, or wildlife-refuge purposes; (2) that the United States and its permittees or licensees shall have the right to occupy, use, or flood any or all of the lands for power development, transmission-line purposes, navigation, flood control, or other allied purposes under any law applicable to the use of the public lands for such purposes and that no claim or right to compensation shall accrue from such occupation or use; (3) that all minerals, including oil and gas, shall be reserved to the United States, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; (4) that the title to the lands shall revert to the United States if the State shall cease to use the lands for park, recreational, or wildlife-refuge purposes, or if the State shall alienate or attempt to alienate the lands.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Page 3, line 2, after the word "lands", strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "(5). Provided further, That the grazing privileges heretofore enjoyed by adjacent or neighboring landowners shall not be abridged or interfered with."

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am chairman. Several communications have come to us with reference to grazing rights, and it was the feeling of the committee that those rights should not be disturbed at the present time. I think there is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Florida has stated the situation correctly. At least, that is the way I understand it. I am glad he is offering the amendment that will safeguard the rights of the neighboring landowners.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I think it is the fair thing to do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table

ASSIGNMENT OF DEPARTMENTAL PERSONNEL TO INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2468, authorizing the assignment of personnel from departments or agencies in the executive branch of the Government to certain investigating committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BENDER, Mr. FURLONG, Mr. RAMEY, and Mr. COFFEE objected.

WATERS OF THE REPUBLICAN RIVER BASIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2482, to grant the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska, relating to the waters of the Republican River Basin, to make provisions concerning the exercise of Federal jurisdiction as to those waters, to promote flood control in the basin, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] if he will explain briefly the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported out unanimously by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. The bill has already passed the Senate in identical form.

The bill gives the consent of the Congress to the three States mentioned to make agreements with regard to the distribution of water in an interstate stream. That is very highly desirable in the West, where irrigation is dependent upon the water of streams that cross State boundary lines.

This is unanimously reported favorably from the departments concerned. It is a matter that requires the joint action of the three States, and the program is favored by the legislatures of the three States concerned.

Mr. PRIEST. There is nothing in the bill that would in any way waive jurisdiction of the Federal Government over navigable streams, is there?

Mr. MURDOCK. I think there is not. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] can possibly explain that a little better than I.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. The answer to the gentleman's question, I think, is "No."

The bill has met with the approval of the Department of the Interior, the War Department, the Department of Agriculture, and the divisions concerned. I do not believe that by compact you could take jurisdiction away from the Federal Government if they thought they had jurisdiction.

Mr. PRIEST. In reading that report I came to that conclusion, but I was not quite certain on that particular point. Otherwise I think the bill is certainly in order and should be passed.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that an identical Senate bill, S. 649, be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the compact authorized by the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska to negotiate and enter into a compact for the division of the waters of the Republican River," approved August 4, 1942 (Public Law 696, 77th Cong.; 56 Stat. 736), signed by the commissioners for the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska at Lincoln, Nebr., on December 31, 1942, and thereafter ratified by the Legislatures of the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska, which compact reads as follows:

"REPUBLICAN RIVER COMPACT

"The States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska, parties signatory to this compact (hereinafter referred to as Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska, respectively, or individually as a State, or collectively as the States), having resolved to conclude a compact with respect to the waters of the Republican River Basin, and being duly authorized therefor by the act of the Congress of the United States of America, approved August 4, 1942 (Public, No. 696, 77th Cong., ch. 545, 2d sess.) and pursuant to acts of their respective legislatures have, through their respective Governors, appointed as their Commissioners: M C. Hinderlider, for Colorado; George S. Knapp, for Kansas; Wardner G. Scott, for Nebraska; who, after negotiations participated in by Glenn L. Parker, appointed by the President as the Representative of the United States of America, have agreed upon the following articles:

"ARTICLE I

"The major purposes of this compact are to provide for the most efficient use of the waters of the Republican River Basin (hereinafter referred to as the 'Basin') for multiple purposes; to provide for an equitable division of such waters; to remove all causes, present and future, which might lead to controversies; to promote interstate comity; to recognize that the most efficient utilization of the waters within the Basin is for beneficial consumptive use; and to promote joint action by the States and the United States in the efficient use of water and the control of destructive floods.

"The physical and other conditions peculiar to the Basin constitute the basis for this compact, and none of the States hereby, nor the Congress of the United States by its consent, concedes that this compact establishes any general principle or precedent with respect to any other interstate stream.

"ARTICLE II

"The Basin is all the area in Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska, which is naturally drained by the Republican River, and its tributaries, to its junction with the Smoky Hill River in Kansas. The main stem of the Republican River extends from the junction near Haigler, Nebr., of its North Fork and the Arikaree River, to its junction with Smoky Hill River near Junction City, Kans. Frenchman Creek (river) in Nebraska is a continuation of Frenchman Creek (river) in Colorado. Red Willow Creek in Colorado is not identical with the stream having the same name in Nebraska. A map of the Basin approved by the Commissioners is attached and made a part hereof.

"The term 'acre-foot' as herein used, is the quantity of water required to cover an acre to the depth of 1 foot and is equivalent to 43,560 cubic feet.

"The term 'virgin water supply,' as herein used, is defined to be the water supply within the Basin undepleted by the activities of man.

"The term 'beneficial consumptive use' is herein defined to be that use by which the water supply of the Basin is consumed through the activities of man, and shall include water consumed by evaporation from any reservoir, canal, ditch, or irrigated area.

"Beneficial consumptive use is the basis and principle upon which the allocations of water hereinafter made are predicated.

"ARTICLE III

"The specific allocations in acre-feet hereinafter made to each State are derived from the computed average annual virgin water supply originating in the following designated drainage basins, or parts thereof, in the amounts shown:

"North Fork of the Republican River drainage basin in Colorado, 44,700 acre-feet;

"Arikaree River drainage basin, 19,610 acre-feet;

"Buffalo Creek drainage basin, 7,890 acre-feet;

"Rock Creek drainage basin, 11,000 acre-feet;

"South Fork of the Republican River drainage basin, 57,200 acre-feet;

"Frenchman Creek (River) drainage basin in Nebraska, 98,500 acre-feet;

"Blackwood Creek drainage basin, 6,800-acre-feet;

"Driftwood Creek drainage basin, 7,300 acre-feet;

"Red Willow Creek drainage basin in Nebraska, 21,900 acre-feet;

"Medicine Creek drainage basin, 50,800 acre-feet;

"Beaver Creek drainage basin, 16,500 acre-feet;

"Sappa Creek drainage basin, 21,400 acre-feet;

"Prairie Dog Creek drainage basin, 27,600 acre-feet;

"The North Fork of the Republican River in Nebraska and the main stem of the Republican River between the junction of the North Fork and the Arikaree River and the lowest crossing of the river at the Nebraska-Kansas State line and the small tributaries thereof, 87,700 acre-feet.

"Should the future computed virgin water supply of any source vary more than 10 percent from the virgin water supply as hereinabove set forth, the allocations hereinafter made from such source shall be increased or decreased in the relative proportion that the future computed virgin water supply of such source bears to the computed virgin water supply used herein.

"ARTICLE IV

"There is hereby allocated for beneficial consumptive use in Colorado, annually, a total of 54,100 acre-feet of water. This total is to be derived from the sources and in the amounts hereinafter specified and is subject to such quantities being physically available from these sources:

"North Fork of the Republican River drainage basin, 10,000 acre-feet;

"Arikaree River drainage basin, 15,400 acre-feet;

"South Fork of the Republican River drainage basin, 25,400 acre-feet;

"Beaver Creek drainage basin, 3,300 acre-feet; and

"In addition, for beneficial consumptive use in Colorado, annually, the entire water supply of the Frenchman Creek (River) drainage basin in Colorado and of the Red Willow Creek drainage basin in Colorado.

"There is hereby allocated for beneficial consumptive use in Kansas, annually, a total of 190,300 acre-feet of water. This total is to be derived from the sources and in the amounts hereinafter specified and is subject to such quantities being physically available from those sources:

"Arikaree River drainage basin, 1,000 acre-feet;

"South Fork of the Republican River drainage basin, 23,000 acre-feet;

"Driftwood Creek drainage basin, 500 acre-feet;

"Beaver Creek drainage basin, 6,400 acre-feet;

"Sappa Creek drainage basin, 8,800 acre-feet;

"Prairie Dog Creek drainage basin, 12,600 acre-feet;

"From the main stem of the Republican River upstream from the lowest crossing of the river at the Nebraska-Kansas State line and from water supplies of upstream basins otherwise unallocated herein, 138,000 acre-feet; provided, that Kansas shall have the right to divert all or any portion thereof at or near Guide Rock, Nebr.; and

"In addition there is hereby allocated for beneficial consumptive use in Kansas, annually, the entire water supply originating in the basin downstream from the lowest crossing of the river at the Nebraska-Kansas State line.

"There is hereby allocated for beneficial consumptive use in Nebraska, annually, a total of 234,500 acre-feet of water. This total is to be derived from the sources and in the amounts hereinafter specified and is subject to such quantities being physically available from those sources:

"North Fork of the Republican River drainage basin in Colorado, 11,000 acre-feet;

"Frenchman Creek (River) drainage basin in Nebraska, 52,800 acre-feet;

"Rock Creek drainage basin, 4,400 acre-feet;

"Arikaree River drainage basin, 3,300 acre-feet;

"Buffalo Creek drainage basin, 2,600 acre-feet;

"South Fork of the Republican River drainage basin, 800 acre-feet;

"Driftwood Creek drainage basin, 1,200 acre-feet;

"Red Willow Creek drainage basin in Nebraska, 4,200 acre-feet;

"Medicine Creek drainage basin, 4,600 acre-feet;

"Beaver Creek drainage basin, 6,700 acre-feet;

"Sappa Creek drainage basin, 8,800 acre-feet;

"Prairie Dog Creek drainage basin, 2,100 acre-feet;

"From the North Fork of the Republican River in Nebraska, the main stem of the Republican River between the junction of the North Fork and Arikaree River and the lowest crossing of the river at the Nebraska-Kansas State line, from the small tributaries thereof, and from water supplies of upstream basins otherwise unallocated herein, 132,000 acre-feet.

"The use of the waters hereinabove allocated shall be subject to the laws of the State, for use in which the allocations are made.

"ARTICLE V

"The judgment and all provisions thereof in the case of Adelbert A. Weiland, as State Engineer of Colorado, et al. v. The Pioneer Irrigation Company, decided June 5, 1922, and reported in 259 U. S. 498, affecting the Pioneer irrigation ditch or canal, are hereby recognized as binding upon the States; and Colorado, through its duly authorized officials, shall have the perpetual and exclusive right to control and regulate diversions of water at all times by said canal in conformity with said judgment.

"The water heretofore adjudicated to said Pioneer Canal by the District Court of Colorado, in the amount of fifty (50) cubic feet per second of time is included in and is a part of the total amounts of water hereinbefore allocated for beneficial consumptive use in Colorado and Nebraska.

"ARTICLE VI

"The right of any person, entity, or lower State to construct, or participate in the future construction and use of any storage reservoir or diversion works in an upper State for the purpose of regulating water herein allocated for beneficial consumptive use in such lower State, shall never be denied by an upper State: Provided, That such right is subject to the rights of the upper State.

"ARTICLE VII

"Any person, entity, or lower State shall have the right to acquire necessary property rights in an upper State by purchase, or through the exercise of the power of eminent domain, for the construction, operation, and maintenance of storage reservoirs, and of appurtenant works, canals, and conduits, required for the enjoyment of the privileges granted by article VI: Provided however, That the grantees of such rights shall pay to the political subdivisions of the State in which such works are located, each and every year during which such rights are enjoyed for such purposes, a sum of money equivalent to the average annual amount of taxes assessed against the lands and improvements during the 10 years preceding the use of such lands, in reimbursement for the loss of taxes to said political subdivisions of the State.

"ARTICLE VIII

"Should any facility be constructed in an upper State under the provisions of article VI, such construction and the operation of such facility shall be subject to the laws of such upper State.

"Any repairs to or replacements of such facility shall also be made in accordance with the laws of such upper State.

"ARTICLE IX

"It shall be the duty of the three States to administer this compact through the official in each State who is now or may hereafter be charged with the duty of administering the public water supplies, and to collect and correlate through such officials the data necessary for the proper administration of the provisions of this compact. Such officials may, by unanimous action, adopt rules and regulations consistent with the provisions of this compact.

"The United States Geological Survey, or whatever Federal agency may succeed to the functions and duties of that agency, insofar as this compact is concerned, shall collaborate with the officials of the States charged with the administration of this compact in the execution of the duty of such officials in the collection, correlation, and publication of water facts necessary for the proper administration of this compact.

"ARTICLE X

"Nothing in this compact shall be deemed:

"(a) To impair or affect any rights, powers, or jurisdiction of the United States, or those acting by or under its authority, in, over, and to the waters of the basin; nor to impair or affect the capacity of the United States, or those acting by or under its authority, to acquire rights in and to the use of waters of the basin;

"(b) To subject any property of the United States, its agencies, or instrumentalities, to taxation by any State, or subdivision thereof, nor to create an obligation on the part of the United States, its agencies or instrumentalities, by reason of the acquisition, construction, or operation of any property or works of whatsoever kind, to make any payments to any State or political subdivision thereof, State agency, municipality, or entity whatsoever in reimbursement for the loss of taxes;

"(c) To subject any property of the United States, its agencies or instrumentalities, to the laws of any State to any extent other than the extent these laws would apply without regard to this compact.

"ARTICLE XI

"This compact shall become operative when ratified by the legislature of each of the States, and when consented to by the Congress of the United States by legislation providing, among other things, that:

"(a) Any beneficial consumptive uses by the United States, or those acting by or under its authority, within a State, of the waters allocated by this compact, shall be made within the allocations hereinabove made for use in that State and shall be taken into account in determining the extent of use within that State.

"(b) The United States, or those acting by or under its authority, in the exercise of rights or powers arising from whatever jurisdiction the United States has in, over, and to the waters of the Basin shall recognize, to the extent consistent with the best utilization of the waters for multiple purposes, that beneficial consumptive use of the waters within the Basin is of paramount importance to the development of the Basin; and no exercise of such power or right thereby that would interfere with the full beneficial consumptive use of the waters within the Basin shall be made except upon a determination, giving due consideration to the objectives of this compact and after consultation with all interested Federal agencies and the State officials charged with the administration of this compact, that such exercise is in the interest of the best utilization of such waters for multiple purposes.

"(c) The United States, or those acting by or under its authority, will recognize any established use, for domestic and irrigation purposes, of the waters allocated by this compact which may be impaired by the exercise of Federal jurisdiction in, over, and to such waters: Provided, That such use is being exercised beneficially, is valid under the laws of the appropriate State and in conformity with this compact at the time of the impairment thereof, and was validly initiated under State law prior to the initiation or authorization of the Federal program or project which causes such impairment.

"In witness whereof the commissioners have signed this compact in quadruplicate original, one of which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States of America and shall be deemed the authoritative original, and of which a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the States.

"Done in the city of Lincoln, in the State of Nebraska, on the 31st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1942.

"M. C. HINDERLIDER,
"Commissioner for Colorado.
"GEORGE S. KNAPP,
"Commissioner for Kansas.
"WARDNER G. SCOTT,
"Commissioner for Nebraska.

"I have participated in the negotiations leading to this proposed compact and propose to report to the Congress of the United States favorably thereon

"GLENN L. PARKER,
"Representative of the United States."

SEC. 2. (a) In order that the conditions stated in article XI of the compact hereby consented to shall be met and that the compact shall be and continue to be operative, the following provisions are enacted—

(1) Any beneficial consumptive uses by the United States, or those acting by or under its authority, within a State, of the waters allocated by such compact, shall be made within the allocations made by such compact for use in that State and shall be taken into account in determining the extent of use within that State;

(2) The United States, or those acting by or under its authority, in the exercise of rights or powers arising from whatever jurisdiction the United States has in, over, and to the waters of the Basin shall recognize, to the extent consistent with the best utilization of the waters for multiple purposes, that beneficial consumptive use of the waters within the Basin is of paramount importance to the development of the Basin; and no exercise of such power or right thereby that would interfere with the full beneficial consumptive use of the waters within the Basin shall be made except upon a determination, giving due consideration to the objectives of such compact and after consultation with all interested Federal agencies and the State officials charged with the administration of such compact, that such exercise is in the interest of the best utilization of such waters for multiple purposes;

(3) The United States, or those acting by or under its authority, will recognize any established use, for domestic and irrigation purposes, of the waters allocated by such compact which may be impaired by the exercise of Federal jurisdiction in, over, and to such waters: Provided, That such use is being exercised beneficially, is valid under the laws of the appropriate State and in conformity with such compact at the time of the impairment thereof, and was validly initiated under State law prior to the initiation or authorization of the Federal program or project which causes such impairment.

(b) As used in this section—

(1) "Beneficial consumptive uses" has the same meaning as when used in the compact consented to by Congress by this act; and

(2) "Basin" refers to the Republican River Basin as shown on the map attached to and made a part of the original of such compact deposited in the archives of the Department of State.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 2482) was laid on the table.

TITLES TO LANDS ACQUIRED BY THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to adjust titles to lands acquired by the United States which are subject to his administration, custody, or control.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], the author of the bill. Does this bill apply to titles to lands acquired by the United States Government through the foreclosure of farm mortgages where there is an error in the description, either by conveyancing or in the foreclosure proceeding? Would it go that far?

Mr. FULMER. I am not sure that I could answer the gentleman to that extent.

For many years the Department of Agriculture has carried on large land-acquisition programs under the authority of various acts of Congress. In connection with these purchases, experience has shown that occasional mistakes will occur, in both direct purchase and condemnation cases.

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary to quitclaim the interest of the United States in land subject to his administration upon either of two findings:

First. Is a finding that title to the land is legally insufficient for the purposes for which it was acquired? This finding must be coupled with the fact that no consideration has been paid by the United States for the land involved.

Second. Is a finding that the title was acquired by mistake, misunderstanding, error, and so forth?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. The purpose of my question is this: I understand that in the taking of these farm mortgages in the name of the Government there have been instances where the conveyancer, in the drawing of the mortgage, for instance, would include a part of the description of a neighbor's farm. That erroneous description would carry clear through the foreclosure proceedings and not be discovered until after the issuance of the sheriff's deed under foreclosure. My question is whether or not under this bill the Secretary of Agriculture would have the power to execute a quitclaim deed to a farm owner whose property was erroneously included in the description.

Mr. FULMER. According to my understanding, it would. That is one of the real purposes of the bill.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I think it is a very excellent bill, Mr. Speaker, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall find within 10 years after the acquisition by the United States of any land or interest therein which is subject to his administration, custody, or control, other than land acquired by exchange of public domain land or resources, but the title thereto is legally insufficient for the purposes for which such land or interest was acquired and no consideration therefor has been paid by the United States, or that title or color of title to such land or interest was acquired through mistake, misunderstanding, error, or inadvertence, he is hereby authorized to execute and deliver on behalf of and in the name of the United States to the person from whom the title was acquired or to the person whom he finds entitled thereto a quitclaim deed to such land or interest: Provided, however, That if the person to whom such deed is made is the same person from whom the United States acquired title, or his successor in interest, any consideration given by the United States for such land or interest shall be restored or, in lieu thereof, the value equivalent of such consideration as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be paid to the United States; and any consideration or value equivalent so restored or paid shall, so far as is practicable, be restored to the jurisdiction, or deposited to the credit, of the department, agency, appropriation, or fund from which the consideration was transferred or paid at the time of the acquisition of title by the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF FERTILIZERS OR SEEDS BY AGENCIES OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1396, making certain regulations with reference to fertilizers or seeds that may be distributed by agencies of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the Department of Agriculture or any other agency of the United States Government shall distribute seeds or fertilizer, or soil conditioning or fertilizer material to farmers, it shall be the duty of the officers or employees or agents distributing same to comply with and be subject to the inspection laws of the State within which such seeds or fertilizer, or soil conditioning or fertilizer material is distributed with reference to any such seeds or fertilizer or soil conditioning or fertilizer material and such officers, employees, or agents are hereby authorized and directed to comply with such inspection laws.

Line 9, strike out "or" and insert "livestock and poultry feed, nursery stock."

Page 2, line 1, strike out "or" and insert "livestock and poultry feed, nursery stock."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE INAUGURATION OF AIR MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 108) commemorating May 15, 1943, as the anniversary of the inauguration of Air Mail Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COLE of New York. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this measure designates May 15, 1943, as the day to commemorate the inauguration of the first Air Mail Service by the United States Government. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare a suitable plaque. In view of the fact that that date has already been passed, I am curious to know the reason for continuing this bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mainly on account of the plaque.

Mr. COLE of New York. Can the gentleman tell the House the approximate cost of this plaque?

Mr. BULWINKLE. My recollection is that the matter was mentioned in the committee, and that it was stated that the plaque would cost only a nominal amount.

Mr. COLE of New York. Can the gentleman describe the type of plaque that is proposed to be prepared?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; I cannot.

This bill was introduced on March 31, but was brought up in our committee just last week. It was stated then that May 15 would be passed before action could be taken on the resolution, but that it would give authority for the designation of that date so we would have it in mind that that was the date of the first flight, and also the preparation of this plaque would be authorized. My recollection is that the cost was stated to be under $1,000.

Mr. COLE of New York. No doubt the plaque will be made of bronze or some other critical war material. In view of the fact that the date has already passed, it seems to me rather unnecessary to continue the bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I think the gentleman should let it go on, because this plaque is to be placed in the Post Office Department. It would not make any particular difference whether it was put up on the 15th or on the 30th.

Mr. COLE of New York. This will be a posthumous recognition of the twenty-fifth anniversary?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes. We have to do that occasionally when we do not get these bills up for consideration in time.

Mr. COLE of New York. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That May 15, 1943, be designated as a day of commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the inauguration by the United States Post Office Department of the air-mail service, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prepare a suitable plaque to be presented on that date to the Postmaster General to mark the occasion.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "on that date."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SANTA CLARA PUEBLO OF NEW MEXICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 128, to authorize a per capita payment of $10 to the members of the Santa Clara Pueblo of New Mexico from funds on deposit to their credit in the Treasury of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury so much as may be necessary of the funds to the credit of the Santa Clara Pueblo in the State of New Mexico which have accrued under the act of March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1586) and to make therefrom a payment of not to exceed $10 to each member of the pueblo, under such rules and regulations as said Secretary may prescribed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CROW INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2105, extending time for repayment and authorizing increase in revolving fund for benefit of Crow Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLE of New York. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an explanation from the gentleman from Montana of the purpose of the bill, since the report is rather incomplete.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The purpose of the bill is to authorize an extension of time for the repayment of loans made from the tribal funds amounting to $50,000. These loans are made to the members of the tribe for the purpose of purchasing seed, farm implements, livestock, and so forth. Such a procedure was authorized by the act of June 4, 1920. The time has been extended from time to time until now it expires in 1945. The purpose of extending it now is so that loans may be made, laying the foundation for their repayment after 1945. In other words, if we did not pass this legislation, all loans would have to be liquidated by that time. When you make a loan to anybody for the purchase of cattle at, say, the present price, or any other price, you will not get any return on that loan, ordinarily, for maybe 2 or 3 years. Also we want to remember all of the time that the money belongs to the Indians, it is in the Treasury of the United States; it is their money, and in addition to the purpose of extending the time for repayment of these loans, this bill provides for an additional sum to be added to the $50,000 out of their tribal fund which they have in the Treasury.

Mr. COLE of New York. How large is this 4-percent fund?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I could not say now how large a sum will be used.

Mr. COLE of New York. As I understand it, in 1920, $50,000 was authorized to be loaned to the Indians for the purpose of crop loans, with the provision that these loans had to be repaid within 5 years, and that 5-year period has been extended to 1925, 1930, 1935, and 1940, and now to 1945. Does that mean that the loan made in 1920 or 1921 is still alive?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, the chances are that all of these loans have been liquidated.

Mr. COLE of New York. What does the record show?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The record so shows, I understand. In addition to that, I might say that the Crow Indians are a very progressive people. They have splendid land in the Crow Reservation, and they raise good crops. I attended a county fair there, a farm exhibit by the Indians, and it was equal to any exhibit I ever saw any place by white people.

Mr. COLE of New York. My interest is as to whether these loans are delinquent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. I will say to the gentleman that it is carried on as a revolving fund and is one of the best things ever brought into existence for the Indians by the Department.

Mr. COLE of New York. And in granting this extension, in effect it continues this for another period of 5 years?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. Yes.

Mr. CASE. This revolving fund is solely the revolving fund from the tribal funds belonging to the Indians and has no relation to the general fund set up under the reorganization.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for repayment to the tribe of the $50,000 revolving fund for the benefit of the Crow Indians, created by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 755), for advance to the Indians for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment is hereby extended from June 30, 1945, to June 30, 1965, for the same purposes: Provided, That upon request of the tribal council of the Crow Tribe and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, any unobligated balances in the Crow consolidated 4-percent fund may be added to the $50,000 revolving fund and become available for the same purposes and subject to the same conditions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAND IN NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2143) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain lands within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to exchange approximately 6 acres of Navajo tribal land located in section 26, township 27 north, range 26 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Apache County, Ariz., for a tract of Mission land containing approximately 4.14 acres in section 27, township 27 north, range 26 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Apache County, Ariz., being a portion of the land fee patented to the Woman's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

SEC. 2. Title to the land received in the exchange shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and shall be taken in the name of the United States of America in trust for the Navajo Indian Tribe.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF LOGS, ETC., RED LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2185) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the purposes of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. 137), to purchase logs, lumber, and other forest products.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill would authorize the Secretary of the Interior in some measure to go into the lumber business, and I ask a more detailed explanation from the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this legislation was suggested by the Secretary of the Interior in a communication dated March 3, 1943, addressed to the Speaker of the House. Thereafter I introduced the bill. The act of May 8, 1916, set up what is known as the Red Lake Forest Reserve, within the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota, and authorized those Indians to establish mills, and to cut and sell timber from within that reservation. They have been conducting this business since that time, and they are cutting that timber on a sustained basis. In other words, they cut only the portion of the timber that will be made up by growth in the future, so as not to destroy the forests within that reserve. On the outside of this Indian reservation there are some farmers who have some timber. The practice has been for some time to buy some of that timber, process it, and so forth, and it gives employment to in excess of 200 Indians. If we were to cut this operation out, these Indians would have to go on relief or do something else after the war, because it so happens that that is the only business and the only way they have of making a livelihood in that section. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAGEN] is here, and it is within his district. I hope that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] will not put an end to the operation of this mill by objecting to this bill, because it has been very successful. I want to call the gentleman's attention to another thing. It has been doing a splendid work. I understand they have cash on hand $521,000; accounts receivable $31,000; inventories $122,000.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman mean to say that those Indians will go on relief with that much money on hand?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that it does not make any difference what the Indian has, it is in the Treasury of the United States and it is hard to get back to him what belongs to him. I have found that out.

Mr. PACE. But this bill puts Mr. Ickes in the sawmill and lumber business; gives him unlimited authority to continue through the years, buy all the timberland in that section of the State, and go into direct competition with private industry in that section. There is no limit on the bill. He can take the 279 employees—that must be a mighty big sawmill—and cut millions and millions of feet and continue to go out and buy timber from private sources and manufacture it in direct competition with the industry of that section.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The curtailing of the operations is provided for, because it has to be limited to the present transportation facilities. In other words, we cannot go beyond that. They cannot extend that all over the State of Minnesota, for instance.

Mr. PACE. When they are crying for lumber workers all through the Northwest, why does the gentleman think the Indians will go on relief when they can make $10 or $15 a day in the lumber mills of the Northwest, where the lumber is standing and ready to be cut?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The lumber is standing and ready to be cut, right there. Of course, they have their homes there. I certainly hope the gentleman would not want these Indians transferred to the coast to perform work that they can perform, just as serviceably and just as beneficially to the Government under the present situation, as if they were transferred.

Mr. PACE. I certainly would not want to cause any inconvenience to these Indians, but I cannot sit here and consent to have the Secretary of the Interior go into public business in competition with private business of cutting and processing and manufacturing and selling timber.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I believe if the gentleman had a picture of this as we did in the committee, he would feel differently. This was a unanimous report from the committee. By the way, we had a lumber dealer on that committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ARNOLD], who raised the identical point that the gentleman raises. After he heard the picture given by the various witnesses who testified in favor of this, he supported the legislation.

Mr. COLE of New York. Reserving the right to object, I entertained the same apprehension that has already been expressed by the gentleman from Georgia, that this intends to put the Secretary of the Interior into the lumber business, which I, as well as many others, want to avoid. However, I can see some urgency for it on account of the war situation and the shortage of lumber. What objection is there to inserting a provision limiting the effect of this act to the duration of the war?

Mr. O'CONNOR. What would the gentleman suggest along that line? Say 2 years?

Mr. COLE of New York. No; for the duration of the war.

Mr. O'CONNOR. For the duration of the war and for 6 months after the war?

Mr. COLE of New York. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, if that is agreeable to him.

Mr. HAGEN. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If that is agreeable to the gentleman that is agreeable to me.

Mr. COLE of New York. If that is agreeable to those who are interested in the legislation, none of us will have any objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will say to the gentleman we will prepare an amendment and have it submitted.

Mr. COLE of New York. I have the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice there is a provision in the bill that the Secretary of the Interior may be allowed to purchase this timber under such regulations as he may prescribe without compliance of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. What is the provision of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes that applies to this matter?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have not investigated that phase of the matter.

Mr. MOTT. Does not the gentleman think he should investigate it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I suppose we did; but, in the first place, this operation has been carried on, I will say to the gentleman, very successfully by these Indians. In the past, when Indians all over the country and white people all over the country were on relief, this operation was carried on successfully.

Mr. COLE of New York. If the gentleman will yield, section 3709 refers to requiring the Government in making purchases to submit public bids.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I guess that is the case.

Mr. MOTT. There is one other question I would like to ask the gentleman from Montana. I notice on page 2 of the report this statement:

> The timber operations on the Red Lake Indian Reservation have been planned on a sustained-yield basis, but the amount of timber is inadequate for the maintenance of the present rate of cutting, of approximately 6,000,000 feet per year, which is necessary to take care of the overhead and depreciation charges and to provide employment for a substantial number of Indians.

Now, if this timber is being cut on a sustained-yield basis, how does it come that the timber has been exhausted already on this tract?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The timber is not exhausted, but the plan is to cut it on that basis, and they are running out of timber to keep that basis and that plan in operation. Consequently, they are going on the outside and buying timber from farmers who are located in that vicinity who otherwise would have no market at all for their timber. They are bringing into production timber, and that is necessary in connection with our war effort.

Mr. MOTT. That is not operating on a sustained-yield basis. When you operate a forest upon a sustained-yield basis you must first ascertain what amount of timber per year can be cut in order to make the operation permanent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is correct.

Mr. MOTT. And when that figure is ascertained, then that is the annual cut, and if that cut is adhered to, the timber resources of this reservation will be perpetual. So it would appear here that there is some miscalculation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; there has not been any miscalculation. I may say to the gentleman from Oregon that we have arrived at the point where if we could not get the timber from the adjacent landowners we would have to stop until a sufficient growth of timber was made in order that we could carry on again the sustained cut.

Mr. MOTT. Then I again say to the gentleman that apparently it is not being operated on a sustained-yield basis, and therefore the statement in the report appears to be in error.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose they stop that mill and close down operations. The country needs lumber. These Indians can get the lumber from adjacent farm owners. Why should not they be permitted to do it?

Mr. MOTT. An operation on a sustained-yield basis never stops; it is perpetual. That is why we have sustained-yield programs. It is evident, therefore, that the annual cut of timber on this Indian reservation has been greater than a sustained-yield cut.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, in view of the proposed amendment limiting this bill to the duration of the war and 6 months after, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, or his authorized representatives, in carrying out the purposes of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. 137), as amended, may purchase in the open market from funds available for the operation of the Red Lake Indian Mills, logs, lumber, and other forest products for processing, manufacture, and sale at said mills on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn. Said forest products may be purchased and sold under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, without compliance with section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of New York: At the end add a new section, as follows:
>
> "SEC. 2. This act shall terminate 6 months after cessation of the hostilities in which the United States is now engaged or at an earlier date by proclamation of the President."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

This bill deals with logging. I know something about logging, as I come from a logging country. I would like to know some little something about it.

Mr. COLE of New York. This is a bill to authorize a certain Indian tribe out in the States of Minnesota and Montana, which is now engaged in logging operations on its own reservation, to go out into nearby areas and buy logs to be sawed up in its mill. The amendment is to limit that authority to the duration of the war.

Mr. STEWART. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ABSENTEEISM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2553, directing the Secretary of Labor to make an investigation and study of the extent and causes of absenteeism and to make available the facilities of the Department of Labor to act as a clearing-house for information on methods to control absenteeism.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is pending on the House Calendar a bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs covering the same subject matter. In view of this fact, I think this bill should go over without prejudice, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

GULF COUNTY CANAL, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1403, to authorize the acquisition, improvement, and maintenance of the Gulf County Canal, Fla.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in providing an authorization of $112,000 for a small canal in Florida this bill reauthorizes the cross-Florida canal for which authorization already exists. Will the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, assure me that this will in no way change the status quo of the cross-Florida canal?

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. The bill has no bearing whatever on the Florida Canal except that it happens to be in the same law that is amended.

Mr. KEAN. It will authorize the appropriation of $93,000,000 that we authorized last year.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. That has already been authorized.

Mr. KEAN. But this bill reauthorizes it. When I first looked at the bill I thought it was one for the authorization of $93,000,000. Section 1 reads:

> There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $93,112,000 to carry out the provisions of the act.

Then I found that it only added $112,000.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KEAN. It does not in any way change the present status of the cross-Florida canal.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. It does not change the status of that canal. That canal, of course, has already been authorized. This happens, however, to be in the same bill pertaining to the intercoastal canal.

The bill was put through in this manner for the following reason: The engineers already have some money, $6,700,000, or something like that, which was turned over to them last year simply to enlarge the intercoastal canal. By adopting this as a section of that same canal the engineers say they can use this money at once and commence this week to do the work. That is the only reason for this.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote the national defense and to promptly facilitate and protect the transport of materials and supplies needful to the Military Establishment by authorizing the construction and operation of a pipe line and a navigable barge channel across Florida, and by deepening and enlarging the Intracoastal Waterway from its present eastern terminus to the vicinity of the Mexican border," approved July 23, 1942, is amended by striking out section 2 thereof and adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. The Gulf County Canal and its right-of-way which connects the channel extending from the Apalachicola River to St. Andrews Bay, Fla., with St. Josephs Bay, Fla., shall be acquired by the United States from the Board of County Commissioners of Gulf County, Fla., at a cost not to exceed the sum of $200,000.

"SEC. 3. Upon the acquisition of such canal and its right-of-way, the United States shall maintain it and shall prosecute as speedily as may be consistent with budgetary requirements, under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, the improvements recommended by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the report submitted in House Document No. 257, Seventy-sixth Congress.

"SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $93,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this act."

SEC. 2. The balance of any sums appropriated prior to the enactment of this act for purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 1 of such act approved July 23, 1942, which are not needed for such purposes, shall be available for expenditure for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of such act, as amended by this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, in lines 4 to 9, inclusive, strike out "shall be acquired by the United States from the Board of County Commissioners of Gulf County, Fla., at a cost not to exceed the sum of $200,000."

"SEC. 3. Upon the acquisition of such canal and its right-of-way, the United States shall maintain it and shall prosecute" and insert in lieu thereof "is hereby adopted as a Federal project and authorized to be prosecuted."

Page 2, in lines 11 to 13, inclusive, strike out "the improvements recommended by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors" and insert in lieu thereof "in accordance with the plans and subject to the conditions recommended."

Page 2, line 14, after the word "Congress", insert ": Provided, That, with the consent of the Board of County Commissioners of Gulf County, Fla., and pending fulfillment of the condition specified in said document that the existing canal and its right-of-way be conveyed to the United States free of cost, the said canal may be dredged to provide at an estimated cost of $112,000, the dimensions of 9 feet deep and 100 feet wide, as recommended in said document."

Page 2, line 16, strike out "$93,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$93,112,000."

Page 2, line 23, strike out the word "sections" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section"; and following the numeral "2" strike out "and 3."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REORGANIZATION OF THE MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2583, to provide for the reorganization of the Marine Corps and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following changes are hereby made in the organization of the Marine Corps:

(a) The Adjutant and Inspector's Department and the Office of the Adjutant and Inspector are hereby abolished.

(b) The administration and functions of the Adjutant and Inspector's Department are hereby transferred to the cognizance of a Director of Personnel, Marine Corps.

(c) The Director of Personnel, Marine Corps, shall be a line officer on active duty in the Marine Corps, detailed by the Commandant of the Marine Corps.

(d) In effectuating the transfer of administration and functions herein provided, the Commandant of the Marine Corps is authorized to make such distribution, changes, and reorganization in the functions and duties of the departments and offices of the Marine Corps as he deems necessary for the more efficient administration of the Marine Corps.

SEC. 2. The unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, or other funds available for use in connection with the exercise of any function herein transferred to the Director of Personnel, Marine Corps, are hereby transferred to the office of such Director for use in connection with the exercise of the functions so transferred.

SEC. 3. All laws or parts of laws so far as they are inconsistent with or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ABOLISHING CERTAIN NAVAL TRUST FUNDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2584, to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That effective July 1, 1943, (a) the trust fund, naval hospital fund (48 Stat. 1235 (80) (7s815); 31 U. S. C. 725s (a) (80)), is abolished, and any unobligated balance remaining therein as of that date shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury; (b) moneys theretofore required by law to be paid into such fund from annual appropriations shall remain to the credit of the appropriation concerned; and (c) commencing with the fiscal year 1944, annual appropriations in such amounts as may be necessary are authorized from the general fund of the Treasury for the maintenance, operation, and improvement of naval hospitals.

SEC. 2. Effective July 1, 1943, (a) the trust fund, Navy fines and forfeitures (48 Stat. 1235 (81) (7s984); 31 U. S. C. 725s (a) (81)), is abolished, and any unobligated balance remaining therein as of that date shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury; (b) moneys theretofore required by law to be paid into such fund from annual appropriations, and all pay forfeited by law or by the terms of a court-martial sentence, shall remain to the credit of the appropriation concerned; and (c) commencing with the fiscal year 1944, annual appropriations for "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy," or "Pay, Marine Corps," as may be appropriate, shall be available for payment of (a) necessary personal allowances of prisoners during confinement, and (b) transportation, gratuity, and civilian clothing of discharged naval prisoners: Provided, That savings deposits forfeited by desertion shall be deposited into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 3. Commencing June 30, 1944, there shall be deducted from the pay of each person in the naval service on the last day of each fiscal year the sum of $2.40 to be deposited into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 4. (a) Sections 4808, 4809, and 1614 of the Revised Statutes; and (b) so much of the act approved June 7, 1900 (24 U. S. C. 5), as requires that all forfeitures on account of desertion shall be passed to the credit of the naval hospital fund, are hereby repealed: Provided, That pensions of inmates of a naval home or naval hospital, heretofore required by law to be deducted from the account of the pensioner and applied for the benefit of the fund from which such home or hospital is maintained, shall be deposited into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That this section shall be effective July 1, 1943: And provided further, That all moneys accruing to the trust funds naval hospital fund (7s815) or navy fines and forfeitures (7s984) prior to that date but not credited thereto prior to that date shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 25, strike out "4" and insert in lieu thereof "3."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO SECTIONS 2 AND 4 OF ACT AUTHORIZING APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONED WARRANT AND WARRANT OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2587, to amend sections 2 and 4 of the act approved June 27, 1942, entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioned warrant and warrant officers to commissioned rank in the line and Staff Corps of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioned warrant and warrant officers to commissioned rank in the line and Staff Corps of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1942 (56 Stat. 621), is hereby amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided further, That with respect to those officers who, because of service conditions, (a) are unable to apply for appointment or examination prior to June 27, 1943, or (b) who make such application but are not examined prior to said date, the foregoing limitation shall not apply until June 30 of the fiscal year following that in which the present war shall terminate."

SEC. 2. That section 4 of said act of June 27, 1942, is hereby amended by adding the following proviso: "Provided, That any officer described in the second proviso of section 2 of this act shall, upon appointment, take rank with other officers in the order of seniority that would have been assigned had he been appointed prior to June 27, 1943."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPEALING SECTION 3 OF STANDARD TIME ACT RELATING TO TIME ZONE IN PORTION OF IDAHO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1997, to repeal section 3 of the Standard Time Act of March 19, 1918, as amended, relating to the placing of a certain portion of the State of Idaho in the third time zone.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," approved March 19, 1918, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 15, sec. 264), which provides for placing a certain portion of the State of Idaho in the third time zone, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect at 2 a. m. of the second Monday following the date of its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 73]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 353 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings, under the roll call, were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a letter I received recently from the Governor of my State regarding the motive behind the enlistment of our womanhood in the WAVES.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Baltimore Evening Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article I wrote for the Christian Advocate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a report released by the Tennessee Valley Authority on May 16, concerning the achievements of the T. V. A. during the 10 years of its activities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS, 1943

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2714) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiency appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, with the acquiescence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], I ask unanimous consent that, in addition to the time already provided, 1 hour on each side be allotted for general debate when the Kerr amendment is offered, at the close of which a vote shall be taken.

Mr. TABER. And that 1 hour to be under the control of the chairman and ranking member of the committee.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. To be controlled as provided for the general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, may I also call the attention of the House to the fact that we find ourselves in the unusual situation of having three major supply bills waiting action by the House at this time: The urgent deficiency bill, which is pending, the naval supply bill for 1944, and the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1944, all of which have been reported to the House and are awaiting disposition this week.

The appropriations provided in those three bills aggregate approximately $30,000,000,000.

In that connection it should also be noted that up to date none of the general supply bills have been enacted into law, and it behooves both this body and a coordinate body to give a little thought to prompt action of all appropriation bills and conference reports.

The status of the supply bills as of May 17 is as follows:

STATUS OF APPROPRIATION BILLS, SEVENTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Laws:
First deficiency, fiscal year 1943.
Naval supplemental, fiscal year 1943.
Farm labor supply, runs to December 31, 1943.
Urgent deficiencies, fiscal year 1943 (H. J. Res. 82 and 115).
Pending in House:
Urgent deficiency, fiscal year 1943.
Naval, fiscal year 1944.
Interior, fiscal year 1944.
Pending in House committee:
Lend-lease appropriations, fiscal years 1943 and 1944.
Labor and Federal Security Agency, fiscal year 1944.
Military appropriations, fiscal year 1944.
National war agencies, fiscal year 1944.
NOTE.—None of these bills can be reported to the House before June except, possibly, lend-lease.
Pending in Senate: Legislative, fiscal year 1944 (passed House April 8).
Pending in Senate committee:
Agriculture, fiscal year 1944 (passed House April 20).
District of Columbia, fiscal year 1944 (passed House April 20).
Independent offices, fiscal year 1944 (passed House February 17).
State, Justice, and Commerce, fiscal year 1944 (passed House April 7).
Passed both Houses:
Treasury and Post Office, fiscal year 1944 (pending amendments in dispute).
War civil functions, fiscal year 1944 (not sent to conference).

We reported out the Interior bill this morning. The Labor and Federal Security bill and the military appropriations bill remain to be reported by the committee to the House. In addition we expect soon to report the National War Agency bill for 1944 and the Navy bill for 1943 and 1944, in all, four major bills still pending in the House committee.

If the House expects to get away by the 4th of July, as has been intimated, we would like to have the cooperation of both the committee and the House in the prompt consideration and disposition of these remaining bills.

The SPEAKER. As far as the leadership of the House is concerned, the gentleman will have its cooperation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We have always had that cooperation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my colleague from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in further explanation of the statement the gentleman is making, several times we have found ourselves on Friday and on Monday with somewhere around 300 Members of the House in Washington. We cannot lose the weekends every week and expect to get this legislation passed and be ready for a recess by July 4. I am impressed with what the gentleman says in his request that all Members stay on the job. I think it is necessary for the interests of our physical welfare as well as the mental ease of the country for us to take a recess.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations have been holding hearings for longer hours than they have ever worked all the way through. There has been no lying down on the job on their part. The House has given more consideration to every bill that has come along than has been its practice. There is in the House, as we all realize, a disposition to try to save a little bit of a part of the Treasury, and that takes a little longer than it would otherwise. We have a very big job to do if we are ever going to get through. Frankly, I do not see how, the way things are going now, we are going to be through by the 1st of July. It can only be done by the other body stepping up its pace and everybody here putting their shoulders to the wheel.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the observation made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is a very good one. The probabilities are that there will be a hesitancy to adjourn over Saturday. In the past there was complete justification for that. The leadership naturally recognizes that the Members work very hard. The situation on the floor is very intense. Before coming here we have our office work to do and after we get through here there is more office work to do.

On Saturdays the Members work very hard in their offices. We all have to look after the demands of our districts. That is only natural. We are living in a democracy, thanks be to God, and we have to look after the requests and the demands of the people of our districts. They have the constitutional right of petition, and many of them exercise that right through us. Therefore, as it applies to the situation from now on, I think there is a great deal to what the gentleman from Virginia has said. While we have adjourned over Friday pretty often in the past, a lot of that consideration has been extended to individual members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, in addition to the list of appropriation bills just filed, a schedule of our hearings on the remainder of the national war agencies, giving an idea of just what progress will have to be made in the committee in order to get that bill out by the 15th of June, which is practically the last date we can hope to report it if we expect to enact it by the 1st of July.

The schedule is as follows:

HEARING SCHEDULE FOR REMAINDER OF NATIONAL WAR AGENCIES

Tuesday, May 18: Office of War Information.
Wednesday, May 19: Office of War Information.
Thursday, May 20: Petroleum Coordinator for War, Office of Scientific Research and Development.
Friday, May 21: Board of Economic Warfare.

This schedule makes no allowance for time lost in marking up the lend-lease appropriation, getting through the conference report on the urgent deficiency, full committee meetings, roll calls, and other House votes and business or time otherwise lost from the schedule in the coming 2 weeks. Even if we are able to follow the schedule as drawn it will hardly be possible to report the national war agencies bill earlier than June 15.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I got the impression from what has been said here by the several gentlemen who have mentioned the subject that in all likelihood the appropriation bills, if they are thoroughly considered, may take up practically all the time between now and the time it is desired to recess. If that is true, I call attention to the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs has two bills awaiting action on the floor of the House now relating to national defense, and it is entirely possible that we shall have two or three more bills that ought not to be delayed beyond the recess period. I hope the leadership will take those bills into consideration in drawing up the schedules.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I may say to the gentleman that after we dispose of the three pending bills we shall not expect to report further bills, with the exception of the lend-lease bill, before the 1st of June.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. In view of what has been said with reference to the conservation of time, particularly in the consideration of appropriation bills on the floor, it occurred to me, as chairman of a subcommittee trying to expedite the consideration of these matters, that if Members of the House would take the liberty of appearing before the subcommittees and pointing out wherein reductions can be made in appropriations, it might save a great deal of time in the consideration of the bills on the floor.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That would be a very laudable procedure from more than one point of view.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2714, with Mr. PATMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized for such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, it is written, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Let me take just a few minutes to tell the truth—the whole truth and nothing but the truth—about the most maligned, the most misrepresented, and in plain Missouri parlance, the most lied-about man in the world—the American farmer, and legislation in his behalf.

For years the farmer was told that the law of supply and demand governed his prices and there was nothing Congress could do to help him. They said "you cannot legislate prosperity." But the farmer has seen Congress legislate prosperity for everybody else. He has seen Congress increase the wages, the profits, and the income of every other group and industry. He has seen Congress, by law, load this increase on the farmer's cost of production and cost of living. And he has come to realize that Congress can legislate money out of the pockets of any one class and into the pockets of any other class, and has been doing it right along.

What is more to the point, he has noticed that when money was legislated into the pockets of labor, industry, transportation, mining, or business, through higher prices, higher wages, higher freight rates, higher coal, oil, gas, and so forth, a large part of the additional money they got was always out of the farmer's pockets.

But when the farmer himself comes to Congress to ask for the same kind of legislation, he is met with the most determined opposition. Every group and interest that wants to live at the expense of the farmer opposes every bill that will give the farmer the same kind of legislation they have already secured for themselves. They say in effect, "We are going to charge you as much as we can and pay you as little as we can," and although we got through legislation before the war bringing farm prices close to parity, they are using every effort to prevent legislation which will protect parity prices after the war. In addition to everything else that can be done to prevent permanent stabilization of farm prices, they have resorted to the most reckless misrepresentation, and I want to catalog a few of these poison-pen stories they have circulated so industriously.

First. They say there is a farm bloc organization here in Washington.

To my certain knowledge, there is no such organization here and never has been. If anyone is in doubt about it, I suggest that they consult Congressman FULMER, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture; Congressman STEAGALL, author of the Steagall bill; or Congressman PACE, author of the Pace bill, all of whom are sitting here. They will assure you that there has never been any organization or meeting, either permanent or temporary, that by any stretch of the imagination could be termed a farm bloc. It is a foreign word usually applied by hostile columnists and commentators to the Members of the House and Senate who support farm legislation. Their bias is shown by the fact that they never speak of Congressmen who support legislation in behalf of other groups as blocs. The corridors of this Capitol are filled with paid lobbyists trying to get through legislation and in both Houses of Congress there are large groups of Congressmen voting for such legislation. But no one ever speaks of them as blocs. There is a much larger number supporting labor legislation than is supporting farm legislation. I know, because I have voted for every labor law passed by Congress in the last 20 years. But you never hear anything about a labor bloc.

There was a much larger number supporting the bill to increase the salaries of Government employees passed by the House last week. But nobody said anything about the Government employees bloc. You never hear anything about the Ruml bloc or the sales-tax bloc or any other bloc—although they are all here. It is only when the farmer asks for legislation to protect him after the war from the same drop in prices that ruined him after the last war that they talk of the farm bloc—and they usually add the "stumbling bloc." The farmer not only works longer than anybody else, and gets less per hour than anybody else, and is doing more to win the war than anybody else, but he gets more abuse than anybody else.

Second. They say Congressmen and farm organizations opposing incentive payments and supporting post-war stabilization of farm prices through enactment of the Steagall, Pace, and Bankhead bills do not represent the farmer.

If they do not represent the farmer whom do they represent? They do not represent labor. Both C. I. O. and A. F. of L. are supporting incentive payments and cheap food.

They do not represent the Department of Agriculture. The Department and all its hired hands have been fighting desperately for the last 5 years to hold down farm prices. They do not represent the consumer organizations. The consumer is paying the lowest percent of his income for food in all history—22 percent in 1943 as compared with 38 percent in 1919—and all the consumer organizations are for incentive payments, because incentive payments pay a part of their grocery bills out of the United States Treasury. There is nobody left, then, for the farm Congressmen to represent but the farmers who elected them and to whom they must come for reelection. I am a farmer myself and have lost as much money shipping fat cattle and hogs to the consumer at less than the cost of production as any other farmer in my State. Every vote I have cast on farm legislation has been the vote of a burnt child who was singed in the collapse that followed the last war and wants to keep out of the fire at the close of this war.

The same is true of the farm organizations, the Missouri Farmers' Association, the Farm Bureau, the National Grange, and the National Council of Farm Cooperatives. If they do not represent the farmer, whom do they represent? There are no finer men in the Nation today than F. V. Heinkel, R. L. Brown, Homer Shride, of my own State; Edward A. O'Neal, Albert S. Goss, Ezra T. Benson, Charles W. Holman, Fred Brenckman, and other farm representatives. They are without exception men of the highest character and patriotism. But for them hogs would today be selling at $9 and eggs at 22 cents, and the food supply of the Nation would be even more inadequate than it is. No one has thrown any mud or made any personal attack on Mr. Gompers, Mr. Green, or Mr. Murray or the representatives of the United States Chamber of Commerce or the representatives of the brotherhoods in all the years they have maintained so splendidly the rights of labor, commerce, industry, and transportation. But anyone who represents the farmer bespeaks the same courtesy and consideration for agriculture is the target of the most unlicensed vilification and abuse. The farmer is always the goat whether in the market or in the legislature.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Certainly, the charge against the bill of which I was the author, to include farm labor costs and parity prices, could not be substantiated as a big farmer bill, because it is the little farmer who works his own farm who would get the greatest benefit under that legislation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But that is also true of the other farm measures we have supported. I am certain that the authors of those bills also, as well as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], would likewise testify.

Third. They say these farm measures and the Congressmen and farm organizations who support them are for the big farmer and against the little farmer.

Of all the propaganda they manufacture that is the most transparent. You cannot help the farmer who grows 1,000 bushels of corn without helping the farmer who grows 100 bushels. You cannot increase prices for the man who raises a hundred hogs without increasing prices for the man who raises 10 hogs. You cannot benefit the farmer living on one side of the road without benefiting the farmer living on the other side of the road. If you have attended the meetings of the farm clubs and farm bureaus and farm granges year after year as I have, you would know there could not possibly be any such distinction between members. The membership of these farm organizations throughout the country is made up of the rank-and-file farmers of the neighborhood, and any suggestion at one of their meetings that they were for or against the big farmer or the little farmer would get a big laugh. Just try it out on any local unit of any of these farm organizations anywhere in the country. They always slip in something about the big plantation owner. There is not a big plantation owner in any farm club, farm bureau, or farm grange in Missouri.

And let me take this opportunity to urge any farmer who is not affiliated with a farm organization to immediately join the one nearest to him. This is a day of organization. Everybody is organized and has his representatives here in Washington demanding laws for himself and against everybody else. It is a case of the devil take the hindmost. The consumers in particular are organized and if they had their way would put farm products back where they were in 1921. Government officials in charge of the food program testified that regimentation was infinitely easier this time as they had to deal with over 200 food-distributing agencies in the last war and only 8 chain-store representatives in this war. The farmer must organize in self-defense, or turn this Government over to the control of those who are organized. Some of these organizations are just about running the country as it is. Join your farm organization and support it in season and out of season if you have any regard for the future of your business and your family.

And every merchant, banker, artisan, and professional man in the inland town should cooperate. If the farmer prospers the local businessman prospers. If the farmer must accept starvation prices for his products as in 1922 and 1932, the town businessman depending on the farmer must run his business on starvation patronage. If the farmer does not make it, he cannot spend it.

Fourth. They say the period selected as a basis for parity was a period in which the farmers were getting the highest prices ever paid for farm products. They also say farmers are better off today than ever before. There is not a word of truth in either statement. The period was from 1910 to 1914, when cotton was $12.40, hogs were $7.27, wheat 88 cents, corn 64 cents, and eggs 22 cents. Prices have repeatedly been much better. Hogs have sold as high as $28, wheat $2.40, cotton 42 cents, corn $1.50, and eggs 60 cents.

And yet these devious strategists try to make the public believe the farmers are grabbing for the highest prices ever paid. The farmers are not getting their highest prices by a good deal but everybody else is.

Farm prices today are 10 percent less than in the last war while wages and farm machinery are more than twice what they were in the last war. Here are the Government statistics:

Comparisons of farm prices and industrial wage rates and weekly income with last war and with 1910–14 base period

	1910–14	Peak of first war	January 1943
Farm prices	100	202	182
Hourly earnings, factory workers	100	193	441
Weekly wage income, factory workers	100	182	377
Percentage of industrial worker's family income spent for food		58	[1]28
Percentage of all nonfarm family income spent for food	31	38	[1]22

[1] Lowest on record.

The farmer approves of these wage scales. The more the working man makes the better customer he ought to be. The farmer believes in live and let live. He believes in high wages and high prices. He would not take a penny from either. But he does insist that when he pays his part of these higher wages and higher prices he is at least entitled to a living wage for his own labor and a parity price for his own products.

Fifth. They say there is a conspiracy to destroy A. A. A.

There is not the slightest foundation for such a charge. It is only necessary to look at the last agricultural appropriation bill to see that ample appropriation is made for A. A. A. notwithstanding the fact that the Department of Agriculture has raised the quotas on wheat and corn, thereby eliminating a material part of the A. A. A. work. Heavy reductions are being made in every appropriation bill this session of Congress. The Interior appropriation bill, reported this morning, cuts practically every item in the bill and reduces the total by millions of dollars. All nonwar expenditures must be curtailed. And yet the committee continued A. A. A. with minor changes and the A. A. A. appropriation stayed in the bill. Notwithstanding this, it has been broadcast all over the country that we were destroying A. A. A. I helped establish A. A. A. We cannot maintain prices after the war without A. A. A. To destroy it would be to destroy everything we have been fighting for the last 10 years.

Sixth. They say the committee in charge of the agricultural appropriation bill is trying to wipe out Farm Security, and that the House voted money for loans out of the bill.

On the contrary, the appropriation bill recently reported to the House, recommended $40,000,000 for loans and $12,000,000 for their administration. In line with the policy of reducing overhead, eliminating duplication, and avoiding overlapping jurisdiction Farm Security was consolidated along with similar activities under Farm Credit but all its activities were preserved. Farmers can still get exactly the same F. S. A. loans and service they have always had. Farm Security was one of the emergency activities established to alleviate depression conditions along with the Work Projects Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the National Youth Administration, and similar agencies. It was stated at the time they were established that as soon as unemployment and low prices and other depression conditions which brought them about were relieved they would be discontinued. Practically all of them have been eliminated. But an exception was made in the case of Farm Security. Its activities were continued and the committee recommended an appropriation of $52,000,000 to finance them. Newspaper headlines say "Washington voted overwhelmingly to destroy F. S. A." Nothing of the sort ever happened. It was not even voted on by the House. The House would have approved it had there been an opportunity to vote on it. But it went out on a point of order made by a single Member of the House. I have no doubt that it will be restored by the Senate as items eliminated on points of order usually are. The committee which recommended the appropriation has repeatedly explained this, but Government employees who were afraid their jobs would be affected broadcast the statement all over the country that the committee was trying to wipe it out.

Seventh. They say the farm bloc is trying to start the spiral of inflation by increasing the cost of living. Honestly, now, what is starting inflation—the 20 cents worth of cotton in a shirt or the $2.30 worth of processing and distribution? Which is inflationary—the 1½ cents worth of wheat in a loaf of bread or the 8½ cents worth of processing and distribution? The farmers are not asking for increases. All the farmer is asking is to hold what he has and to be given legislation which will protect him after the war as others are already protected. It is not the cost of food that is threatening inflation.

There is a graph just issued by the Government which explains the situation.

Eighth. They say the Department of Agriculture is "supporting" farm prices and there is need of a "price-supporting program."

Comment is hardly necessary. Everyone knows that the Department of Agriculture has been able to hold prices down only by the most drastic manipulation. The claim of the Department that the price of hogs is being "supported" is particularly unconvincing when meat markets throughout the country are usually without pork and even when supplied limit sales of bacon to half a pound to a customer.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the gentleman believe that a competition between prices and wages gives security neither to labor nor to agriculture? Does not the gentleman further believe that prices have to be rolled back to the levels of 1942 and that there should be a subsidizing of prices to make up for any injustices?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. To the first question, "No." To the second, "No." And I speak for every farm Congressman and every farm organization in the country when I say that if you want to roll back labor, industry, and agriculture to the beginning, take away all arbitrary laws, all artificial stilts upon which labor and industry are walking today, and put them back to the law of supply and demand, the farmer will be the first to go along with you.

Ninth. They say, farmers are shirking war production and holding out for incentive payments above parity prices.

No more unjust charge could be made. Handicapped as no other industry is—without sufficient labor, machinery, or supplies—the farmer is contributing his part to the war effort more efficiently than any other industry. There are no strikes, no lockouts, no absenteeism, no red flags, and no Monday morning hangovers on the American farm. He will produce all he can regardless of the drop in prices handed to him while other incomes are advancing.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FULMER. Does the gentleman agree with me that it is not the farmer's price in any instance that interferes with or brings about that extreme high consumer's price, but, on the other hand, it is the many useless middlemen between the farmer and the consumer? The purpose of the subsidy now being requested is to pay some of the middlemen so that each one of them will get his regardless of what the farmer gets.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman correctly analyzes the situation. No one can question that statement.

Mr. RIZLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. RIZLEY. The gentleman has made a very interesting statement and one with which I agree about 100 percent this afternoon. But the thing that is disturbing and alarming to me is this: I would like to have the gentleman say something about it. Undoubtedly the press, and undoubtedly the Office of Price Administration, undoubtedly the administration knows what the attitude of Congress has been and what the attitude of the gentlemen of the committee has been toward this incentive, subsidy program. Notwithstanding that, the gentleman undoubtedly heard an address a week ago over the radio of Prentiss Brown, himself, saying to the people of the United States that they were going to put the program into effect. These gentlemen undoubtedly heard that statement. I would like to ask where they are going to get the money.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The New York Times, and I will insert a quotation in the RECORD, has a comment on the statement to which the gentleman refers to the effect that Mr. Brown told the Nation he proposed to bypass the Congress.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. How did the gentleman vote on reciprocal trade agreements?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I voted with a special view to assuring our neighbors that for the next 2 years—and the war is not going to be over in 2 years—that we are willing to meet them on terms of international amity and equality.

It is well to note that all this propaganda comes from the outside, principally from Washington where they are trying to roll back farm prices, and where they have systematically knocked down the price of hogs, eggs, and other farm products in the last few weeks.

Incentive payments mean the defeat of the farm stabilization program for which we have been fighting for 20 years. Our one objective has been to get a legislative floor under farm prices similar to the legislative floor under union wages. It has become imperatively necessary since the war started if we are to escape the collapse in farm prices, farm values, and farm incomes that followed the last war. Thanks to the work of the farm organizations and the farm Congressmen we are about to establish a system which can be maintained when the post-war test comes. But to substitute subsidy payments means that when the war closes the subsidies will be discontinued and we will again have the 5-cent hogs, 20-cent corn, 35-cent wheat, and 8-cent eggs we had in 1920.

Incentive payments will not do the work and every reputable farm organization has repeatedly adopted planks in their annual platforms opposing them. But I will not refer you to the farm organizations or take farm testimony this time. Let us, instead, consult the great newspapers of the Nation.

In the first place, they will not get results. The Wall Street Journal says:

Subsidy as a national price-control policy is a measure of desperation. The rigid collateral regulation which has facilitated its use in Britain and Canada does not yet exist in the United States and is quite unlikely to be introduced in the near future. Subsidy is the opposite of stabilization. It does not prevent price increases but only conceals them from the general gaze in the debt bookkeeping of the Treasury.

And in a second edition:

Subsidy as a national price-control policy is a measure of desperation. The rigid collateral regulation which has facilitated its use in England and Canada does not exist in the United States and is quite unlikely to be introduced in the near future. Sudsidy is the opposite of stabilizaton. It does not prevent price increases but only conceals them from the general gaze in the debt bookkeeping of the Treasury.

An editorial by the Washington News:

It is dangerously misleading to say that the administration's subsidy scheme will roll back the cost of living. It will only appear to do that. The cost of living will remain the same, but the Government will be paying part of everybody's grocery bill.

But whatever comes off the consumers' bills will be added to the astronomical public debt.

An editorial by the Indianapolis Times:

It has no economic merit whatever. But it has political merit. A reduction of 10 percent in all prices equals an increase of 10 percent in all incomes. The hand is quicker than the eye, maybe, and here is a way to take off some of the pressure for higher pay that still threatens to close our coal mines, and hovers like a storm cloud over all American industry. A way to raise everybody's income, great and small, without seeming to raise anybody's pay.

To be sure a universal rise of 10 percent in income will give everyone 10 percent more to spend with no more merchandise to spend it on, and to be sure that is direct inflation. And that is where a subsidy to roll back prices is taking us.

Even for the two plus two equals five school of economists whose opinions bear so much weight in Washington today, it will be quite a difficult job to inflate just one side of a balloon.

Three excerpts from the New York Times:

The great political and economic danger of governmental subsidies is that they postpone the appearance of inflation while building up the reality. They permit (for a time) high wages with comparatively low living costs. They mean (for a time) high prices for producers with low prices for consumers. This is the politician's paradise. It is not difficult to see why the policy of subsidies seems at the moment the political path of least resistance.

And:

Not the least danger of the subsidy policy is that of increased political control over producers and processors of all sorts. The producer's solvency and economic life depend not on what he gets for his goods in the market but on his Government subsidy. Once this dependence is established, then the Government can tell the producer that his subsidy will not be continued unless he does this or that or the other. It is another step toward authoritarian control. In being deeply suspicious of it, farm groups have shown a sound instinct.

And:

The subsidy plan will not reduce the cost of living. Wage costs, material costs, power costs, and profits will not be diminished. What is to happen is that part of the living cost of the American people will be paid for out of the Treasury. There was something somewhat similar a little while ago. When millions went on relief during the depression, the cost of living wasn't reduced. They just received a subsidy—a 100-percent subsidy for all of their living expenses. The plan Mr. Brown announced on Friday is in some ways more extensive and in others more limited than was the relief scheme. Mr. Brown would place everybody on relief, not for all but for a part of his cost of living.

The Boston Transcript says:

The National Industrial Conference Board completely blasts the fiction that living costs have been running ahead of pay in America's major industries. On the basis of a large cross-section of them, the Conference Board shows that, even using the high levels of January 1941 as a starting point, average weekly income from such wages had risen more than 21 percent by last February as against an increase of 18.4 percent in living costs, while compared with February 1929 (when everything was at the top and nobody but Roger Babson saw what was coming) the wage average last February had increased by more than 50 percent.

Government subsidies can exercise a temporary effect on the superficial evidences of inflation (as it has done in England), but they are like sweeping the dirt under the bed or trying to stem a flood by raising the height of the dam.

The cost of incentive payments as compared with results secured render them prohibitive.

The Indianapolis Times points out:

The original estimate of what it would cost the Government just to roll back prices a few cents on a few food items June 1 was $300,000,000 to $500,000,000, an amount which George Meany, secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of Labor, calls "peanuts" compared to what he believes is needed really to roll back prices. "Peanuts" is right. To roll back all prices by 10 percent by the subsidy plan would cost around $6,000,000,000 a year, which the Government would have to borrow, and on which the Government would pay interest of about $150,000,000 a year.

Inflation, which is simply a too high price level for merchandise, would not be reduced a penny's worth by paying part of the price in borrowed Government money.

The Chicago Tribune says:

The financial aspects of the plan to have the Government pay a part of everyone's cost of living are interesting. The money for such a vast undertaking can come either from borrowing or taxes. Inflation would result from borrowing money to pay 10 percent of the cost of some of the most important food items. On the basis of experience the banks would have to take half the bonds. The inflationary effect of public borrowing from the banks has been pointed out repeatedly. Another way to accomplish the same thing would be to leave prices where they are and give 10 cents' worth of War stamps away with each dollar's worth of meat, butter, and coffee purchased. This in fact, would be less inflationary than the borrowing of the money to pay a subsidy, for people would probably accumulate the stamps and exchange them for bonds.

But incentive payments would bring about the inflation it is designed to control.

The New York Sun reminds:

The use of subsidies to prevent inflation is equivalent to trying to put out a fire by pouring oil on the flames. The immediate result may be to arrest a price rise, but the billions thus paid out in subsidies add to the excess purchasing power that is the prime source of inflation, and help to swell the public debt that imposes an over-all burden upon taxpayers of the present and coming generations.

And the Times corroborates:

Subsidies are not loans; they are gifts, made in an effort to stabilize cost-of-living prices and thus stave off wage increases which, in turn, produce others and inflate the whole price structure. That in sequence brings new wage increases and steadily mounting inflation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman made an observation a few moments ago that I think perhaps should be enlarged somewhat. He was speaking about the cause of inflation; that is, whether it is the 20 cents in a cotton shirt or the processing cost. The gentleman did not mean to say that either of those elements to which he referred necessarily promotes or causes or abets inflation, did he?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I meant to say that, with a raw material which accounted for only a cent and a half in a 10-cent loaf of bread, for instance, you could not with any minor fractional increase of that cost which could possibly be attributed to the price of the wheat in the bread start a spiral of inflation. In short, incentive payments will not do the work; will cost billions of dollars at a time when we cannot afford to waste money; will start inflation and will destroy effective stabilization of farm prices after the war. There is every reason why they should be avoided and present farm prices continued without increase or variation. And there is no tenable reason why we should resort to so costly and so dangerous an untried expedient which promises so little.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I said that with the preponderance of the cost of that material in the processing and distribution, it was absurd to say that by the addition of a small fraction of 1 percent you could start a spiral of inflation. As a matter of fact it becomes more and more apparent that the granting of parity prices for every farm product cannot possibly start inflation but, on the other hand, will contribute to the welfare not only of the farmer but of the country as a whole.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit another observation, I understand that one of the committees of the House will tomorrow take up a bill through which one of the Government agencies is seeking for subsidies funds to the extent of $1,000,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, we are going to vote this afternoon, I presume, on the so-called amendment offered by the Kerr committee. In that connection, I fear that we are embarking upon something rather dangerous. We should think very deeply before we vote approval of the so-called ouster of liberals from various executive departments of the Government.

As I view it, this is an attempt to discharge certain men in the Government service because of their opinions. It is primarily just that.

If we are going to assume the right to fire, we may as well assume the right to hire, and then this august body would become an employment agency.

The Constitution provides for executive removal. Authority to appoint subordinate civil officers whose methods of appointment are not prescribed in the Constitution may be vested by Congress in the President, the department heads, or the courts—article II, section 2, of the Constitution.

Authority to remove subordinate civil officers in the executive branch is recognized to be a part of the power to appoint. The President, acting independently, may even remove civil officers originally appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate, Myers v. The United States, 1926 (272 U. S. 52). Congress, however, may not remove civil officers except by the specific process of impeachment—article I, sections 2 and 3; article II, section 4; and article III, section 2, of the Constitution.

Therefore, any legislation barring payment of salary to specifically named individuals who were executively appointed will be invalid, and will not be binding upon the executive branch of the Government. In other words, you can do anything you want with reference to barring the right to pay these men out of the appropriation bills, but those men would still have a right to retain those jobs and the executive head would still have the right to maintain them in those positions; so what you intend to do might be purely abortive.

I do believe that as a result of the war we have developed a sort of hysteria on this subject and are somewhat submerging our well-considered judgment to our emotions. That is why I might term this effort a sort of witch burning, by saying that we hold a gun of threat and coercion at the heads of all the departments and utterly disregard history.

Soon after the Revolutionary War, Thomas Jefferson denounced the concentration of judicial and executive, as well as law-making powers, in the Legislature of Virginia. See the notes on the State of Virginia by Jefferson, page 195. Such concentration, he said, "is precisely the definition of despotic government. It will be no alleviation that these powers will be exercised by a plurality of hands, and not by a single one. Many despots would surely be as oppressive as one. As little will it avail us, that they are chosen by ourselves. An elective despotism," said the author of the Declaration of Independence, "was not the government we fought for."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. By attempting to control the views and the opinions and the payment of salaries because thereof to the various members of the executive branches of the Government, we, the legislative branch, are arrogating to ourselves executive powers. That is the type of union of powers that Jefferson inveighed against.

I remind the Members of the House of the reconstruction era, when a man by the name Thaddeus Stevens assumed almost superhuman power in this very Chamber. He did so by arrogating to Congress vast executive and judicial powers.

He controlled the destinies of the other Chamber and the destinies of the Executive. He sought to impeach the Executive, President Andrew Johnson, and failed by only one vote, and it is interesting to note that all of the articles of impeachment on which he rested his charges against Andrew Johnson were declared invalid subsequently by the Supreme Court. But Stevens cared naught for law. He stubbornly refused to yield to reason. He would have his way at all costs, even at cost of usurpation of Executive powers. I do not want the Congress to embark on that kind of error, but we are indeed establishing a highly dangerous precedent.

If we are going to examine as closely as did the Dies committee and the Kerr committee into the views and opinions of employees in the executive branch of the Government, I venture this assertion, that Thomas Jefferson himself, and Benjamin Franklin and John Quincy Adams themselves, could not have stood the test, and that appropriations for their salaries would have been summarily cut off. Let me remind you that the Declaration of Independence speaks of "all men being created equal." Is there not something collective in this conception. Have we forgotten that John Quincy Adams wished to make our economy collective, and this Republican President—mark the words—sought to develop the national life on a collective, and not on a competitive basis? In other words, if John Quincy Adams today were on our pay roll, the Dies committee and the Kerr committee would say his name should be stricken from the pay roll because he was a Communist and wanted to destroy the profit system, because he believed in the theory of collectivism. Read the history of John Quincy Adams, and you will see that his views are of that sort. Let me go further. Benjamin Franklin wrote to Robert Moore in 1783 as follows:

> All property except the savage's temporary cabin, his bow, his matchcoat, and other little acquisitions absolutely necessary for his subsistence seems to me the creative of public convention. Hence, the public has the right of regulating descents, and all other conveyances of property, and even of limiting the quantity and the uses of it. All the property that is necessary to a man for the conservation of the individual and the propagation of the species is his natural right, which none may justly deprive him of, but all property superfluous to such purposes is the property of the public, who, by their laws, have created it, and who may, therefore, by other laws, dispose of it, whenever the welfare of the public shall demand such disposition. He that does not like civil society on these terms, let him retire and live among savages.

Thus spake Benjamin Franklin, and his words are little different from the words of Messrs. Dodd, Lovett, Watson, and other ultraliberals. Was Franklin a collectivist, or was he not? Franklin and his views, as I have just expressed them in part, was parcel of the patriotism of the Revolution.

I could give many honored names, famous in our history, who could not have stood the test laid down by the Kerr committee or the Dies committee. Time will not permit, except to draw attention to the extreme views of Dr. Edward Everett Hale. Assuredly he was a patriot, this man who wrote the famous The Man Without a Country. In his book We, the People he said, "The people own the roads, the schoolhouses, the lighthouses, why, then, object to the ownership of wealth in common?" And he was Chaplain of the Senate. Was he disloyal? I do not think so. Yet he, if living, and if Chaplain, would come under the Kerr committee definition of one guilty of subversive activity.

I want it understood there is nothing of a personal nature intended by my words so far as the membership of the Kerr committee is concerned. I simply disagree with them. They do not abide by the constitutional procedure. I am not so much interested in the opinions of the men under fire as I am in the improper and fatal precedent we are embarking on. I am more concerned about the method of ouster.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OUTLAND].

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Chairman, this proposal to remove certain men from the Government service by means of an amendment to an appropriation bill is extremely dangerous. In my judgment, it violates our American concepts of fair play, freedom of speech, and direct action. It sets up no definite standards as to what is subversive and opens wide the path of intolerance. Under the principle here implied, for example, a Cabinet member could be removed from his position by having Congress disapprove his social or economic views, and then follow up such disapproval by an amendment such as we are discussing today.

Our American history has been an inspiring story away from intolerance toward greater freedom of choice for the individual. From the witch hunts of colonial days, the persecution of Quakers and Catholics, and the other manifestations of bigotry that characterized our early history, we Americans have been moving steadily in the direction of greater freedom of individual thought and action, as guaranteed under the essence of our Constitution, the Bill of Rights. This amendment we are now discussing would be a serious step backward if it is adopted.

Of the men specifically mentioned, I have met Mr. Watson on one occasion; Mr. Dodd and Mr. Lovett I have never seen. I believe them to be able and honorable American citizens, doing their best as their consciences dictate to play their part in the all-out war effort. If this amendment passes it will not only remove these citizens from the Government service but it will be doing a much graver injustice—that of depriving them of the most precious of all American attributes, their good name.

And what is the basis for this contemplated action? It is simply that they have belonged to organizations or spoken before groups which do not meet with the approval of certain Members of Congress. Thus it becomes a matter solely of opinion, not of law, and we have prided ourselves that in this democracy of ours we are governed by laws, not by the whims of men. Such action smacks far more of the tactics of the Nazis and the Fascists, against whom we are fighting, than of the spirit of American justice and fair play.

Even the organizations mentioned have not been made illegal; they have simply been condemned as subversive, without this charge being substantiated in any way. Let me give one example. Among the organizations to which Mr. Watson belonged was the Consumers Union. Now, my colleagues, I have belonged to the Consumers' Union, and if my membership has lapsed at the present time I certainly intend to renew that membership. I believe this organization to be doing an extremely valuable piece of work in informing and protecting the American buying public. To charge it with being subversive is to reach the depths of the ridiculous. I would not advise any person to call me subversive simply because I belong to it. And yet it is this type of evidence that is being offered to back up the action contemplated by this amendment.

Ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, let us set the example here for the rest of our country in fair play, considered action, and protection to our most cherished constitutional rights. Let us not give way to war hysteria and do things for which we will later be ashamed. Let us do our part in keeping our country moving in the direction of greater tolerance and greater liberty, in keeping with our democratic traditions. Let us vote down this amendment, which is dangerous and essentially un-American.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I begin my remarks by saying that I find myself, after a great battle with myself, unable to vote in support of the amendment to remove from the service certain named individuals, beginning, however, with this observation as I see it. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations is not at all blamable for this situation. It has been brought about by the action of the House itself, of which I am one, and I must bear my share of whatever blame attaches to it. I said on the floor of the House on other occasions that these men who constitute the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations are as outstanding, as fair, as honorable, and as intelligent as could be found anywhere. Perhaps I said in the Congress, but I am willing to go further now and say anywhere. The trouble, however, is, as I see it, that we are launching on a procedure that will not do. We cannot as a body of legislators, Members of an American Congress, legislate in a left-handed way, as in an inquisition or an impeachment proceeding. I have not had the opportunity of reading more than the report that has been filed in this case. I am compelled, however, to convert myself into a juror. I conceive myself to be sworn as a juror. Considering the position that you and I are in, that we must in voting upon this amendment find these accused guilty in fact, unfit to hold office under the Government of America, or say that we do not have sufficient evidence to find them so. That is the American way, and I conceive myself to be bound by this sort of an oath:

> You do solemnly swear that you will well and truly try and true deliverance make between the government and the prisoner whom you shall have in charge and a true verdict give according to the evidence thereon, so help you God.

Until I got to thinking about it I hardly knew why that was at the end of the oath, "so help you God." It is a prayer rather than the administration of an oath that has been embodied in the law of our land. You are embarking upon such an important matter that I charge you that you summon to your aid the help of God in directing you in such an important matter.

I would not, if I could avoid it, be a juror in this case, but by virtue of my membership in this House I am essentially converted into the position of a juror. Mr. Ickes has said concerning this matter—and I get it from the paper—"To brand him"—and he had reference to just one who was in his department—"and kick him out of the Government in the fashion proposed would be an outrage against the Bill of Rights and a travesty on democracy." I call your attention to the fact that Mr. Ickes does not say, "A travesty upon justice," but he says, "The procedure by which it is proposed to arrive at this very serious and important result is a travesty upon democracy."

I am convinced that he is right, but it applies to the House and not to this committee, and I cannot vote to sustain this finding, resulting, as I view it, in doing harm to our democracy and violating the Bill of Rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, it is with great regret that I take issue with a committee of which I am a member in bringing in the report recommending that three gentlemen be deprived of employment by the United States because of opinions which they have been alleged to have expressed or because of some alleged association with organizations denominated by the Kerr committee as subversive, under a definition which they have offered under their own ipse dixit in this Congress.

I read the definition which they have given to the Congress:

> Subversive activity in this country derives from conduct intentionally destructive of or inimical to the Government of the United States—that which seeks to undermine its institutions, or to distort its functions, or to impede its projects, or to lessen its efforts, the ultimate end being to overturn it all. Such activity may be open and direct as by effort to overthrow, or subtle and indirect as by sabotage.

Having set up that definition, having adopted it and hugged it to their bosom, they now proceed to characterize three distinguished intellectuals of the United States as guilty of subversive activity.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Is not that definition quite contrary to the edict of the United States Supreme Court as to what is subversive?

Mr. COFFEE. Contrary to a line of decisions handed down by the United States Supreme Court for a period of 145 years; diametrically and categorically in opposition to the whole line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. I yield briefly.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Would the gentleman cite one decision?

Mr. COFFEE. Myers against United States is one. I do not have my brief with me at the moment.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Does it define "subversive"?

Mr. COFFEE. No; but I am talking about the whole philosophy about what is subversive activity in the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. You say the Supreme Court has a line of decisions for 145 years?

Mr. COFFEE. I cannot give the exact citations now, but I will get my brief and give them during the discussion on this bill.

One of the gentlemen is Dr. William E. Dodd, Jr., the son of a former Ambassador to Germany, a distinguished son of North Carolina, who is well known to the members of the North Carolina delegation, a man who came from 250 years of distinguished American antecedents. He is a doctor of philosophy. He is a graduate of leading American institutions. Yet this committee, and the Congress, if the Congress follows it through, would seek to blacken that man throughout his life as being guilty of subversive activities, when perhaps he was just a little more advanced in his thinking than some of the rest of us and saw the dark clouds on the horizon a few years ahead of us and was active in his opposition to fascism, and thereby ran head on into certain people who did not agree with his expressions.

Here is a statement from the Washington Post, which is far from being a radical newspaper, in which it characterizes the proposed action of Congress in this respect as virtually a bill of attainder. An editorial which appeared in the Washington Post under date of May 13 denounces this action of Congress in no uncertain terms. In the same paper in another editorial 2 days later they went into the subject in a little more detail.

What is this crime of which these men are guilty? It is that either they have been the sponsors of some organization, have addressed some organization, donated to some organization which someone, somewhere, somehow said in his opinion was inimical or acting in a manner inimical to the best interests of the United States. There is not a finding anywhere in the report of the Kerr committee that any of the gentlemen so characterized was guilty of advocating the overthrow of the American Government by force and violence. There is no charge anywhere in the committee or in the hearings to the effect that any of these distinguished intellectuals advocated the overthrow of this Government.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman be kind enough to remain when I have the privilege of addressing this House? I think he will learn something, and would not be so exercised and make the statements he is now making, which do not comport with the truth at all.

Mr. COFFEE. I will be glad to remain.

Mr. KEEFE. I will give you some facts instead of a lot of generalities.

Mr. COFFEE. I will be glad to remain and listen to anything the gentleman has to say. My argument is directed to the procedure whereby the Congress, through this subtle manner, if we want to resort to the use of the word—is denying due process of law to Federal employees accused of subversive activity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE. My objection is to the procedure and to the precedent we are seeking here to establish. Shakespeare said:

Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

We in Congress are sitting here as judge, as jury, and as prosecutor. The Kerr committee did not accord to these men who are under examination anything more than permission to come up and present their answers in writing, or orally, to the charges which had been made against them. No opportunity was vouchsafed to the men under discussion to come before the committee with counsel nor to produce their own witnesses, nor to have the right of subpena, nor to have a copy of the transcript of the proceedings, nor an opportunity granted to them therefore to review the charges which were made against them. We are attempting to do something today which is unconstitutional. We are attempting to impeach men by methods other than impeachment. No articles of impeachment have been drawn up in the House of Representatives nor presented to the Senate against public officials of the United States, and these gentlemen are public officials. No attempt has been made to follow constitutional procedure, but an attempt has been made to circumvent the Constitution by adopting legislation which has the effect of a bill of attainder, one of the fundamental things against which our colonial forefathers sought separation from the mother country 160 years ago.

Mr. Chairman, we are proceeding on a dangerous course. One of the "four freedoms" for which this war is being fought is the freedom of speech and yet we are trying to deny the freedom of speech to distinguished citizens who come from as distinguished ancestors as those from which any Member of Congress in this House of Representatives has descended.

How may we rationalize this proposed purge of liberals from Federal employment? This attempted pogrom is congressional usurpation of office. We, as legislators, are trespassing upon Executive prerogatives. See decision of the United States Supreme Court in the famous case of Myers against the United States. Does the Bill of Rights and freedom of opinion have no application to Federal employees? Have we two standards of freedom of speech, one for nonemployees and another for Federal employees?

The editorial from the Washington Post to which I have heretofore referred is as follows:

BILL OF ATTAINDER

The House Appropriations Committee has urged upon Congress a procedure fraught with the gravest danger to American institutions. It has recommended attachment to the next convenient appropriation bill of an amendment providing that "no part of this or any other appropriation shall be used to pay the salaries of Goodwin B. Watson and William E. Dodd, Jr." If Congress follows such a course, it will be guilty at once of legislation in the nature of a bill of attainder and of a gross usurpation of executive authority.

The two men named in this curious provision are employees of the Federal Communications Commission. Responsibility for determining their qualification for public office rests with the Federal Communications Commission. Under the law no Government agency may employ any person who advocates or has "membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States." Neither of these men has been found guilty of, or has even been charged with, such advocacy or such membership. They have merely been accused, through the star-chamber proceedings of a congressional committee, of something vaguely termed subversive activity. The methods pursued by this committee were a travesty on the judicial processes which have enabled Americans to think of themselves as freemen.

Congress may properly write into law standards for the employment of Government personnel. It may properly hold any Federal agency accountable for adherence to such standards. But the proposed amendment goes far beyond such powers. It would dismiss from Government service individual employees on shadowy grounds which have never been enacted into law. This is not the first attempt of its kind. Some months ago the House threatened to deny salary payments to a Treasury Department employee, Dean Pickens, on the basis of similarly tenuous charges by the Dies committee. Happily a regard for civil rights prevailed. Several years ago the National Labor Relations Board was specifically forbidden to pay any of its funds to a particular staff member. The present provision goes to even more fantastic lengths. It declares that no part of any appropriation may be used to pay salaries to these individuals who have incurred congressional displeasure. In other words, this rider may be pasted onto the appropriation bill for the Department of the Interior or for the Navy and yet strike at two employees of the Federal Communications Committee.

But the injustice threatened to these individuals is transcended in importance by the threat which such action raises against the tripartite basis of the American system of Government. If Congress removes these men from office through the disingenuous procedure recommended by the House Appropriations Committee, it will be acting at once as legislature, executive, and judiciary. The Constitution vests appointive power in the President. The corollary of this power, authority to remove Federal officials, as the Supreme Court clearly held in the case of Myers v. the United States, also rests in the Executive. Only through the well-defined impeachment proceedings established by the Constitution may Congress properly remove from office a member of the executive branch of the Government.

This is elementary to the separation of powers which the founding fathers considered essential to liberty. If Congress can oust executive officers at will, then we are subject to nothing short of legislative despotism. Conceivably, by a simple majority vote, the legislature could refuse to appropriate funds for the payment of a salary to members of the Cabinet, or even to the President himself. Its rule would become absolute. The Members of Congress would do well to remember that dictatorship is no less dictatorial and no less alien to American traditions when exercised by many men as when exercised by one man alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, if it came down to a question of firing a Communist or a Nazi—dismissing someone like that—I think both I and the gentleman from Washington, who spoke before me, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] and every Member of this House would vote unanimously to dispose of any such individual; but let us have proof that they are Nazis or Communists; let us have definite proof; let us not get down to the position now where this Congress is going to start regulating a man's mind—his way of thinking. Whenever any of us become that great and that important—that he can start regulating a man's thought, his way of thinking—he had better resign from this Congress because he has become too big for the job. What would you think of GEORGE SADOWSKI trying to regulate his colleagues' minds—the mind of the gentleman from Michigan here [Mr. HOFFMAN] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] or the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]? These men are educated; they are independent thinkers; they have their own minds; they have studied our problems and certainly know just as much as I do; and it would be too bad for me or any other Member of this body to stand up and try to regulate their minds; try to tell them how they should think; try to tell them what letters they should write; try to tell them what they should put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It all simmers down to this: I am not going to quote any court cases, as did my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]; there is no need to quote a lot of decisions; I do not have them and I do not think it is necessary in this discussion. I think it all simmers down to the use of just a little ordinary horse sense—plain thinking for all of us. We have a lot of people in the United States of America—a lot of people who think differently than you and I do. There are a lot of sections in this country—North, South, East, and West—and we have all had experience with all kinds of people who think differently, but these thoughts are not inimical to the United States of America. These people are not Communists; they are not Nazis; they have a right to think. The people of this country have thought differently for years, and that is what has made this country a great country. Down in Michigan we have a man by the name of Father Coughlin; another famous radio personality, Gerald K. Smith. I do not agree with them. We listen to what they say on the radio and if we do not like it we turn the radio off; but we are not going to come out here and say that all these people who think differently than we do must adjust their reasoning to conform with ours. When a man and his family have lived in this country 250 years he cannot be entirely wrong. I think we had better get down to earth and not let this war get us off our steady thinking here. We better be just a little bit liberal in looking at the other man and at his way of thinking.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADOWSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The Civil Service Commission denies employment to individuals who are physically ill. Does the gentleman think we ought to deny employment to those who are mentally ill?

Mr. SADOWSKI. If they are mentally ill, I think they should; but I still think if they just do not agree with me I am not going to say, "You are a crackpot," because in 2 or 3 years from now, after giving a little thought to some subject, I might change my mind.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADOWSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. What worries me is that my constituents do regulate my mind. I do not think I could be elected if I belonged to those organizations that have been mentioned. I do not think they would employ me. I regard this employment matter as not so serious as some people try to picture it. I could not hold my job under those circumstances.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I grant you that you are right. My constituents expect me to represent them properly, and that is what I am trying to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that Congress is forgetting its functions and striving to branch out from the legislative to the executive field. This implies no criticism of the subcommittee delegated to do this job.

If the Appropriations Committee is going to dominate the executive departments through the exercise of its control over the purse strings, then it seems to me that a great deal of time and effort is being wasted by having the regular standing committees of the House meet, discuss measures, vote them out, pass them, only to find that their effort has been wasted motion for the reason that the Appropriations Committee may in its wisdom say, "Sorry, gentlemen, but we do not like the activity you propose or the men engaged in operating it, and so we are not disposed to grant the department charged with the carrying out of the provisions of that particular bill the necessary funds."

I can conceive of that being a legal function of the committee; I can even conceive of its occurring at any time.

But what I cannot conceive is that the Appropriations Committee is legally authorized to say to an executive department, "You may not employ John Jones or Jim Smith or Ed Brown, because in the judgment of this committee they are unfit for Government service because these men have engaged in subversive activities. They have individually at divers times expressed ideas, either orally or in writing, which this committee deems subversive." The committee is a legislative committee; by no stretch of the imagination can it be said to be a judicial body or the agent of a judicial body. True, it holds hearings. It questions these alleged subversive persons. It assumes judicial functions, arrogates to itself the right to act as judge, jury, and executioner. It usurps two functions specifically denied it by the Constitution—the judicial and the executive functions.

If it can remove, by the denial of funds, an executive officer, it can in like manner remove a judicial officer or a judicial district, or all judicial districts. It can say, "We will appropriate no money to pay the salary of Judge Jones or Judge Brown or Judge Smith," an authority which would render the judiciary subject to the whim of any Appropriations Committee. If it can do that it can also say, "We will appropriate money to pay the salaries of Judge Day, Judge Knight, or Judge Spring."

Gentlemen, you are getting into deep water; you would submerge the courts and the executive departments, render them dependent upon your will, and thus, in my opinion, engage in a type of subversive, un-American activity that would actually overthrow our form of government, not by force and violence but by usurpation of all executive and judicial authority through what we are pleased to call control of the purse strings.

I do not charge that the committee would do this, but I insist that you could if your obiter dictum in this particular case is legal and not in contravention of the Constitution.

The Constitution specifically prohibits the passing of any bill of attainder or bill of pains and penalties. Since this bill does not undertake to deprive, the persons involved in this case are not being deprived of their lives, it comes under the head of a bill of pains and penalties.

Mr. Chairman, democracy has its very basis and existence in difference of opinion, just like horse racing. If you are going to go out and say, as one of the other gentlemen so well said, that this man must think the way I want him to think or the way Congress wants him to think or the way somebody else wants him to think, then I say our democracy is undergoing a distinct change and, I fear, not for the better.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MCMURRAY].

Mr. MCMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I might say that I have a duty here to do which I do not exactly relish. I do not know all of the Members of the Kerr committee. I do know two of them and I regard them very, very highly. I have a great deal of respect for them as individuals and as Members of this House and because I regard these men very highly, these two particular men I am speaking about, this becomes an onerous duty, but duty it is.

There have been a good many arguments made here as to why we in the Congress should not do the thing we are about to do today. I do not fool myself a bit. I think I know as I stand here what this House will do. I think I can give you the verdict now, but I can also tell you a few other things about the result of the action which this House will take. This House will eventually become the laughing stock of the Nation and it will become the laughing stock of all men of good will and intelligence everywhere.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. At this time I want to express my sincere and deep appreciation for the gentleman's warning.

Mr. McMURRAY. I thank the gentleman. Of course, in the brief time I have at my disposal I cannot go into the charges against these men. I do not know them. I did know Mr. Dodd's father. I consider him to be the greatest teacher I have ever had and the wisest man I have ever known and one of the warmest personal friends I ever expect to have in this world. In my opinion, he is the greatest teacher I have ever studied under, and I have studied under the great in a good many universities. I do not know the men under consideration.

Mr. COFFEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE. Does not the gentleman think the Congress is taking considerable on itself to assume to disagree with the opinions of some of the greatest and most brilliant minds in America? Does not the gentleman think we are presuming a little bit to say that they are wrong and we are right?

Mr. McMURRAY. I am in agreement with what the gentleman has stated.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman have any idea that these people who made statements criticizing the prospective action on the part of the House have any idea of what the history of this thing has been and what we have been up against on it? Does the gentleman think they have? I know many in that group that have not.

Mr. McMURRAY. I may say in answer to what the gentleman has just stated that I have spent a good many years of my life studying the history of political theory and political thought, and I have studied the history of legislative bodies down through the ages. I know something about what legislatures can do and what legislatures ought not to do. I may say that there is a sincere question here that will be raised in any man's mind who knows anything about political theories or about law, and I do not profess to be a lawyer. This action does violate the separation of powers which is a part of our constitutional system. This Congress has the right to destroy, to refuse to appropriate for, or to abolish any job or any function performed in the Government of the United States, but this Congress, let me repeat, has no right to say that Mr. A can perform a certain function and Mr. B cannot perform this function. This power is executive in its nature and belongs to the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate the difficulty of my good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY]. I know he is trying to be as fair as he can be to the Members of this House. I have no quarrel with his attitude, and as far as I am concerned I am not going to quarrel with any Member who brings to the House his views if he feels sincerely that this is an unreasonable proceeding against any man.

I would like to say one or two things as an argument to those who have felt inclined to object to what the Kerr committee has been compelled to do.

You fully realize that a committee on un-American activities was at work for many years. That committee brought in a great many charges. The time of the House was being taken up, time after time, in the consideration of those charges, and the House in its wisdom finally passed a resolution, House resolution 105. I believe that all of the people who have been criticizing this action should take the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 9, when this resolution was adopted, and find out there in what particular they protested against this investigation. I have read the RECORD very carefully and I do not find where there was any protest against the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I recall very definitely when the resolution was adopted, on a voice vote, I voted "no."

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I do not question the gentleman. That is a perfectly safe statement as there can be no evidence on it. But there seemed to be no demand on the part of anyone at that time to go on record on that particular resolution. No one asked for a division. No one asked for tellers or a roll call. There was no opposition to it. It is quite different now.

But let me call your attention to the fact that this resolution delegated to this subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee the duty of examining into certain allegations that had been made with a view to finding out what the previous association of these people had been. It has been charged that it was not proper for the committee to determine for itself a definition of subversive activities. I am not a lawyer. Everyone here knows that. I have been assured by the attorney for the committee that nowhere in the citations of the Supreme Court of the United States is there a clear definition of subversive activities. If there is, then I have been misled. If there is not, then certainly the people who know we were required to define subversive activities ought not to complain over the fact that the committee had to decide what a proper definition was.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Is there not a definition declared by the Kerr committee on page 5 of its report?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. It cannot be said you did not adopt a definition as to what subversive activities were.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. In answer to the question of the gentleman from New York: Suppose he was asked to give a definition of corn. He would have to know what corn was. Or suppose he was asked to grade apples, he would have to know what apples were.

When we were asked to find out specifically whether these people had been guilty of subversive activities and we found that there was no clear definition of subversive activities, the committee had to get a yardstick by which to proceed. If its procedure has been wrong the House can correct it. Certainly the House did not mean to say that the people who compose this committee must do a piece of work, and that it has failed to put the material or equipment into the hands of the committee to find out the truth. Certainly the House would not want the committee to come back after weeks of hearings and say it could proceed no further because it had no definition of subversive activities, therefore it could not do the work the House asked to be done.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. McMURRAY. I would just like to say to the gentleman that the criticism that I leveled here was at the legislation and not at the committee; it was leveled at the House and I was trying to do something to correct it. It was trying to do something that it has no legal right to do.

The gentlemen of the committee were given an order and they have carried out that order to the best of their ability; that I am willing to grant. Certainly I know the members of that committee are perfectly honorable men and I am willing to grant that the committee has acted in good faith. But this House, and this ought to be made clear, is undertaking to exercise an executive function through a legislative committee. The committee is not at fault. The House is at fault and it ought to be big enough to acknowledge its mistakes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, perhaps we ought to clarify the issue this afternoon and determine rather precisely what we are going to do. My good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER] referred to himself as a juror as he approaches the responsibility of passing upon the fitness of three people now employed in the executive branch of the Government. He is not a juror because this is not a judicial proceeding. Let that be clear. It may be judicial in procedure, insofar as the Kerr committee may have been able to superimpose or abide by rules of evidence, but it is not a judicial proceeding.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a ministerial function.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is a ministerial function that was put upon the committee by the Congress.

There has been a great deal of shadowboxing and rather shallow argument here this afternoon that does not enter into the matter one iota or lay down one case as to whether or not the matter has not been gone into correctly, as, for instance, the case that is made for the necessity for impeaching these people.

Go back and read accurately that provision in the Constitution. It does not become necessary to impeach them. Moreover, go back and read a portion of section 2 of article II of the Constitution, where you will find that the appointive civil officers can be roughly divided as constitutional officers, appointed by the President with the consent and affirmation of the Senate, and statutory officers, or inferior officers who are appointed under a law that is passed by Congress. If we have to have the language exactly, here it is:

> whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

These gentlemen have been appointed by heads of departments. It certainly is an ineffective appointing power that cannot reach out and take them back from the pay roll.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a far more vital issue before us this afternoon, and it is not Goodwin Watson and it is not Frederick Schuman and it is not Dr. Dodd. They are only symbolic of the real issue before us.

The real issue is whether or not this body, that is charged under the Constitution as the keeper of the purse, without whose action not one dollar can go out of the Federal Treasury, can, under that authority, spell out that power to determine who shall be on the pay roll and who shall not.

Let me say to my friends, to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE], to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MCMURRAY], to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD], and the rest: Would they say that if Mr. Earl Browder had been appointed, that the Congress could not take him off the pay roll? What a strange result that would be. Certainly, I, as a Member of the legislative branch, do not propose to go along with that kind of an interpretation of my responsibility as a Member of a coordinate branch of this Government.

I said that the issue before us today is important. All the self-immolation of Dr. Schuman in his humorous criticism of the Kerr committee that was released the other day, all the theatrical display is not going to play down the real issue that is before us, and that is, to select for the articulation of governmental functions men who are going along with the perpetuity of our institutions and the sanctity of the traditions of this country.

Their freedom of speech is not involved. Dr. Dodd can go down on Marshall Square tonight and make any kind of a speech he wants to, but I am not going to see him on the pay roll of the Federal Government, the recipient of the taxpayers' money, and do it. That is a different thing.

Dr. Schuman can go down and stand beside the equestrian statue of Andrew Jackson in Lafayette Park this evening, make any kind of a subversive speech he desires, and within reason there will be no arrest and no restraining hand, but he is not going to do it in the terms that he has done it under the interdiction and the record that is before us and remain on the pay roll, if my vote can remove him.

Freedom is not involved here. It is a larger question. It is a question of whether or not the legislative branch in exercising its appropriating power is going to determine what people are fit and what people are not fit to discharge the various functions of government. That is it. That is the real issue.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman apparently sets up two standards, free speech of a person who is not on the pay roll, and free speech of a person who is on the pay roll. Who is going to judge the demarcation, also, between that which is subversive activity and that which is not? Shall we do it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. This body must do it insofar as it relates to an employee of Government.

Mr. CELLER. Where do we get the authority for it? Where is the authority for it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. This body is chargeable under the Constitution, dealing with powers of Congress out of which spring the executive functions. We can destroy every bureau in the executive branch this afternoon, if we can get the Senate to concur in our action. This is the body that has the great residual force in this country today. This is the important body, without which these others cannot exist and cannot carry on their functions. That is the thing we have to keep in mind.

I want to delineate for you what I think is the importance of this thing. First look at the ramifying functions of government today. It is one of the fruits of the World War, namely, control, regulation, economic dictatorship on every hand. It is one of those inexorable things that flow out of conflict. You cannot help it. We have to go along with that sort of thing when we are in conflict. After a while, those controls, those regulations harden into permanency. So more and more there has been that control, and it has been expanded with the years.

Look at the things that have been added since 1932. Go over in your minds some of the agencies, such as the Bituminous Coal Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Social Security Administration, the Federal Communications Commission, and others, all of which are exercising regulation and control over the goings and the comings of people, so that today government reaches closely into the life of every man, woman, and child, even now from the cradle to the grave, long before they ever heard of Sir William Beveridge.

What does it take to express those functions? It takes agencies. Look at the number we have today. Sixty-five years ago we had 7 departments of government and 2 independent agencies. Today we have 10 departments of government with many subordinate bureaus that did not exist before, and we have 80 independent agencies of government.

Think of it in terms of personnel. The documents in the Library will indicate that when this Government was launched back in 1789 we had about 300 people doing all the work; just 300. When we got down to 1861, in the period of the Civil war, we had 49,200. When Abraham Lincoln was the Commander in Chief there were 49,200 civilians on the pay roll of the Federal Government. In 1881 we got up to 107,000. At the peak of the World War we had 917,000. There was a progressive diminution and it got down to 565,000 in 1932, and then it began to go skyward. It is now about 2,606,000.

Think of what that number of personnel, if they are left to their own devices, without direction from Congress, can do. Give me a machine of 2,600,000 who think as I do, who think in this direction or that direction, and I can do much with them. One can do something with that kind of machine, if you give him that many people, and do you not think that you could subvert the Government of the United States?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Does the gentleman not think, in view of what he has said, that the Government can get along very nicely without these people and say for reasons of economy and efficiency that we shall refuse to appropriate money for them?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right. The first thing I want to spell out is this. The expansion of functions will continue as time goes on, with an increase in the number of agencies, with the vast ramification of personnel that runs into millions, and the fact is that that personnel, whether they be subordinates or administrators, give color, give force, give interpretation, give body, give direction to the things that government does today. A law that is passed by Congress is just as inert, as innocuous as that pair of spectacles, until some virility is forced into that law by a personality in the executive branch. They interpret the law. They make decisions. They exercise authority. Those interpretations may be slanted and oblique to achieve a purpose, namely, a modification of the fundamentals of government. It is the old story of the human equation. The beliefs, the convictions, the mental processes of those who administer, interpret, and enforce the law in terms of administrative orders and decrees can go far toward altering the whole structure of government.

The packers and stockyards case is a case in point where an agency can by administrative decree, implemented by a penalty, say what a business enterprise can do or not do, or what it must do.

The order is made effective and then it becomes necessary for the affected parties to go before the United States Supreme Court as suppliants in order to get justice, in order to get some relief from an administrator, notwithstanding the fact that that kind of interpretation was never the intent, never was the spirit of the Congress when it was placed upon the statute books.

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly.

Mrs. LUCE. Is there any historical precedent in the long life of this body for the Dies committee or the Kerr committee? Has this ever happened before in our Nation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We had the McCormack committee before.

Mr. TABER. And also the Fish committee before that.

Mrs. LUCE. Yes; and has not something new been put in American life?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentlewoman from Connecticut is asking whether there was a committee prior to the Dies committee and the Kerr committee?

Mrs. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There was.

Mrs. LUCE. Doing a like kind of work?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. There was the McCormack committee and before that there was the Fish committee. I think the gentlewoman has in mind whether or not there has been any precedent for the Kerr subcommittee with authority to sit upon these people who have been charged by the Dies committee and then subsequently bring in a resolution to drop them from the pay roll.

Mrs. LUCE. When did the Congress begin to discharge people for their political convictions from the pay roll of the Government?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think perhaps the first person to be discharged——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman 5 minutes more. Will the gentleman yield to me there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. The first one I remember was 21 years ago in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, brought in by the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Johnson.

Mrs. LUCE. In the history of our Government?

Mr. TABER. I cannot go beyond that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I wanted to make it a little more personal by saying that I offered an amendment several years ago for the removal of David Lasser from the pay roll, which was subsequently agreed to by the Senate, and signed by the President.

Mrs. LUCE. Is this committee a new type of committee in the American Congress?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I don't think so.

Mrs. LUCE. May I ask for the historical reference?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sorry that I do not have that at the moment. I think there are a number of precedents for this kind of action.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I must continue for a moment. I want to stress this afternoon the importance of this issue. Because of the number of people on the pay roll, and the number of agencies, and the diversity of the functions, and those functions to be authorized by the Congress, will be interpreted by some personality in the executive branch of Government. That makes those personalities in the executive branch all-important. Will anybody be so bold as to say that if we can make the office, if we can set the salary, if we can determine the classification and every qualification, that the Congress cannot then pass upon the fitness from the standpoint of loyalty or otherwise of any person who is on the public pay roll?

Mr. SADOWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield just now.

We pass on qualifications of persons in so many other respects. We say if they are beyond a certain age they cannot hold a job. We say if there is a physical disability they cannot have a civil-service rating. We say if they do not pass a prescribed intelligence test they cannot have a rating. There are many qualifications that are made. Shall we, then, not be able to say that we cannot lay down some kind of standard of loyalty and mental direction? I do not know why we have to go into a court of law after letting a subcommittee of our own body examine into the affiliations of a man on the pay roll who, for instance, is preoccupied with an analysis of foreign broadcasting and not be able to say among ourselves by solemn vote that, in our judgment, in the judgment of a majority of this body, we do not believe he is fit to remain on the pay roll, and therefore we take unto ourselves authority to refuse any funds for the position that he holds. It seems to me that that obtains from the very fact that the job exists by virtue of the action of Congress at some time or other in creating the agency and the position where such a person is employed.

Mr. McMURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield briefly.

Mr. McMURRAY. I should like to say to the gentleman that he is perfectly correct when he says that Congress has authority to lay down general rules applicable to all people employed by the Government that are not laid down specifically in the Constitution. Also it is true that Congress may create or destroy any position that is not created by the Constitution itself. But the Congress may not say, "Mr. A may have this job and Mr. B may not have this job." There is a very clear distinction there. Congress does not have that authority. It is an Executive function, given by the Constitution to the President of the United States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to the gentleman that is not a substantial deduction in seeking to delineate the demarcation between the two branches of government. If the Congress can say that the United States Civil Service Commission shall have authority to make all necessary rules and regulations to put a man in a job or take him out, then the Congress can also say, "The United States Civil Service Commission shall follow the following rules and regulations made by this Congress in qualifying a man, first of all to go on the pay roll and, secondly, to remain on the pay roll after he gets there."

We can delegate a rule-making power or we can spell out in detail the question of fitness for office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall want to allude to only one more thing. We are gradually getting to the fruition of an issue that has been growing for a long time, the issue between the bureaus that seek to branch out beyond the intent of Congress, on the one hand, and the Congress on the other hand in the determination of the policies of government.

It is significant that we see so many bureaus that never have any difficulty. Here is the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, under Mr. Crowley; here is the Veterans' Administration, under General Hines; here is the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission; here are a great many agencies in Government who carefully go about their business as set down by the legislative branch, and there is never any controversy.

But is it not significant that our controversy is almost always with the same agencies, such as the Farm Security Administration, the National Labor Relations Board, the Wage and Hour Administration, the A. A. A. on occasions, and some others, but almost invariably those agencies where they seek to spin out and spell out power that is not theirs. The latest instance of it, of course, was the Secretary of Agriculture, who went back to the act of 1938, and then came before us with a long opinion by his solicitor to the effect that in that act that was passed 5 years ago they found all the necessary authority for incentive payments. I never saw such a twisted and tortured interpretation of an act in a long time. That is the difficulty. That is the thing that must be disciplined. When these instrumentalities, these people, these administrators, and their subordinates undertake to go too far, or affiliate themselves with organizations that, by force and violence, or by other means, seek ultimately to destroy the Government of the United States, or are subversive, because they seek to give it an altogether different direction, then it is high time that the Congress of the United States step in.

I say this is a great issue. Either we are going to do this job and do it pretty soon or there is going to be a development of a great and entrenched disrespect for this body.

Not so long ago there came to my desk this pamphlet of about 20 pages in length. It is from the Allowance and Allotment Section, Finance Division, of the War Department. I suppose the youngsters got it out, but let me read to you from page 8. This is under the heading "Fun after hours":

> Meetings of the House and Senate are still the best shows in Washington. The seats are not as comfortable as some, but to any person with a spark of imagination the sight and sound of the country's legislators in one Chamber is excnting enough to make up for the lack of a Mickey Mouse. See your Congressman and Senator, more probably their secretaries, for tickets to the galleries of both Houses.

Sight and sound. The best show in Washington. Great dignity to that, is there not? Great respect on the part of those on the pay roll.

You had better meet the issue now, because bureaucracy will grow to a point where it will lick you if you do not.

Consider the power of Federal personnel to manage public opinion. The Budget Bureau's report presented to the House Appropriations Committee 2 years ago indicated that 153 agencies of Government had a pay roll consisting of 2,995 full-time employees and 31,618 part-time employees on informational work alone at an annual cost of $27,700,000. In a single year these agencies issued 300,000,000 assorted publications of which 283,000,000 were not required by law. There you have evidence of how public opinion can be managed by the Federal Government personnel through the printed word.

In addition to this consider the control of the Federal Communications Commission over radio licenses and the authority of the Postmaster General to exclude from the mails publications which he deems to be unfit or for any other reason.

In addition to the expanding functions of Government, the growth of Federal agencies, the vast increase in Federal personnel, and the potential power to completely manage public opinion, consider the force of administrative decisions which are made by administrators throughout the Federal structure. Farmers can be penalized for failure to comply with 3–A regulations and every citizen is warned on the very ration book which he carries that a $10,000 fine and imprisonment might be imposed.

The War Production Board with control over material can suggest penalties for violation of its regulations. The War Labor Board can enjoin upon an industry the so-called maintenance of membership clause under which an individual worker automatically loses his job unless he complies and joins the unit which has been selected for bargaining purposes. The War Manpower Commission is entrusted with a task of classifying industry and of enforcing its decrees.

Much of this administrative authority is not reviewable by the courts and every Member of Congress knows the heroic and unsuccessful effort which has been made to secure the enactment of the Walter-Logan bill under which Federal courts could review administrative decisions. In a sense we are not so far from that day when a New Jersey pants presser and a York battery manufacturer were punished for violations of the N. R. A. administrative code.

In addition, the essential point about the exercise of administrative power is that it is good or bad in proportions as the administrator, his advisers, and his policy-making subordinates and others interpret and influence administrative decisions. As I pointed out a few moments ago, many agencies of Government like the F. D. I. C., the I. C. C., the F. T. C., the R. F. C., the Veterans' Administration, and others never seem to have any difficulty whereas the F. C. C., the N. L. R. B., O. P. A., O. W. I., O. C. D., F. S. A., and others develop friction with the Congress and with the people.

An administrative decision is, therefore, effected and acceptable in proportion as it is wisely administered in accordance with the Constitution, the statutes and the intent of Congress. The basic truth, therefore, is its personnel that makes government, gives it direction, that subverts government and when such personnel follows a strange ideology which is un-American, which is not in accord with the Constitution, the statute, the intent of Congress, and the traditions of this country, who will say that it is not the responsibility of Congress to remove such a person from the Federal rolls.

No officeholder has a vested interest in a Federal position. In a case of those enumerated in the Constitution, they must be confirmed by one branch of the Congress and provision is made for their removal. That same Constitution also clarifies the method of appointment and vests the power to appoint inferior officers in the President, in the courts, or in the heads of departments. They are, therefore, amenable to the jurisdiction of Congress since those who are before us now are statutory officers.

If we can prescribe the standards of age, intelligence, social behavior, and physical condition by which a person finds his way upon the Federal rolls, certainly Congress possesses the power to pass upon the beliefs and convictions of an individual in determining his fitness to carry out duties, functions, and responsibilities which came into being as a result of Congressional enactment. It would be strange, indeed, if we could prevent a person from becoming a Federal employee or remove him if he did become a Federal employee for reasons of physical disability, and not be able to keep him off of the Federal pay roll or to remove him if he were already on the Federal pay roll because of some strange quirk in his convictions, beliefs, or mental processes. This does not impair his freedom of speech or belief whatsoever, for he is entirely free to advance his gospel and his convictions wheresoever he will. It is only that the Congress determines that he shall not remain on the pay roll because he is deemed unfit in view of his beliefs to translate the responsibilities which have been entrusted to him as a result of congressional enactment.

Let me emphasize once more that it is not a judicial proceeding and need not be. The Bill of Rights is not involved, nor is the question of due process of law involved.

Let me make one further observation with respect to the responsibility of Congress in the exercise of this power over Federal personnel. As I have suggested before, not a single dollar can be appropriated save in pursuance of an act by the Congress. It is the people's money. Congress has the right and the duty to determine how and for whom the people's funds shall be expended and no one will argue that the people of this country intend that their funds shall be expended for the salary of any person whose beliefs and convictions as evidenced by his own statements are not in accord with the spirit, the traditions, the laws, and the Constitution of this Republic.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, if I appear to lack my usual vehemence of utterance this afternoon it will not be because I have any lack of confidence in the position that has been taken either by the Congress or the Kerr committee. The fact is I have not been well for several days and I do not want to become the victim of any undue excitement; but there is not anything about this that should excite anybody, is there?

I have sat here and listened to the statements from the gentlemen who usually have been making the same statements ever since I have been in Congress. They seek in every way possible to find an alibi, to find an alibi some place, no matter how ridiculous it may be, in order to justify the action which they are bound and determined to take with respect to the present amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman has referred to some of these positions as being somewhat ridiculous. This may be a little extreme in referring to utterances of our colleagues, but it is rather paradoxical to hear these eloquent speeches made defending these gentlemen on constitutional grounds, invoking the great Constitution of the United States to protect people who have no respect whatsoever for that Constitution, who by their associations and utterances show they have no respect for it and who are doing everything they can short of getting in jail to break it down.

Mr. KEEFE. First of all let me say that I did not solicit the position on this committee. I was placed on the committee and would much have preferred not to serve, but I am going to tell you right now that I consider this work important enough that I am going to stay on that committee and see this job through. The people of the United States of America insist that this job be done.

It is going to be done and we are not going to be dissuaded by a lot of academic arguments that have been concocted such as those that have been heard here this afternoon raising constitutional and other questions in order to obstruct the attitude and work of the Kerr committee. I did not hear any of these gentlemen who got up on the floor of this House today raise a single one of those questions when the resolution creating this committee was before the House. I recall that I was one of the individuals who took the floor of this House and asked that there be a committee established, or a forum established, before which these men who have been accused of subversive activities would have a right and an opportunity to come and present their opinions and their defense to those charges. It was because of that attitude that the Congress created this committee and gave it a job to do. You said, "Go out and do this job." We have tried to comply with your directions.

How many of you have read the testimony of Goodwin Watson? Not one of you except the members of this committee. You will be given some of that testimony before this argument is over.

Mr. CELLER. Where is the testimony?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield to the gentleman. He knows the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. KEEFE. I cannot yield at this time. I stated that I declined to yield.

You have heard that this was a star chamber session; you have heard all sorts of similar accusations, how these people have been denied their constitutional rights, and all that sort of thing. Let me read just a couple of sentences from the testimony of Goodwin Watson. I am going to take up his testimony in detail tomorrow. Let us see what Goodwin Watson told the committee as compared with what he is telling the public today; let us see whether he spoke before us as some of you who are speaking in his behalf are speaking on the floor of the House this afternoon. I asked him this question:

> Professor Watson, there has been some criticism leveled at the committee because of making some charges against you. Now, if you were on such a committee as a Member of Congress and had submitted to you your writings standing alone as they are advocating clearly and definitely the destruction of the profit system and the abolition of the capitalistic state and the substitution of a planned economy in its place, would not you feel that a Congress having the interests and welfare of the American way at heart should be justified in calling such a person to account?
> Dr. WATSON. Yes; I would.
>
> Representative KEEFE. Now, you feel, do you not, in view of your own statement admitting these writings and statements and admitting your present attitude, your complete error and renunciation of the philosophy which you expressed repeatedly down to 1937 and 1938, that they, standing alone, would be sufficient to put any government on notice and demand some investigation of that; would you not think so?
>
> Dr. WATSON. I would think so.

At the conclusion of the hearing here is what Dr. Watson said:

> I thank you gentlemen of the subcommittee. I think this has been a very real endeavor to have a meeting of minds on a very difficult problem.

Does that sound as though Dr. Watson was subjected to third-degree star-chamber proceedings? Does it not make it clear to you gentlemen as I shall make it clear before I shall have finished some time tomorrow when this amendment is offered, that Dr. Watson himself well knew that because of his own statements, his own advocacy, his own writings, that the Congress and this committee was fully justified in bringing about this investigation.

Some of you gentlemen have said these men are being persecuted because they have opinions different from those of the majority. Is that true? Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I profess to be a constitutionalist. I will defend any place the right of my colleagues, Dr. Watson, or anybody else to assert an opinion different from my own. Make no mistake about that. I will defend the right of Dr. Watson to advocate the abolition of the profit system if he so desires. I will defend his right to advocate in the proper place the abolition of the capitalistic state if he so desires. But let me tell you where I draw the line and where you ought to draw the line. When Dr. Watson and men of his type are unwilling to wait for constitutional processes to take place to bring about the changes they advocate, but who advocate revolution, or as they are pleased to call it, "a sharp break," then Dr. Watson and I part company and I say to Dr. Watson, "When you advocate this revolutionary process, and when you advocate this so-called sharp break, as you are pleased to call it, then you are not willing to submit to constitutional processes; you want to short-cut them as your friends over in Russia did, through revolution, and you and I are going to part company there." Do you take issue with me?

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not yield. I do not think the gentleman can add anything to the discussion at this time.

I want to say to you that I have listened to a great many of these professorial intelligentsias and so far as I am concerned, if there are any on the floor here today I suggest that they speak in their own time.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to call attention to one or two things. I will try to give you the whole story tomorrow. This committee listened to the evidence, as you asked them to do. This committee heard from the lips of each of these witnesses their own story and their own explanation. As I stated, I will be glad to yield tomorrow when I go into the evidence. At this time, however, I want to call attention to just one bit of evidence.

Here is an article written by Goodwin Watson entitled "The Great Choice, Reformation or Transformation." Take that article and read it. It is written by Goodwin Watson, by no one else. It is his statement as to what he then believed in 1934. And let me tell you this, there are two lines of thought as expressed by these gentlemen. One is that you can accomplish a social objective by a process of gradualism. That is the New Deal way as he describes it. You can change our social economy step by step. He points with sorrow to the fact that the Socialists over in Austria tried it. He said those Socialists in Austria did the things that F. D. R. talks about in the New Deal. Then he went over there after the revolution in Austria, and he saw everything all changed. He saw how those Socialists there in Austria who had planned housing and who had planned all these betterments of mankind had been crushed by the Fascists at the point of a sword. All gone now, he says. He painted a terrible picture. He said those people felt that they could accomplish those social objectives and retain them by a process of gradualism, and they failed. Then he goes on in this article, and it is here, and states:

> But you never can hope to achieve a real social objective and a real social change in behalf of all the people without—what he calls sharp break—cutting it right off, destroying it overnight.

That is Goodwin Watson speaking, not me. There is his article.

Let me read further:

> There are four major lines of argument—humanitarian, psychological, economic, and political. Each of them leads to the conclusion that the apparent attractiveness of gradualism is fallacious, that only the sharp break brings promise of success.

Read his article. Now, when he is asked about this thing, what does he say? What is his answer?

"Why," he says, "I just do not believe in that any more. That was the effusion of an academic mind written in 1934."

A Ph. D. from Columbia University, a doctor of philosophy, if you please, a teacher of psychology in Columbia University at the time, and he says that it was an academic effusion of an immature mind. He says, "I do not any longer believe in it. I disavow myself of that sort of philosophy."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I could take you down through many more here. There is New America, for instance, which he conceived after he came back from Europe, after he visited over there. He set up this plan to make over America. It is all here. I confronted him with it.

I asked him, "What did you mean by this, Dr. Watson?" He says, "I disavow that now, I repudiate that now, I do not believe in that now." "How do I know that you have repudiated it?" "Have you ever written an article repudiating anything that you ever said from 1932 down to 1938? Have you ever made a speech that has been given publicity in the press showing that that is no longer your position or attitude?"

"No, I did not think it was necessary."

He belonged to some organizations, and had been having contact and affiliation with others. He is following this party line right down until 1941 and yet he thinks that we are so naive as to believe in the face of those statements, which I will read and present to you tomorrow from the hearings on this situation, that Dr. Watson ha- been unjustly accused.

Why, he brings in a whole line-up of people who say he is a great man, and a fine citizen.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman state what position Dr. Watson is holding?

Mr. KEEFE. Dr. Watson is Chief of the Analysis Division in the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the Federal Communications Commission. He analyzes and writes the broadcasts coming from foreign countries and interprets them for our Army and Navy, and so on. That is his job.

Let me tell you this story. You hear about these people coming to his defense as they have. You have received his letter listing a whole list of people who say he is a great American, and so forth. I had some of those come into my office the other day. I finally asked them:

"Do any of you people by any chance happen to know a certain professor at the University of Wisconsin, whom I named? He has been there for many years, an outstanding man."

One of them spoke up and said, "Yes, I know him." I said, "What is your estimate of him? If you were asked to write a recommendation now, what would be your estimate of that professor?" He said, "He is an estimable gentleman. Why, he has a fine, Christian character, he has been there for 25 years, he is one of the leading citizens of Madison, Wis." And I said, "You would be willing to dictate such a recommendation to my stenographer now?" "Yes, without question." Then I said, "You would be interested in this," and I showed him a very recent report and clipping from the Milwaukee Journal showing that the police of Milwaukee, in making a routine inspection of one of the hotels, found this professor in a room with a 19-year-old-blonde student. He came into court the next morning and plead guilty to a minor charge of lewd and lascivious conduct.

What becomes of your recommendation? You just do not know the facts. You do not know the facts, and if you did know the facts you would not make that kind of recommendation. So, Mr. Chairman, I say to these people who come in on the floor of this House this afternoon and expostulate their beliefs in the innocence of this man or that man, contending they have not had a fair trial or a fair hearing, let me point out to them that they just simply do not know the facts; they do not know what these people have been thinking or they do not know what they have been doing, or what their associations have been. Before we get through, unfortunately, it will be our duty to tell you something about them.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. Let me say to the gentleman that I have refused time and time again to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. McMURRAY. Is it because you are afraid?

Mr. KEEFE. There is nothing about the gentleman or the facts that makes me afraid. I am quite familiar with him and I want no further interruption from him. And let that go into the RECORD, too. I do not like to say that to a colleague from my State, but I know his attitudes and background and I make no bones about that.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I just want to say this in conclusion. Do not get the idea that the Kerr committee is proceeding through prejudice in this matter. Remember this, that that committee is composed of three fine gentlemen from your side, the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON]; and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS], and myself.

Every action that this committee has taken up to date has been a judicial action, despite the manner in which we have been picked to pieces by those who do not like the committee's action.

The action of the committee has been unanimous in every single instance that we are presenting to the membership of this House.

In creating this committee you told this committee what you wanted us to do. We have tried to act in a judicial manner in doing the very thing that you asked us to do.

Some of you are here criticizing the committee because it has finally been forced to the conclusion reflected in the amendment to be offered to the pending bill. May I say to you that no other reasonable alternative was possible in the face of the facts presented.

Now listen to this evidence. Do we need any further evidence than the word of the man himself?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I cannot yield.

What could be accomplished by bringing in every Tom, Dick, and Harry and letting him testify. I will submit the record tomorrow of the charges.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, we are confronted with an unusual situation. A distinguished and responsible Member of this House, made statements on the floor in the early part of this year on his own personal responsibility, to the effect he had evidence that a number of people had been employed by the executive branch of the Government whose associations and affiliations with individual, groups, and organizations in the past led him to believe they were unfit for public office.

In the subsequent debates on the floor charges and countercharges were made. In order to handle these charges the House set up the so-called Kerr committee to investigate and report their findings to the House. It is not historically correct to state that the so-called Dies committee, as a committee, made those charges. The record will disclose that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], on his own responsibility as a Member of this House, made the statements and the charges. As a result the Kerr committee has made a careful and complete investigation of the life and background of a number of these employees. They have the files of the civil service, the F. B. I., and the Dies committee before them. They have called the accused, presented them with the charges and evidence. Furthermore they have given the accused a fair and complete opportunity to meet every charge. As a result, we have their findings and recommendations.

Undoubtedly the Congress has the legal right and power to create agencies, prescribe the qualifications and duties of Government personnel, and to provide means for their appointment and discharge. It further has the constitutional right to appropriate or to withhold appropriations for the support of any agency or employee of the Federal Government. It has the right and power to abolish any agency which it creates; to change the qualifications and duties of officials from that first prescribed; or to remove them from office, by withholding funds for the payment of salaries or compensation. To hold otherwise would be a confession or admission the Congress could create and support agencies and provide funds for employment of personnel but would have no recourse for the abuse of power or subversion of functions by agencies and personnel. This would leave the people helpless and with no recourse for redress of wrongs except by force or illegal methods.

Under such a theory as advocated by self-annointed liberals and self-confessed intellectuals the executive branch of the Government would be immune from control or regulation by the people. Administrative officials appointed by the Executive could violate legislative intent, subvert governmental functions, and change our whole system of economies, and government without let or hindrance by the legislative branch.

I will say to the alluring and attractive gentlewoman from Connecticut, in reply to her question to the able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], if the action of the House in this instance was without precedent and constituted a phenomenon in public affairs the phenomenon we are witnessing for the first time is Socialists, Communists, and their followers and defenders, aided and abetted by self-annointed liberals and intellectuals, insisting that Socialists, Communists, and any person who does not believe in our system of government, have a vested interest in appointive public office and can use that office to change our social, economic, and political system without let or hindrance from the Congress of the United States. It is both amusing and distressing to hear Members of Congress, the press, and the executive branch defend the rights of these appointive officials, who have been declared unfit to continue in public office because of their affiliations, associations, or membership in subversive organizations to remain in public office, because forsooth they say the Congress has no right to remove them.

There is no question of a lack of freedom of speech involved. The question involved is whether or not appointive Federal officials, who by their past affiliations, associations, or membership in subversive organizations should be retained as officials of a government they do not support, and in whose principles they do not believe. No person should be employed by our Government to administer its laws or to carry out its functions in war or peace who does not wholeheartedly subscribe to our way of life and our system of constitutional representative government. No appointive official has a vested property right in his position and when found to be unfit should be immediately removed by the proper appointing officer. Failing to do so the Congress is in good conscience duty bound to act for the protection of our Government and our people by removing such person.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY FUND FOR THE PRESIDENT

The appropriation "Emergency fund for the President," contained in the First Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943, as supplemented by the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1944, and the limitation on the amount which may be expended for objects of a confidential nature is hereby increased by $25,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 2, after line 25, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the funds continued available by this paragraph shall be allotted to or expended for the National Resources Planning Board or the Farm Security Administration or for any of the functions of either said Board or said Administration."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the emergency fund for the President was created for the purpose of furthering war activities. That is what we had in mind in the House of Representatives when we created that fund. All of us want to further the war activities to the utmost. Therefore, I am assuming that there will be no objection to continuing this fund insofar as it relates to anything of that kind.

However, many allotments have been made out of the President's fund for other purposes than the promotion of war activities. It is my desire to see that two of these activities for which the House has refused funds are not in a position where they can be carried on out of the President's emergency fund.

The National Resources Planning Board was given a Budget estimate by the President. They came before the Independent Offices Subcommittee and were given a hearing. They were refused the recommendation for an appropriation. When the bill came before the House of Representatives, no one stood up and offered an amendment to restore that activity to the independent offices appropriations bill.

The Farm Security Administration was denied an appropriation in the agriculture appropriation bill by the agriculture subcommittee. It was given no appropriation by the House of Representatives.

I hope this amendment will be adopted so that we can confine this activity to the things which will promote the war effort, and that the money that is left, about $89,000,000 at the present time, can be available for the war activities as it is needed. I hope this amendment will be adopted. I had hoped that the committee might accept it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the question raised by the gentleman's amendment is not one which goes to the merits of an appropriation for the Planning Commission or an appropriation for the Farm Security Administration. It is a deeper, more vital, more serious question than that. The House has denied under points of order appropriations for both activities. It has denied in the appropriation bills which it has sent to the Senate funds for the Planning Commission and funds for the Farm Security Administration. Those appropriations may or may not be included in the bill when it reaches the Senate.

The real question raised here this afternoon by the gentleman's amendment is a question of the confidence of this body and of the American people in the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. This is the emergency fund for the President and the sum affected by the amendment is to be used by the President for confidential purposes. The adoption of the amendment would not be construed as a decision adverse to the Planning Commission or to the Farm Security Administration, but as a reflection on the President through imposition of a limitation never before applied to any President in time of war. The only interpretation that would be placed on the adoption of such an amendment by the press and the people of the country would be that an unjustifiable restriction had been imposed. The question before us is whether the Members of the House of Representatives, in time of war, in a period of great national peril, at a time when all loyal citizens and all Members of the American Congress on both sides of the aisle in particular, are supporting American arms, are supporting the Army and Navy, and especially the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States. It will not materially affect these two minor activities, but it will be interpreted both here and abroad, both by our allies and by the Axis, as a lack of confidence in the President and the splendid leadership with which he is winning the war and which entitles him to the gratitude of every American. I do not believe this body will be disposed to adopt such an amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a little intrigued by the argument of my good friend from Missouri, for whom I entertain a real affection, when he says that the adoption of this amendment might be a confession of lack of faith in the Commander in Chief. In the first place, it has nothing to do with the war effort in that sense. It seeks only to restrict the use of emergency funds for the Farm Security Administration and the National Resources Planning Board.

I think we do the President a service by adopting this amendment. He may not have in mind wanting to provide any emergency funds for these functions, but when they come to the White House and exercise gentle pressure on him, too often he cannot very well say "No." We simply hold up his hands and give him an opportunity to say, "I am sorry, but I can give you no funds for that purpose out of the emergency fund because Congress has restricted their use."

We must draw the line somewhere. Maybe you have been curious as to the size of the blank checks we have given the President from time to time. We have given him altogether, since July 11, 1940, $631,000,000. That is a blank check. That is a lot of money, if he could dispose of it in any way he saw fit.

I recognize that the President must have some funds for confidential and strictly emergent purposes. There is an item here of $10,500,000 for confidential purposes for the State Department. I would not care to go in and probe and explore to find out precisely what he is going to do with it, and probably lay out some restrictions that would impede the war effort. He must have some latitude. But there are a great many things on the domestic front that are not emergent in nature, and there is no reason why the Congress should be bypassed.

You will find some of these recited on page 70. Take the travel expenses for the Civil Service Commission, for example. Congress is in session all the time. The Committee on Appropriations is constantly dealing with deficiencies and supplementals. It does not take very long to come up here and say, "Gentlemen, we need $400,000 for travel," and it does not take Congress very long to act on such a request. But every time an allocation is made for anything other than a really emergent or confidential purpose out of the emergency fund, it is bypassing the appropriating power of the Congress.

There is still $89,000,000 remaining in that fund. I am not disposed to cut it. I am not disposed to hamstring the President in his confidential operations as Commander in Chief. But I do believe with respect to these two functions, the Farm Security Administration and the National Resources Planning Board, which have felt the interdiction of this House by a solemn vote, that while the bill is now pending in the Senate it should not be possible to go around the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress of the United States by dipping into a blank-check fund. For that reason, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York should be adopted.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. CASE. As a matter of fact, on page 13 of this bill Congress has made an appropriation of funds for the National Resources Planning Board, showing that they have been able to come to the deficiency committee and get funds for this year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly; but for the current year of 1943, to carry on and close up their work. Why, then, should not this restriction be placed in the bill?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. For these two secret funds, of course, there is no evidence in the hearings. Has there been testimony before the Committee on Appropriations justifying these funds, giving some idea as to the necessity for such large amounts?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The House has passed on both of these items, and they have been reported out by the committee. I refer to the funds of the National Resources and Planning Board, under the committee arrangement, and limiting or diminishing the funds for the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. What I mean is as to the rest of the money, the $25,000,000 and the $10,000,000 for the State Department. As to this $25,000,000, has there been some justification for its expenditure?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not a member of this deficiency subcommittee, but I am sure there was some justification.

Mr. TABER. I would say that there was a reason why it should be done.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This amendment should be adopted, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 111, noes 68.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers, and move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri demands tellers, and the question before the House is, Shall the Committee rise?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 71, noes 109.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. The vote now is on the question as to whether or not the Committee will rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. CANNON of Missouri and Mr. TABER to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 124.

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on ordering tellers on the Taber amendment.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. TABER and Mr. CANNON of Missouri to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 133, noes 104.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES

Defraying deficits in treasuries of municipal governments, Virgin Islands: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1943, for defraying the deficit in the treasury of the municipal government of St. Croix because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1943, $45,000.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the item just read. It is an appropriation not authorized by law and legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. PACE. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the additional sum of $45,000 is required to meet the deficit in the treasury of the municipality of St. Croix, Virgin Islands, for the fiscal year 1943. This amount is in addition to the sum of $114,800 already appropriated for this purpose. The reason for the increase in the deficit is due, primarily, to the effect of the war on local revenues. In other words, the war has resulted in substantial reductions in income from such sources as the gasoline tax, the import and export duty, wharfage, excise duty, internal revenues, and so forth. Here is a list of these items indicating that the estimated income for 1943 is about $51,000 less than the actual income for 1942:

Defraying deficits in treasuries of municipal governments, Virgin Islands, 1943

Sources of revenues	Actual, 1941–42	Fiscal year 1943 as revised Feb. 1, 1943, based on actual receipts as of that period	Difference
Real property tax	$50,200	$50,000	$200
Income tax	30,400	30,000	400
Automobile tax	7,700	6,500	1,200
Gasoline tax	10,300	6,000	4,300
Import duty	5,600	2,500	3,100
Export duty	18,000	3,500	14,500
Ship dues	2,400	600	1,800
Wharfage	3,900	1,200	2,700
Stamp dues	2,500	1,500	1,000
Vendue fees	45	100	+55
Tax on inheritance	600	300	300
Court fees	5,100	3,500	1,600
Fees from burgher briefs	5,500	4,000	1,500
Excise duty	18,500	13,000	5,500
Internal revenues	17,500	10,000	7,500
Sundry revenues	18,600	16,000	2,600
Total	196,845	148,700	48,145
Expenditures	311,845	314,700	2,855
Deficit	115,000	166,000	51,000
United States contribution	115,000	114,800	200
		51,200	51,200

So, as will be seen, the Federal Government is, in a sense, responsible for this deficiency.

I am advised that every effort has been made to economize and that the rates of pay of municipal employees are at the minimum. The municipality at the present time is operating on funds obtained on loans from local banks with municipal buildings used as collateral. It is absolutely necessary to maintain the local government and to have these funds made available as soon as possible.

The appropriation is subject to a point of order, but this money should be made available at the earliest possible moment. If the point of order is made, and is sustained, the item will be put back in the Senate and the money will be appropriated eventually. The only effect the point of order can have would be to delay it, when it is needed immediately. In view of the serious effect the lack of this appropriation will have, I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, replying to the chairman of the committee, the only reason I made the point of order is due to the evidence disclosed in the hearings.

It appears that the municipal authorities of St. Croix have a right to fix their own budget. The only thing we have a right to do is to appropriate the deficit. We have no voice over the expenditure of their funds, how much their salary schedule should be, and so forth. This has been going on for years, since 1927. Mr. Thoron, of the Department, makes this statement:

I have had considerable correspondence with the officials down there to convince them that a deficit was not something that they should expect to have made good, and that they should cut out some of their expenditures.

We have already appropriated for the municipality of St. Croix, in the regular appropriation bill, a deficit of $148,000. Now they come back for another deficit of $45,000 out of a total budget of $300,000.

There are many municipalities in this Nation that would welcome the Federal authorities appropriating their deficit. I see no reason why we should continue to pour money into the Virgin Islands, which has a population of only 25,000 people.

I regret I cannot yield to the request of the chairman, and I insist on the point of order. If these requests are to be made in the future the Department should go to the proper legislative committee and seek appropriate legislation authorizing these deficit appropriations and the terms and conditions under which they may be made.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PATMAN). The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 303. Appropriations contained herein may be used to reimburse the Emergency Fund for the President for advances made therefrom to meet pay-roll obligations for which funds are provided in this act.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KERR: On page 36, after line 23, insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 304. No part of any appropriation, allocation, or fund (1) which is made available under or pursuant to this act, or (2) which is now, or which is hereafter made, available under or pursuant to any other act, to any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States, shall be used to pay any part of the salary, or other compensation for the personal services, of Goodwin B. Watson, William E. Dodd, Jr., and Robert Morss Lovett: Provided, That this section shall not operate to deprive any such person of payment for leaves of absence or salary, or of any refund or reimbursement, which have accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I make a point of order against the language in line 3 of the amendment just offered, as follows:

Which is now, or which is hereafter made, available under or pursuant to any other act, to any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States—

And so forth. This amendment seeks to limit an appropriation in some other appropriation bill. It goes beyond this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made in order by House Resolution 105, authorizing the investigation, providing—as shown on page 2 of the report, House Report No. 448—as follows:

Any legislation approved by the committee as a result of this resolution may be incorporated in any general or special appropriation measure emanating from such committee or may be offered as a committee amendment to any such measure notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI.

Under that provision, the amendment is in order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. May I say in reply, Mr. Chairman, that would be true if the amendment offered were limited to this appropriation, but the amendment offered extends to appropriations not made by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PATMAN). The language appears to be rather plain and specific to the Chair, "any legislation approved by the Committee as a result of this resolution may be incorporated in any general or special appropriation measure."

Therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that under the order of the House, 2 hours' general debate—to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself—is now in order on this amendment, at the close of which 2 hours the final vote shall be taken on the amendment and all amendments thereto?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has correctly stated the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PATMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 2714, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

CIVIL FUNCTIONS WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944, SENT TO CONFERENCE

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SNYDER, STARNES of Alabama, KERR, MAHON, POWERS, ENGEL, and CASE.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. REED of New York and Mr. BENNETT of Missouri asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks.)

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from a bulletin entitled "News and Views."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and to include in one an article on transportation and in the other an article on labor statesmanship.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Sarasota Herald-Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1943

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to inquire of the majority leader as to the program for tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. The first order of business tomorrow will be the sending of the tax bill to conference.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that will be followed by further consideration of the deficiency bill we have been working on today?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a brief pamphlet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today and to include therein an editorial from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole this afternoon by including certain editorials and to include a black line graph one column wide and 3 inches long.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, on last Tuesday the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN] introduced a bill providing for the repeal of the law which authorizes renegotiation of Government contracts. The gentleman from Michigan made several observations at the time to which I should like to reply.

He read a letter saying that renegotiation is a burden on small business. He said that it is creating a great bureaucracy which consumes the time of businessmen and regulates their profits without any legislative standard. He declared that the War and Navy Departments have used renegotiation to provide themselves with funds which Congress would not have appropriated. He insists that businesses have not voluntarily accepted renegotiation settlements. Last of all, he claimed that renegotiation is not necessary because all excessive profits will be eliminated by what he calls a 90-percent excess-profits tax.

I should like to answer the first of these criticisms very briefly, Mr. Speaker, and then pay particular attention to his claim that the excess-profits tax eliminates all exorbitant war profits.

First, the gentleman from Michigan evidently overlooked the fact that any company doing less than $100,000 of war business each year is exempt from renegotiation, and the suggestion has been made to Congress that this be increased to $500,000. That exemption removes from the scope of the act almost all small business and therefore the law cannot be a burden on small business as the gentleman implied. Moreover, if he had looked closely at the figures on the companies which have been cleared by the price adjustment boards, he would have seen that many small businesses have not been required by the boards to renegotiate their contracts because their profits were not excessive. The Navy Department, for example, has cleared without renegotiation 240 companies holding a total of $500,000,000 of contracts, that is, small companies. But it has required about 120 companies to reduce their excessive profits and these 120 companies held $13,000,000,000 of war contracts. In other words, they were big companies. These figures show, Mr. Speaker, that the companies cleared by the boards without renegotiation are usually small companies whereas the companies which are required to renegotiate are usually large companies.

There are big and wealthy interests in this country which would be very happy not to have to renegotiate their contracts. If they could obtain repeal of this law behind the cloak of small business, they would be very happy to do so. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we should be careful not to let big business masquerade behind the name of small business, and I think the record thus far shows that renegotiation has concerned itself primarily with large companies who would be the chief beneficiary if the law were repealed.

The gentleman from Michigan also declared that there is a great bureaucracy administering this law. The total number employed by the Navy Price Adjustment Board is about 75 persons, whereas the Army boards, having a larger volume of work, number about 750. This is not a very large staff to handle a total of about 25,000 companies.

These boards do not take up much of a businessman's time. One typical case was started on September 9, 1942, and closed on October 29, and during this period some of the company's officials had to spend about 3 days on the matter.

The price-adjustment boards do not operate without a legislative standard. The law fixes a standing of reasonableness and any more precise formula is not feasible. As the gentleman himself said, any profit limitation formula smacks of cost-plus and I do not believe that he could suggest to the Congress any formula which would not work hardship on small contractors while it gave windfalls to others.

The gentleman from Michigan also declared that the money recovered through renegotiation is used by the War and Navy Departments for any purpose they see fit, thereby preventing Congress from controlling expenditures. Mr. Speaker, this is flatly untrue. After the War or Navy Price Adjustment Board arranges for a contractor to reduce his price, the money so recovered cannot be spent by the War or Navy Department except for the purpose originally provided in the appropriation act. If the price of airplanes is reduced, the money so saved must be spent for airplanes. It cannot be diverted to buying food, paying personnel, or any other purpose except the purpose specified by Congress. Does the gentleman from Michigan mean to imply that if the Army can get six big bombers out of a million-dollar appropriation instead of four that the Army has circumvented the will of Congress? I do not believe that it has, Mr. Speaker. The Army has stayed within the amount appropriated by Congress and by increasing the purchasing power of its appropriation has reduced the need for further appropriations in the future. The money is spent as we directed, but it goes further.

If the price-adjustment boards get an outright cash refund, that money goes back into the Treasury, as the gentleman from Michigan said, and it cannot be expended for any purpose without a new appropriation from Congress. The gentleman from Michigan belittled the statement that renegotiation agreements have been reached voluntarily, declaring that companies must accept whatever Washington decrees. Mr. Speaker, this is not so. The Under Secretaries of the War and Navy Departments can be appealed to by any contractor who thinks he has not been fairly treated by the Price Adjustment Board. Furthermore, there is no doubt about the legal ability of the contractor to appeal any finding of a price-adjustment board to the courts No contractor has done so.

The gentleman from Michigan declared that the Government's procurement officers should be able to prevent excessive profits by arranging for very close prices in the first place. Well, I agree with that in part. Pricing should improve. Both the Army and Navy are experimenting with target prices which may restrict the need for renegotiation. But there are two reasons why the need for renegotiation will never disappear entirely.

In the first place, we are not buying the same weapons this year that we did last year. The planes, the guns, the escort vessels, the detection devices, even the explosives, which we are buying now are different from those we bought before. And we are not buying these things in the same volume as we bought them last year. Would the gentleman from Michigan, having bought 2,000,000 antiaircraft shells a month last year, be able to fix a fair price for them this year, when we will be buying 40,000,000 a month? What once looked like a reasonable price may easily become an exorbitant price, and this will be true as long as the war lasts.

That is one reason why original pricing will never eliminate excessive profits. There is another. Manufacturers will not take these large war contracts at fixed prices without putting into their prices large amounts for contingencies—contingencies like higher labor costs due to dilution of skilled working forces, contingencies like interruptions in production due to material shortages, contingencies like changes in specifications. Perhaps manufacturers should get this protection. But if the contingencies do not develop—and often they do not—all of the money paid to the manufacturer to protect him against something which did not materialize becomes pure profit unless you renegotiate his contract.

I want to turn now, Mr. Speaker, to the principal claim of the gentleman from Michigan. This claim is that we have a 90-percent excess-profits-tax law, which will prevent any excessive war profits.

At the outset let us clear up one fact. We do not have a 90-percent excess-profits tax. We do have a 90-percent tax rate, which is very different from having a 90-percent tax. In fact, the tax bill provides specifically that the total tax on any company shall not exceed 80 percent of its taxable income. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have an 80-percent tax, not a 90-percent tax. Furthermore the law provides that 10 percent of the excess-profits tax paid by any company shall be refunded after the war. Therefore the eventual tax comes down to something like 72 or 73 percent.

This is very different from the impression which the gentleman from Michigan left last Tuesday. He declared that 90 percent of the two and a half billion dollars which has been recovered through contract renegotiation would have been recovered anyway through what he calls a 90-percent tax. He made an error in assuming that there is a 90-percent tax, and he made a further error in assuming that all of this profit would have been subject to excess-profits taxation. There are many relief and exemption provisions in the tax law and there is no reasion at all to assume that all of this money would have been subject to excess-profits taxation.

Therefore the gentleman from Michigan was wrong when he said that, of the two and a half billion dollars recovered be renegotiation, all but $250,000,000 would have been recovered through taxes anyway. He has no way of knowing that the two and a half billion would have paid a 90-percent tax. Indeed, it probably would not. The tax more probably was about 80 percent, because we have an 80-percent-tax ceiling, and the tax may be as low as 75 percent after giving effect to the post-war refunds.

Hence, the amount of excessive profits which renegotiation has recovered but which taxes would have let slip by may run to five or six hundred million dollars for the single year of 1942. No one can fix an exact figure.

The gentleman from Michigan left the impression that $250,000,000 is a small sum of money. Perhaps he also would consider $500,000,000 a small sum. It certainly is compared with the cost of the war. But it is a very large sum compared with the cost of maintaining these price adjustment boards. And—what is more important—it is a very large sum of money in terms of corporate and private incomes. This sum of money which the gentleman from Michigan would not have you worry about can make a few hundred war millionaires in a single year—even after allowance for individual income taxes. Let me show you just how much it would mean to some companies if we forgot about this $500,000,000, forgot about renegotiation, and relied solely on excess-profits taxes.

One war contractor has had his business multiplied 15 times by the war and at the same time has more than tripled his profit margin. Of course, this enormous volume of business and the enormous profit margin on this volume of business has more than offset all wartime taxes. Therefore, in 1942, after paying all of its excess profits and other taxes, this company would have made a net profit equal to 152 percent of its invested capital. This profit would have been 23 times greater than the company's average income during peacetime.

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat those facts. In a single year, this company after paying all of its wartime taxes would have recovered its complete invested capital plus 50 percent in addition, and would have earned 23 times more than it did in normal years. That is what the result would have been for this company if we had no renegotiation to supplement our taxes.

Let me tell you about another company. It also has had an enormous increase in business and has increased its profit margin. The result is that in 1942 this company, after paying all of its excess-profits taxes and other taxes, would have had left a profit equal to 130 percent of its invested capital. This profit would have been 13 times greater than the company's average profit during peacetime. I am sure the gentleman from Michigan would admit that this profit is excessive and obviously the excess-profits tax did not prevent it.

Let me tell you about still a third company. This company did a business last year which was 15 times greater than its average volume of business during peacetime and it had a profit margin on that business which was almost 5 times greater than the profit margin which it enjoyed during peacetime. Of course, wartime taxes did not keep up with this company either. In 1942, after paying all of its excess-profits taxes and other taxes, this company had a profit equal to 100 percent of its invested capital and more than 10 times greater than the profit which it had earned in its best peacetime year. In a single year this company would have recovered its complete investment and would have broken its peacetime-earnings record 10 times over. This would have been the result if Congress had relied, as the gentleman from Michigan now proposes, solely on excess-profits taxes, and had not authorized renegotiation of contracts.

Still another company working on war business had a net profit after paying its taxes last year which was equal to 85 percent of its invested capital, and this profit after taxes was about 20 times more than its average earnings during peacetime. Still a fifth company earned 100 percent on its invested capital after taxes and a sixth company earned about 30 percent on its invested capital and had a profit after taxes 4 times greater than it had ever enjoyed in peacetime.

Mr. Speaker, these are only a half dozen examples which could be enlarged upon if the Congress wished to look into the records of the renegotiation boards as I hope the House Naval Affairs Committee will do in its forthcoming investigation. The excess-profits tax does not prevent exorbitant war profits. In fact, it can never do so since it must apply to all businesses—those which have not been inflated by the war, those which have been inflated a little bit, and those which have grown beyond their wildest dreams. Any tax law which must apply to businesses in all circumstances will allow some of the most fortunate ones to make shocking war profits.

I do not believe that the gentleman from Michigan understands what he is doing when he proposes that we repeal renegotiation of contracts and rely on what he calls a 90 percent excess-profits tax. This Congress has recently laid aside legislation which would give farmers higher prices for the crops they grow. This Government is now engaged in an effort to hold the line on wages, telling the workingmen of this Nation that they must be content with the wage rates they now earn. We are drafting men to fight.

I do not believe that this is any time to tell the country that we are going to let some companies earn 80 percent or 100 percent or 150 percent on their investment in a single year after paying all their taxes. I do not believe we want to tell the country that some companies—after paying all their taxes, mind you—will be allowed to earn out of the war 10 or 20 times more than they ever earned before.

That is what we would be telling the country if we repealed the renegotiation of contracts and placed our faith solely in an excess-profits tax. We would be telling the country that although we want to keep ceilings on farm prices and wages and although we draft men, we are going to relax our controls on the earnings of the corporations of this country.

I do not believe that this is what Congress wishes to do and if Congress should listen to those wealthy interests which propose such a step, I am sure that the anger of the people will come down upon the war profiteers after this war just as it did after the last war.

We have dedicated ourselves to preventing war millionaires this time and I believe we should adhere to that goal. Renegotiation, therefore, is a necessary measure to achieve our objective.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

PROPAGANDA HAS NO PLACE IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a very obvious attempt to invade our public-school system with propaganda destined to indoctrinate the youth of our land with controversial economic philosophies.

Propaganda is both a delicate and a dangerous thing. There are times when it can be helpful to our national life and safety, but the line is thin that separates it from a subtle weapon destructive to fundamentals on which our national structure rests securely. We take great pride in our ability as Americans to express ourselves freely, to permit free expression, and to value propaganda accordingly. But, whether we agree with the propaganadists or not, propaganda has no place in our public schools.

I have here an attractive 93-page pamphlet, entitled "My Part in This War." The title is attractive—we all have a part in the war—but the contents deserve careful scrutiny. The background of this publication reveals its effect, if not its purpose, as pure propaganda—a means of economic indoctrination. The publication is copyrighted by the Consumer Education Study of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, 1201 Sixteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C. It claims the approval of persons outstanding in the field of education. But after reading its contents one is inclined to wonder if these high-minded individuals could have been aware that they were to be drawn into the field of propagandic controversies—that they were contributing to an invasion of our public schools with propaganda?

Under acknowledgments, Thomas H. Briggs, Director of Consumer Education Study, of N. E. A., appreciates the asisstance given by Dr. Walter D. Cocking, Director of Educational Services Branch of the Office of Price Administration, and of the Department of the Treasury, and says:

> As a result of their suggestions the manuscript was rewritten by Mr. Marcus Rosenblume, of the Office of Price Administration, and Dr. Fred T. Wilhelms, assistant director of the Consumer Education Study.

Mr. Speaker, this publication presents another step in the attempt to popularize new economic philosophies in contrast to established American concepts. Contrary to the contentions of its sponsors it is not a presentation of factual information in an impartial manner. It deals with highly controversial matters in such a way as to give the impression that the individual is left free to choose his own convictions. But a careful study of the method of presentation penetrates the thin veneer of subtlety and reveals the use of a cunning method of establishing a definite conclusion. This creates a condition that must not be countenanced.

The most lasting impressions on the mind are created in the formative age of youth, and are apt to become definite conclusions in the adult. How better to establish future national policies and economic philosophies than to indoctrinate the minds of school children? Are we to resort to methods extolled in Mien Kampf? Shall we permit the curriculum of our public schools to include propaganda? Not unless we as a Nation desire to completely change our standards, to entirely reorganize our economy, and even to change our form of government. I do not believe the American people are ready to do any of those things. But, unless we take counteraction now the time will come when we will be helpless to prevent the change.

I would like to point out just a few of the obvious attempts at propaganda contained in this booklet entitled "My Part in This War."

It praises the F. S. A., an expensive creature of the New Deal, a strong controversial issue of a purely political nature.

It urges that grade labeling be given public support. This is another controversial issue recognized as the brain child of New Deal agencies bent on standardization.

It treats the matter of tax collection methods in a way that denies any just claim to impartiality. In dealing with the pay-as-you-go plan there is evident use of the subtle power of negative suggestion to create a conclusion with this statement:

> Perhaps the most important consideration to think about in regard to such a proposal is that it must not be used as a means of decreasing the total taxes to be paid.

This smacks of the administration's arguments still ringing in our ears. Can this still not be political propaganda?

The administration's frayed and oft-defeated spending tax is dragged from the closet and earnestly extolled.

It speaks of the President's $25,000 salary limitation as still a law of the land, and speaks with approval of Government subsidies and other New Deal created programs which Congress has written off the record by the constitutional method.

By such examples of obsolescence, how can this publication attain its ambition "to meet the schools' need for a single comprehensive teaching aid"? It attempts to minimize the seriousness of strikes in time of war by adroitly handling statistics on man-hours lost by comparison with other causes of absenteeism.

It strongly conveys the impression that the press and radio give unfair treatment to Government announcements by distortion to make the news more interesting, that most editors intentionally passed up what the book terms an outstanding speech by Vice President WALLACE, and that the facts on rubber shortage were grossly and persistently confused, occasionally to the private advantage of those muddying the water.

Fundamentally this publication is not, in spite of the style and treatment of its subject matter, a study of wartime economy. It is heavy-plated pro-New Deal propaganda—a struggle of the bureaucrats against acceptance of the will of the people and the judgment of Congress. It is a desperate attempt of those same bureaucrats to use the National Education Association as a means of indoctrinating the minds of school children with "new order" partisan political philosophies.

Mr. Speaker, this publication is being urged on the public school authorities as a high-school textbook. The announcement has created much public concern. The people are aroused over the prospects, and the press has been outspoken in an expression of public sentiment against the danger involved.

The Indianapolis News editorially labels My Part in This War as the high-school pollution book, and urges that Congress should immediately order the book destroyed and begin an investigation of its authorship for thus attempting to use good American dollars for the destruction of American liberty.

Those are strong words, but clearly indicate the feeling of the fathers and mothers of high-school children. And I would like to concur in the suggestion of this outstanding newspaper that the National Education Association "at once disclaim any responsibility for the propaganda and retire from any circulation commitments that it has made."

The Indianapolis Times says:

> There is some doubt as to how much the National Education Association actually had to do with the preparation of this booklet, since it appears under the imprint of a subdivision of a subdivision of that organization. There is a clear trace of Columbia University Teachers College, noted stronghold of leftist educational theory, across its background.

There can, of course, be no objection to a private organization distributing this booklet, but there is every reason to object to the preparation of the publication by a Federal agency at public expense for a private group. And there certainly can be, and is, a pronounced objection to its being used as a textbook in our public schools.

In the foreword of the booklet it says:

> In this crisis "education as usual" is no more justifiable than "business as usual."

Can the charge of propaganda be denied in view of that statement?

Of course, education suffers in time of war. But why should the usual education not continue, at least well through the high-school grades? What objection can there be to continuing to teach school children the fundamentals of American government? They will only too soon be the ones upon whom the responsibility of the Nation will rest. They are the very ones in whom there should be instilled the concepts of government that their fathers and their fathers' fathers created, builded on, and fought to protect and preserve. Today's school children must continue to be taught that the American way of life is soundly pillared on a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, that our Government is a system of checks and balances divided into three coordinate branches—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—that one cannot function without the support of the others, and, most of all, that if one is permitted to become paramount and independent of the others, democracy is dead.

Wartime economy is transient. If the individual liberties that must be temporarily surrendered in time of war are to be redeemed at the end of the duration, then wartime economy programs must be only temporary. Otherwise they will become a permanent national economy under which liberties will be gone forever.

Education as usual must be continued in as far as possible. Above all, there must be no substitutes fostered upon our public-school system in the guise of war necessity.

Mr. Speaker, the dissemination of such propaganda, thinly disguised as impartial instruction and public enlightenment, must be checked. Our public schools must not be turned into propaganda agencies, regardless of the side taken in controversial political issues by any individual organization or governmental agency.

I have no fear but that the people will do their part to stop it. The vast majority of parents will not hesitate to urge school authorities to carefully and critically scrutinize questionable publications offered as textbooks for public schools. They will be quick to question the authority of an organization sitting in Washington, with its roots in Columbia University Teachers' College, dictating to every State office of education and attempting to direct the curriculum in every little red schoolhouse, township central school, college, and university in the land.

The people will also expect the cooperation of their Congress.

In this particular case there is a question as to how far the Congress can go in stopping the distribution of this publication, My Part in This War, even when it is evident that a good deal of time, paid for by Federal funds, did go into its preparation. But Congress still controls the public purse strings, and it should very definitely write into every appropriation for Federal agencies a provision prohibiting the use of such funds for propaganda purposes other than for direct prosecution of the actual war effort. By tightening the purse strings Congress can shut off the lifeblood that feeds the cancerous growth that threatens destruction of the very things we are fighting to preserve.

We need our money for our war effort, not for political books to be placed in our public schools to warp the minds of our children. I repeat, propaganda has no place in our public schools.

No doubt I will, because of these remarks, be attacked from some quarters as reactionary. If so, I wish to refer my critics to these words of Alexander Hamilton:

> A dangerous ambition more often lurks behind the spacious mask of zeal for the rights of the people than under the forbidding appearance of zeal for the firmness and efficiency of government. History will teach us that the former has been found a much more certain road to the introduction of despotism than the latter, and that of those men who have overturned the liberties of republics, the greatest number have begun their career by paying an obsequious court to the public; commending demagogs and ending tyrants.

In 155 years those words have lost none of their logic, sincerity, and truth.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mrs. SMITH of Maine (at the request of Mr. FELLOWS), for 3 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania (at the request of Mr. RIVERS), for 1 day, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 18, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on the Public Lands at 10 a. m., Tuesday, May 18, 1943, for the purpose of considering H. R. 838, H. R. 2209, H. R. 2210, H. R. 2241, H. R. 2527, and various bills for the purpose of taxing Federal-owned land and such other matters as may properly come before the committee.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on Wednesday, May 19, and Thursday, May 20, 1943, on all bills dealing with the Chinese Exclusion Act—H. R. 1882, H. R. 2309, H. R. 2428, and H. R. 2429.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing on Thursday, May 20, 1943, at 10 a. m. on H. R. 2612, to extend the effective date of the act of December 17, 1941, relating to additional safeguards to the radio communications service of ships of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the subcommittee on investigation of restrictions on brand names and newsprint of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Monday, May 24, 1943.

Business to be considered: Public hearings pursuant to House Resolution 98 by Congressman HALLECK.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

419. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting the estimate of appropriation for the Office of Price Administration for the fiscal year 1944 in the amount of $177,335,000 (H. Doc. No. 204); to the Committee on Appropriations.

420. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 11 of the Naval Aviation Cadet Act of 1942; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

421. A letter from the Chairman, Federal Communications Commission, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

422. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting report on lists of papers, recommended to him for disposal by certain agencies of the Federal Government; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

423. A letter from the Chairman, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting the report of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the month of February 1943; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

424. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 7 (c) of the act of May 21, 1920 (41 Stat. 613), as amended by section 601 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 417); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

425. A letter from the Chairman, National Labor Relations Board, transmitting its views upon the amended version of S. 796; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

426. A letter from the Chairman, National War Labor Board, transmitting views of the Board on S. 796; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

427. Joint letter from the War Department, Navy Department, Labor Department, United States Maritime Commission, National Labor Relations Board, and War Production Board, transmitting certain views with respect to the amended version of S. 796; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia: Committee on Elections No. 3. Report asking for extension of time to take testimony in case of John B. Sullivan against Louis E. Miller, without amendment (Rept. No. 454). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 2719. A bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 455). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEA: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 149. A bill to increase agricultural purchasing power and to meet the need of combating malnutrition among the people of low income by defining and making certain a reasonable definition and standard for nonfat dry milk solids; with amendment (Rept. 456). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BULWINKLE:

H. R. 2720. A bill to amend section 1 (4) of the Interstate Commerce Act, to permit joint action by common carriers subject to part I, II, III or IV, respectively, in connection with procedures related to the establishment of rates, and the taking of other action; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. COLE of New York:

H. R. 2721. A bill to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, as amended; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

H. R. 2722. A bill to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to furnish firing squads, color guards, and buglers for funerals of veterans; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. LANDIS:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rt. Rev. Msgr. Edward J. Flanagan, founder and director of Father Flanagan's Boys Home, Boys Town, Nebr., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord, we the children of an all knowing and all loving Father, are assembled here to deliberate on many great problems that concern the people of our vast Nation. We recognize, dear Lord, our human frailties and our unworthiness for so important a duty assigned to us. We also realize, dear Lord, because of our faith in Thee, that Thou art our God, our Creator, our Redeemer, and our Preserver, and in Thee, alone, is all knowledge, and all wisdom.

Therefore, dear Lord, we come to Thee this day in all humility and beg of Thee divine assistance to understand the problems that confront our Nation, and we ask for that special light and inspiration to solve these problems for the greater good of our people, and for Thy greater honor.

Dear Lord, our Nation is engaged in a great global war, a war being waged by powerful forces on the one hand, whose totalitarian philosophy threatens to engulf the world into slavery, and on the other hand, are the forces of democracy striving to uphold and protect the God-given inalienable rights of man. This terrible war, dear Lord, has caused destruction in life and property throughout the world, and we know this has brought great pain to Thy divine and sacred heart, for Thou lovest all men with an intense and holy love. Thou knowest also, dear Lord, that this is a sacred and holy war insofar as it is being fought to preserve those principles of individual freedom for man throughout the world, principles so precious to Thee. We beg of Thee, dear Lord, consequently, to bring about an early consummation of this world tragedy that will insure for the future of man a peace and social security based on man's high dignity, a peace that will enable man to return to Thee, and recognize complete satisfaction and compensation in Thee, his God and his Creator.

We beg of Thee, dear Lord, to bless and guide our worthy President, his advisers, and the Members of Congress on whom depends so much this day. Bless also the members of our armed forces, and those of our allies at home and abroad that they may look up to Thee for help and consolation.

We beg all of this dear Lord, that the world may soon return to Thee, who art the true bulwark of everlasting peace which rests in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. All this we beg through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Gatling, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 33. An act to provide for the establishment and operation of sampling plants and custom mills as an aid in the development and acquisition of strategic and critical minerals which are essential to the national defense.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 2409. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill and requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. GREEN, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. WHITE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Acting President pro tempore had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of the Navy.
3. Department of War.
4. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.
5. Federal Works Agency.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar on Wednesday of this week be dispensed with.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask what committee has the call?

Mr. McCORMACK. Elections No. 1.

Mr. RANKIN. I withdraw my reservation, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

RT. HON. WINSTON CHURCHILL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the membership I want to announce that the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, will address a joint meeting of the Members of the Senate and House, tomorrow, Wednesday, May 19, at 12:30 p. m.

I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker to declare a recess at any time tomorrow, such recess to be subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. After consultation with the majority and the minority leaders of the House and remembering the terrific jams we had upon this floor on previous occasions, with the consent and approval of the floor leaders, the Chair announces that on tomorrow the door immediately opposite the Speaker will be open, and the doors on the Speaker's left and right, and none other. No one will be allowed upon the floor of the House who does not have the privilege of the floor of the House.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, May 24, upon the conclusion of the legislative business and other special orders, I may address the House for 50 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial on Mother appearing in the Fort Devens Digest, written by Sgt. Philip G. Cushman, of Lynn, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and to include therein an article from the Alabama Baptist of May 13, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial from the Scranton Times on Greece.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. LUDLOW asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

BOARD OF VISITORS, COAST GUARD ACADEMY

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the Board of Visitors of the Coast Guard Academy, held May 2, 1943, at New London, Conn., I was elected chairman of the Board of Visitors, and I ask unanimous consent to file for printing in the RECORD at this point the report of the Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy held May 2, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The report referred to follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE COAST GUARD ACADEMY, 1943

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

GENTLEMEN: Pursuant to the act of July 15, 1939 (Public, No. 183, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), the following Senators and Members of the House of Representatives were designated in January of this year to constitute the 1943 Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy:

Senators: Hon. FRANCIS MALONEY, of Connecticut; Hon. EDWARD V. ROBERTSON, of Wyoming, appointed by Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY, of North Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, and ex officio member of the Board of Visitors; Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER, of Florida, appointed by Vice President of the Senate; the Honorable PAT MCCARRAN, of Nevada, was later appointed to serve in place of the Honorable JOSIAH W. BAILEY.

Members of the House of Representatives: Hon. HERBERT BONNER, of North Carolina; Hon. JOSEPH J. O'BRIEN, of New York; Hon. JAMES DOMENGEAUX, of Louisiana, all appointed by Hon. SCHUYLER O. BLAND, chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ex officio member of the Board of Visitors.

The Honorable AIME J. FORAND, of Rhode Island, and Hon. KARL STEFAN, of Nebraska, were appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The Honorable HERBERT C. BONNER, Hon. JAMES DOMENGEAUX, and Hon. KARL STEFAN were unable to attend. The Honorable JOHN W. GWYNNE, of Iowa, was later appointed in place of Mr. STEFAN; there was not sufficient time, however, to replace Mr. DOMENGEAUX and Mr. BONNER.

Provision was made for the Board to leave Washington on the Colonial at 10 a. m., April 30, accompanied by Rear Admiral Frank J. Gorman, Capt. Ellis Reed-Hill, and Ship's Clerk Sandford C. Smith, officers from headquarters. Senators MCCARRAN, MALONEY,

PEPPER, and Representatives BLAND, GWYNNE, O'BRIEN, and FORAND departed on the above train and were joined in New York by Senator ROBERTSON. Upon arrival in New London at 5 o'clock p. m., the party was met by Rear Admiral James Pine, Superintendent of the academy, accompanied by other Coast Guard officers. Prof. H. L. Seward and Prof. G. E. Russell, members of the advisory committee, also joined the Board. At 8 p. m. the Superintendent entertained the Board at dinner at the Mohican Hotel, which was attended by a number of senior Coast Guard officers attached to the academy and other units at New London. Due to unfavorable weather conditions, the ceremonial evening parade of the cadet battalion was omitted. Following the dinner, service films were shown depicting activities of the academy and life in the Coast Guard.

The next morning, May 1, members met for the formal meeting of the Board at 9 a. m. at the academy. Following the custom of choosing a chairman on alternate years from the House and Senate Members, Congressman JOSEPH O'BRIEN was elected chairman of the Board of Visitors, 1943. Capt. Ellis Reed-Hill, United States Coast Guard, was again designated as secretary of the Board and so served. The Board invited Rear Admiral James Pine, superintendent of the academy, to appear before it. At the same time the members of the advisory committee of the Coast Guard Academy present, namely, Prof. H. L. Seward, of Yale University, chairman, and Prof. G. E. Russell, of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, were requested to be present during the meeting of the Board.

Rear Admiral Pine appeared before the Board and explained that in 1932 the academy was designed to house a maximum capacity of 208 cadets. Three years ago prior to the war and anticipating wartime needs, the capacity of the academy was increased to 150 rooms. The cadet corps has now been doubled, while the course has been reduced from 4 to 3 years. He explained how, in addition to regular cadet training, the academy was taking in about 300 reserve cadets per month for a 4-month course. Since June some 1,600 reserve officers have already been graduated and have been commissioned ensigns in the Coast Guard Reserve. He further stated that, by use of 83-foot patrol boats regularly assigned to the academy and of others assigned temporarily, about half of the reserve graduates were being instructed in antisubmarine warfare.

Rear Admiral Pine explained the method in selecting reserve material, which had been limited to college graduates with degrees. Now, however, selections are made from suitable enlisted men already in the service. Mention was made at this time of the reserve officer training at St. Augustine. The training there, similar to the academy's reserve course, is limited to those officers now in the service who have not had previous indoctrination.

Rear Admiral Pine reported at this time that there was an urgent need for additional floating equipment and modern ordnance material for instruction purposes. Although he suggested that at some convenient time Capt. W. J. Moore, Chaplains' Corps, United States Navy, be allowed to appear before the Board in the interest of a chapel, the immediate construction of this was not recommended by Rear Admiral Pine, because of the greater importance of needs directly connected with the war effort.

Prof. H. L. Seward, chairman, and Prof. G. E. Russell, of the advisory committee, were invited to appear before the Board and outlined for it the history of the committee and the part it has played during the last 9 or 10 years in the development of the Coast Guard Academy. They mentioned that the committee had originally been formed as a voluntary body, following the sending of letters to the presidents of Harvard, Yale, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Columbia, asking them to designate a member of their faculties to serve on a voluntary basis. A description followed of how this committee had functioned in an unofficial capacity until an act recognizing the advisory committee as an official body was approved April 16, 1937. It was stated that the original membership had continued to date, with the addition of Judge T. W. Swan, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, who become its fifth member, to assist in matters connected with law—a subject which is important to the training of a Coast Guard officer. It was related how the advisory committee planned a balanced 4-year curriculum, which eventually resulted in the Association of American Universities' recognition of the Coast Guard Academy, authorizing it to grant the degree of bachelor of science. They also spoke of the very high rating now afforded the academy by the Engineering Counsel for Profession Development, an association inspecting educational institutions where engineering is taught.

In reply to a direct question by the Board as to the cooperation between the administration of the Coast Guard and the advisory committee, both members replied that the cooperation had been satisfactory to the highest degree, both with the academy and headquarters.

Chaplain Moore appeared before the Board and described the importance attached to the religious program at the academy and how each cadet, unless excused, was expected to attend a religious ceremony of his own faith weekly. He informed the present Board, as he had done in the past, of the great need of a suitable chapel to be built when conditions were such as to warrant the undertaking.

Ensign N. S. Dives, of the SPARS, then appeared before the Board and explained that SPARS and WAVES received their uniforms, preliminary indoctrination, were taught military discipline and general training as officers at the United States Midshipmen's School, Smith College, Northampton, Mass. Following this the SPARS took a 3-week intensified course at the academy. Commencing June 24, 1943, however, SPAR officer candidates will receive their entire training at the Coast Guard Academy in a 6-week indoctrination period. She told the Board that both commissioned and enlisted SPARS were intended to relieve trained Coast Guard personnel for combat duty. She told the Board that enlisted girls were used to release yeomen, radiomen, storekeepers, car drivers, and so forth. She explained that enlisted girls were required to have 2 years high school and experience in the line of work for which they desired to apply, while commissioned officers must have at least 2 years college and 2 years training in their professional field. The Cadet Battalion Commander, Cadet Vaughn, appeared before the Board. The superintendent and Captain Reed-Hill were excused so that the Board could hear direct from the head of the cadet organization.

Based on its observations, inspections, and testimony adduced from officers and cadets and after careful discussion and consideration, the Board recommends that sufficient 83-foot fully equipped Coast Guard cutters or corvettes be furnished in order that all reserve cadets may be trained in antisubmarine warfare; that modern ordnance material be supplied in quantities sufficient for the proper instruction of all cadets; that officers and other personnel returning from combat areas with information regarding the war and the Coast Guard's part in it, be ordered to the academy to give lectures and descriptive accounts to the Cadet Corps; and that preliminary steps be taken to negotiate with the city of New London for the transfer to the academy of a strip of land on Riverside Park, adjoining the academy reservation on the south, for the site of the proposed chapel.

The Board continued in session until time to leave for the afternoon train to New York, departing New London at 2:22 p. m., except for adjournment to witness the Coast Guard broadcast in Billard Hall, to view the cadet parade, and to lunch with cadets from their home States. The entire Board departed on the above-mentioned train with the exception of Senator MALONEY, who remained in New Haven. Senator PEPPER and Congressman O'BRIEN left the returning party in New York.

The Board wishes to commend very highly the Coast Guard Academy. It finds this institution to be in excellent physical condition; to be an institution of high scholastic attainments. The cadet corps, which is composed of a group of young Americans selected from every part of the country by a competitive examination open to all, is a body whose esprit and discipline are of the highest order. The Board is particularly impressed by the outstanding work being done by this institution while undergoing great emergent expansion, including the training of 2,400 cadets per year for reserve commissions as deck and engineering officers, as well as 475 SPAR officer candidates.

Congressman O'BRIEN, chairman of the Board, remarked on the splendid cooperation existing between the officers of the academy and the cadets. He stated that in his observation the personal interest of every officer for the welfare and solicitude of each and every student could be readily detected. All of the members of the Board concurred in this opinion, and in the statement that these conclusions were most obvious from the personal attention that Rear Admiral Pine devoted to the students as a body as well as from the personal attention that is given individual students. The Board, in conclusion, desires to register its high opinion of the excellent and invaluable contribution made by the advisory committee in its relationship with the academy. The personnel of the committee and its achievements have made a marked impression on the Board of Visitors.

Respectfully submitted.

Joseph J. O'Brien, Francis Maloney, Claude Pepper, Patrick A. McCarran, Edward V. Robertson, Schuyler O. Bland, Aime J. Forand, John W. Gwynne; Ellis Reed-Hill, Secretary.

EFFECTIVE PLANNING

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, the question has been asked many times: On what basis are we functioning as a nation? I have emphasized more than once the necessity for some over-all planning.

We do not seem to have any real anti-inflation policy; we do not seem to have any real financial policy; we do not seem to have any real draft policy. If we are going into the drafting of women, the regimenting of women, or whatever you wish to call it, possibly only into the registration of women as an over-all policy, such erratic action as we have been taking does not make for a strong nation, the kind of strong nation we need to be if we are to win the war, and if we are to contribute strength to the winning of the war and the building of a new and decent world. To clarify my meaning I ask that you read my extension in the Appendix.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by Fulton Lewis, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to insert therein a resolution from the mayor and Board of Aldermen of Morristown, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I take this minute to call the attention of the House to an important contribution that is being made by the school children of Kansas in the prosecution of the war. These children are, of course, contributing in a number of other ways, but here is one which I think is worthy of special mention. Perry E. Nussbaum, of Wichita, head of the Schools for Victory Program in our State, reports that Kansas schools thus far have purchased more than 1,700 Army jeeps. In a letter to Principal Kuiken, of the Dickinson County High School, of Chapman, Kans., Mr. Nussbaum credits that school with the purchase of 6 Army jeeps. It is one of the typical high schools of Kansas and is located in a rural community. A number of other high schools have also made similar creditable showings in this respect. It has occurred to me that the enthusiasm exhibited by school children of Kansas in support of the war effort is worthy of our recognition as well as our commendation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

(Mr. LAMBERTSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

By unanimous consent, a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 74]

Anderson, Calif.	Guyer	Phillips
Barry	Hancock	Randolph
Buckley	Hinshaw	Rolph
Chapman	Izac	Sabath
Clark	Johnson, Okla.	Sheridan
Cochran	Judd	Smith, Maine
Costello	Kee	Thomas, N. J.
Culkin	Lea	Vinson, Ga.
Dies	Lemke	Welch
Dirksen	Luce	West
Elliott	McGranery	Whelchel, Ga.
Fogarty	Magnuson	White
Forand	Nichols	Woodruff, Mich.
Gibson	Norton	Worley
Granger	O'Toole

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 388 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings, under the call, were dispensed with.

CURRENT TAX PAYMENT BILL OF 1943

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2570) to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KNUTSON moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 2570 be, and they are hereby, instructed to agree to the amendment of the Senate to the said bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, with the understanding that we will close the debate on this side.

Mr. COOPER. You have that right, under the rule.

Mr. KNUTSON. I know.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain letters which I have received from Secretary Knox.

Mr. STEWART. I object to the introduction of the letters, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill is substantially the same as the Carlson bill, but there is a difference. The Senate bill has one change that is rather important. It has tightened up the antiwindfall provisions, so that it now applies to the highest of the 3 years 1938, 1939, or 1940 as the base period in determining the amount of windfall.

You will recall that the Carlson bill came within 4 votes of passing the House a couple of weeks ago. The measure we now have before us passed the Senate by a vote of 49 to 30. I call that a pretty impressive vote.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that in the Senate, as in the House, party lines were broken down. It was not made a party issue.

The opposition of the administration to this legislation is nothing new. Do not let them try to stampede you a little later by reading the President's letter. Let us analyze that letter. There is not a word in it to indicate that he is going to veto the bill. This is what he says, in part, and I quote the letter as it appeared in the morning papers:

I am writing you now so that you may know my views and in the hope that a bill may be worked out in conference that I can sign.

I cannot acquiesce in the elimination of a whole year's tax burden.

I call your particular attention to that language. There is nothing in his statement that states that he is going to veto the bill if it comes before him. If I understand the meaning of the English language, the President will allow the bill to become law without his approval.

As I said before, this is not a political question. We divided on it before and we are going to divide on it again.

When the Bureau of Internal Revenue were before the committee during the consideration of this measure they stated they would have to have legislation by May 15 if we were to begin collecting a withholding tax the 1st of July. In order to expedite matters, I have offered the motion you have heard read from the Clerk's desk.

I do not need to argue with you that if this bill goes to a free conference we are going to have a deadlock that will last days and days, and finally end in a stalemate, with no legislation. That will result in the Federal Treasury losing hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars in the form of withholding taxes. That is quite a responsibility, and it is one that I do not think this House would care to assume, especially in view of the urgent need for money that exists at the present time. A free conference means that nothing will be done. You may as well reject the bill right here on the floor and be done with it, and let us get on to other important matters. You are going to be told over and over, as you have been told before, that under the Senate bill, you are going to forgive yourselves a year's taxes, that you are going to charge off the books $10,000,000,000 in revenue. When will that $10,000,000,000 be charged off? Under the Senate bill or under the House bill, we pay just as much this year as we did last year, and we will pay as much next year as we did this year, and so on indefinitely.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes. Probably someone on the majority side will say that you are voting to forgive yourselves $2,140. Now you will pay the $2,140 this year, next year and the year following, as long as you stay in Congress, and when you are defeated or when you retire, the man who succeeds you will pay $2,140. So there is an uninterrupted collection. Those who are opposed to this legislation very carefully refrain from explaining the fact that under the operation of either the Carlson bill or the Senate bill, the Federal Treasury will no lose anything. I call on those who are to follow me to tell me how much I will be forgiven this year, how much I will be forgiven next year, and the following year. I will pay my full quota of taxes every year from now on, as long as I stay in Congress, or as long as my earnings stay up, or until I die or lose my income and then I am forgiven, and of course it is a crime in the eyes of some people to forgive any debt to a dead man, or to a man out of a job who cannot pay. They would rather pin the badge of a delinquent taxpayer on the breasts of millions of American people in order to enjoy the privilege of indulging in a little cheap politics.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has asked the House to instruct its conferees to accept a bill, a part of which I am sure he does not understand, and I know I do not understand. In fact I have never found any Member of this body who does understand all of it. I have discussed it with our experts, and they seem to be puzzled over parts of it. The gentleman is asking that the conferees be instructed to accept a bill which has never been considered by any committee of this House, or by the House itself. Revenue legislation is supposed to originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have not the time. It is supposed to originate in the House of Representatives, but the gentleman from Minnesota has asked us to set aside that provision, and merely ratify what the Senate has done. The Senate has made several drastic changes in the bill as it passed the House, but the gentleman from Minnesota is asking us, and in doing so he presents an amazing spectacle, to instruct the House conferees to agree to a bill, the substance of which and the principle of which, was rejected by this House on roll calls on two occasions. He is asking us to reject a bill that was passed by this House as a result of his own motion. It was he who moved to recommit the committee bill and to instruct the committee to report back favorably with a bill incorporating the provisions of the Robertson-Forand bill.

In other words, he is asking the conferees to agree to a bill that was rejected on two roll calls in this House, and to reject a bill that he himself proposed. If there has ever been a more amusing or a more absurd or more humiliating proposal made in this House, I have never witnessed it in the more than 30 years of my service in this body.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. I paid my taxes for 1942 on the 15th of March. What I want to ask the gentleman is this: If the Senate bill passes, is it not true that they will use that money to pay my 1943 tax?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes, and, of course, you will never pay your 1942 tax if this bill passes. We all understand that; it has been discussed over and over again. Anyone who says differently is straining at a gnat, and swallowing a camel, and is trying to prove something that is an absurdity.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. And the Senate bill treats our soldiers only one-half as generously as the House bill did.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Not even half as much. Our bill had an exemption of $3,500 to the soldiers, while the Senate exemption is $1,500.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman says to read the President's letter. I hope everybody has read it, although the newspapers did not carry it in full. He was sure that the President would not veto the Senate bill, if agreed to by the conferees and approved by the two Houses. The gentleman is straining his imagination, because nothing could be clearer than the President's intention if you read on the second page of his letter the following:

> There are limits beyond which I cannot go. I cannot acquiesce in the elimination of a whole year's tax burden for the upper income groups during the war period when I must call for an increase in taxes and savings from the masses of the people.

"I cannot acquiesce." Does not anyone know that if he does not sign the bill and lets it become a law he is acquiescing in it? Any man knows that.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield. The gentleman is begging the question.

Mr. KNUTSON. I call upon the gentleman to read from that letter one line where the word "veto" is mentioned or where he says "I will veto it."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, he did not say "veto." He said he could not acquiesce.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, he did not acquiesce in the salary ceiling bill either.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If he would let it become law without his signature he would acquiesce. The question is whether or not we want a pay-as-you-go bill now, or whether you want an issue, because just as certain as the sun shines and time rolls on if this bill is sent to the President as passed by the Senate it will be vetoed. We are presented with the humiliating spectacle that we are asked to be rubber stamps for the Senate. The Senate did not instruct its conferees. It left them free-handed to do as they deem best. The gentleman from Minnesota is begging the question when he can read anything in this letter from the President which causes him to conclude, or anyone else to conclude, that the President would not veto the Senate bill.

That was the purpose of the letter, to put the House on guard and the Congress on guard, and it was courageous and fair to let the Congress know that if they sent this bill to him, it would not become a law, either by his signature or by his acquiescence. There is nothing that could be plainer than that. The question is, Are we to have a pay-as-you-go bill? If we are, you need not send the Senate bill to the President, because the time would be wasted. All the time we have employed in writing this bill will be lost and you will have no pay-as-you-go tax bill, but you will have an issue. Now, if you want to go before the country on the issue, I welcome it. I deplore seeing politics brought into this tax matter, but if you desire to go before the country on the issue that you vote here today to forgive yourself an entire year's taxes at a time when our soldiers are fighting and shedding their blood and losing their lives all over the world for the preservation of our liberties and the perpetuity of our institutions, if you want to go before the people and explain that and defend it, as far as I am concerned, you are welcome to it, because it is of your own choosing and you will have it to face.

The Senate has not tied or bound its conferees. It has given them the liberty and the responsibility to sit down with us and work out the best possible bill. The Senate spent only about a week on this bill. We spent months. They hurriedly prepared their bill, doubtless believing that many of the provisions which it had hurriedly incorporated and not given the consideration to which they were entitled, would be ironed out in conference. But we become rubber stamps. We close our eyes. We tie the hands of our conferees. We might just as well not go to conference at all. What is a conference for? Why did you not move to concur in the Senate amendments and be done with it? Do you want to meet the Senate conferees hat in hand and get down on your knees and humbly ask them to let us agree and concur in the Senate bill without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" or the changing of a punctuation mark? That is the situation you will have if this motion of the gentleman from Minnesota is adopted today. It is the most unreasonable, the most amusing, the most fantastical and gymnastical proposition I have ever heard.

The gentleman is standing on his head and turning himself wrong side out on this question. I have never known such a thing to occur before; going back on his own bill. Without his leadership it could not have passed this House. Now he turns his back on those who cooperated with him and says that the Senate knew better how to write a bill in 1 week than this House knew how to write one in 3 months. It is the most absurd and ridiculous proposition that has ever been submitted to an American Congress.

I trust the House will not tie the hands of its conferees and force them to accept a bill that it does not want, as emphatically expressed on two separate occasions. To do so would be a blow directed at undermining our legislative system which we all pledged to uphold.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include some tables and other data.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the House today has an opportunity to hasten early action on pay-as-you-go tax legislation. I do not believe there can be a division of opinion as to the wisdom and necessity of getting our taxpayers on a current basis. Previous House and Senate action has demonstrated by substantial votes in both bodies that we must have pay-as-you-go tax legislation. During recent months there has been a pronounced division of opinion on the method of arriving at the current tax collection. Now that we seem to be agreed on the necessity for placing our income taxpayers on a current basis, the issue has narrowed down to the provisions of the bill as passed the House, H. R. 2570, and the bill as amended by the Senate.

Today the House has an opportunity to hasten final action on this important legislation, and I sincerely hope the House will vote to send the bill to conference and to approve the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], which would instruct the conferees to approve the amendment passed by the Senate.

There are four reasons why we should do this:

First. It is necessary that we complete legislative action on this bill immediately in order that the collector of internal revenue may have time to set up the administrative machinery necessary to begin collections on July 1.

Second. The House should instruct the conferees to accept the Senate amendment because it will bring more money into the Treasury in 1943 than the bill as passed by the House.

Third. The amendment approved by the Senate makes a hundred percent of the personal income taxpayers current, or as nearly current as any bill can make them.

Fourth. The Senate amendment makes the personal income taxpayers of our Nation current without a doubling up or collection of 2 years' taxes in 1 year.

In discussing these points separately I wish to state first that Mr. Guy T. Helvering has advised the committee that it is necessary that legislative action be completed on pay-as-you-go tax legislation by May 15 in order that he might have sufficient time to set up the collection machinery. This is an immense undertaking and we should assist this administrative agency of the Government by approving this legislation today. There can be no question as to the need for the legislation as I think it can be safely said that everyone from the President down has urged approval of this type of legislation. The citizens of our country are demanding it and this is our opportunity to hasten action.

On the second point I wish to state that revenue is most important from a Treasury standpoint and from the standpoint of the individual taxpayer. Much is being said about the necessity of siphoning off certain moneys in order to assist in the fight against inflation. I want to call your attention to the fact that as a result of the windfall provisions and the fact that liabilities on higher incomes will be collected sooner than under the present law by the reason of withholding at the source and current payments, income-tax payments due under the Senate amendment in the fiscal year 1944 are expected to be $2,012,000,000 greater than the amount due under the present law. This is most important and I want to further call your attention to the fact that the approval of the bill that passed the House will result in practically no increase in revenue. Under existing law the estimated income-tax liability for the fiscal year 1944 will be approximately $13,000,000,000. Under the House bill it will be $13,023,000,000, and under the Senate amendment it will be $15,012,000,000. This additional $2,000,000,000 is important to the Treasury and should carry much weight in the discussion here this afternoon.

For fear there are some here who contend that the Senate amendment or Ruml plan is inflationary I would like to call attention to the testimony of Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, as he testified before the House Committee on Banking and Currency on May 10 and 11. He was interrogated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], and his testimony reads as follows:

Mr. PATMAN. It is 12 o'clock now, and I have taken too much time, but I would like to ask you just one more question. Since you say it is highly inflationary to have the commercial banks create this money, and since you have pointed out several things that Congress has done that have caused inflation, what do you think of the passage of a bill as proposed in the Ruml plan? What effect will that have on inflation or our power properly to control inflation?

Mr. ECCLES. The proposed tax bill, you mean?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. ECCLES. The tax bill that was passed?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. Suppose we forgive 40 percent or 50 percent. What effect will that have on our power to control inflation?

Mr. ECCLES. I do not get your point. I do not see that the Ruml plan or the Robertson plan or any other plan has any effect on inflation any more than any other tax bill except that it raises more or less money.

Mr. PATMAN. This is a forgiveness bill. What I mean is this: Suppose you release $10,000,000,000 of purchasing power. In other words, $10,000,000,000 is tied up because it is expected to be paid in taxes. If you release it you release $10,000,000,000 worth of purchasing power. Will that have any effect on our power to control inflation or not?

Mr. ECCLES. To the extent that the people who owe that $10,000,000,000 have actually got it in the form of cash reserves or the equivalent, naturally it would increase the inflationary pressure to the extent that they undertook to spend it. Now, I do not believe that even a very small fraction of the people who are subject to taxes have the cash on hand to meet the taxes. I do think that the larger taxpayers do have cash on hand to meet their taxes, or the equivalent in the form of Governments or some other means of paying the taxes. There may be some increase in the expenditures of people with surplus funds of that sort, but the well-to-do people, I do not believe, would possibly spend a great deal more on consumers' goods, whether this bill was passed or it was not passed.

The third point I mentioned deals with the individual taxpayer and the Senate amendment would make personal income taxpayers as current as it is possible to make them. H. R. 2570, as it passed the House, would make 40,000,000 of the 44,000,000 taxpayers current by forgiving them 100 percent of their liability. If there is any reason on earth for making 40,000,000 taxpayers current by forgiving them 100 percent, then the same reason would compel any fair-minded man to state that the other 4,000,000 American taxpayers should be treated likewise.

I do not see how anyone can justify the inequality of tax abatement in the House bill. Why abate taxes for 40,000,000 taxpayers in order to get them current and at the same time abate in reducing percentages to the 4,000,000 taxpayers who pay 60 percent of the total income tax of the country? If our progressive system of levying income taxes is sound and just in the collection of taxes then it does seem to me that it is just as sound to abate the taxes in reverse. Should the House bill be approved in my opinion it would be unjust and discriminatory to a large portion of our taxpayers. I do not want to treat the American taxpayers in that way.

The fourth point I have previously mentioned in regard to the Senate bill is that it makes our taxpayers current without paying 2 years' taxes in one. I think it is generally agreed by every one that the placing of our taxpayers on a current basis must necessarily cost something unless we believe we can collect 2 years' taxes in one. In fact, there is no loss to the Treasury unless you believe we can double up on income-tax collections. The Senate amendment provides for making taxpayers current by moving the tax clock ahead 1 year with amendments which take care of windfall or abnormal incomes in either 1942 or 1943. The Ways and Means Committee has labored diligently with this problem and in fact it has been the crux of our difficulty. There are those who honestly and sincerely believe we cannot abate taxes and as firmly believe we must get our income taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go system. The discussion during the past few months has been clouded with the issue of forgiveness.

One would gather from the discussions and debate that the Federal Treasury would lose $10,000,000,000 of 1942 tax liability. Nothing is further from the truth. The individual taxpayer would benefit only when his income decreased or when he died. The Treasury would continue to receive increased revenue under existing rates because of increased national income. If the House today approves the Senate amendment and adopts withholding at the source, the income-tax liability for the fiscal year 1944 will be increased by over $2,000,000,000. If we retain the present law, we will collect $13,000,000,000 in the fiscal year 1944. If we approve the House bill, we will collect $13,023,000,000. The Senate amendment, if adopted, would produce estimated income-tax liabilities for the fiscal year 1944 of $15,012,000,000. This should convince anyone that there is no loss in current income or revenue to the Federal Treasury. The loss of tax liability would be spread over a generation of time. In the interests of sound fiscal policy for the Treasury, pay-as-you-go tax legislation should be approved.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I am including the following table showing the estimated income-tax liability due under the various tax proposals, and a short comparison of the Senate pay-as-you-earn tax bill with the Carlson bill:

Estimated income-tax liabilities due in the fiscal year 1944 under various alternatives

[In millions of dollars]

Present law	13,000
Finance Committee bill	15,012
House bill	13,023
Ways and Means Committee bill:
Maximum discount taken	18,623
Minimum discount taken	15,724
Carlson bill	15,263

The Treasury Department has furnished the following detailed estimates of liabilities under the bill:

Estimated income-tax liabilities of the calendar years 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945, under present law and under certain pay-as-you-go bills and estimates of the portions of the income-tax liabilities of the calendar years 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945 which are due and payable into the Treasury in the fiscal years 1943, 1944, and 1945 [1]

[1] Total taxable income for a calendar year is assumed to be distributed equally among the 4 quarters of the year. Calendar years 1944 and 1945 income has not been forecast, but has been assumed to be the same as forecast for calendar year 1943.

[2] Note that this is the only estimate for which the effective date of pay-as-you-go provisions is Jan. 1, 1942. The Senate Finance Committee bill, the House bill, and the Ways and Means Committee bill, are all effective July 1, 1943, except that special treatment of the armed forces with respect to 1942 income tax liabilities is reflected in June 15, 1943, payments.

COMPARISON OF SENATE PAY-AS-YOU-EARN TAX BILL WITH CARLSON BILL

The Senate version of the Ruml plan is based upon the Carlson amendment as considered in the House on May 4. The major change is in the so-called antiwindfall provisions.

Under the Carlson substitute for the Ways and Means Committee bill, the 1942 income-tax assessment would have been abated in the case of all taxpayers, subject to the following exceptions:

First. Where the 1942 liability was higher than the 1943 liability, and the taxable income exceeded $5,000, the taxpayer would have been required, in effect, to pay a 1943 tax based on the higher 1942 income rather than the lower 1943 income, and the abatement of 1 year's liability would have been on the basis of the lower income of 1943, rather than the higher 1942 income. The Senate bill eliminates the $5,000 limitation and applies this provision to all taxpayers having a higher income in 1942 than in 1943. In other words, under the Senate bill, the year of abatement will be the lower of the 2 years in all cases. An exception is made in the case of taxpayers who entered the armed forces during the taxable years 1942 or 1943. In their case, so much of their 1942 income as is attributable to earned income will be excluded from consideration in applying this rule. For the purposes of this provision, the first $3,000 of all income is presumed to be earned income, but in no case shall it be considered to be more than $14,000. This exception will prevent this antiwindfall provision from working a hardship in the case of persons in the armed service whose 1942 civilian income exceeds their 1943 service pay.

Second. The Carlson substitute included a second anti-windfall provision designed to prevent swollen war incomes from escaping their fair share of the tax. As amended in the House in committee of the whole, it provided that where the taxable income in the year otherwise abated exceeded the 1940 taxable income by more than $5,000, the excess should be subject to tax at the regular normal and surtax rates. The effect of this provision was to exclude such swollen income from the benefit of the abatement provisions. The Senate bill makes two major changes in this section: First, it uses the highest income of the years 1938, 1939, or 1940 as the base for measuring swollen war profits in the year otherwise abated; and second, it limits the application of the provision to cases where such excess is more than $10,000, instead of $5,000.

Three other important changes are made by the Senate bill, one of which has to do with the withholding tax exemption, and the other two with the sections relating to the special provisions for members of the armed forces.

Under the Ways and Means Committee bill, the Carlson substitute, and the Robertson-Forand bill, two sets of exemptions were provided under the withholding tax. The 3 percent Victory tax withholding applied to that portion of the income in excess of $624 annually, and the 17 percent income-tax withholding applied to that portion of the income in excess of $550 annually in the case of single persons, and $1,320 annually in the case of married persons, plus $385 for each dependent. In order to simplify the collection machinery, the Senate amendment provides for only one set of exemptions, namely, $624 for single persons, $1,248 for married persons, and $312 for each dependent. This change makes it possible to use only 5 withholding-tax tables instead of 25, as in the several House bills.

Under the Ways and Means Committee bill, the Carlson substitute, and the Robertson-Forand bill members of the armed forces, regardless of rank, would have been exempted from income tax on the first $3,500 of their service pay, in lieu of the regular personal exemption and credit for dependents. The Senate bill modifies this provision by granting each member of the armed forces, regardless of rank, an exemption of $1,500 with respect to their service pay in addition to the regular personal exemption and credit for dependents.

Under the Ways and Means Committee bill, the Carlson substitute, and the Robertson-Forand bill, the outstanding income-tax liabilities of any member of the armed forces dying in active service would have been canceled, regardless of the year for which they were assessed. Under the Senate bill the cancelation is limited first to that portion of the tax attributable to earned income and, second, to the taxes due and payable since the individual entered the service.

In other respects the Senate bill is substantially the same as the Carlson substitute.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes allotted to me I shall endeavor to touch briefly upon the Senate bill.

AMOUNT OF FORGIVENESS TOO GREAT

The bill now before us pays an unreasonable and unnecessary price for putting the taxpayer on a pay-as-you-go basis. In the midst of a cruel and costly war and in the face of a $16,000,000,000 revenue request from the President, this bill forgives over $8,000,000,000 in taxes. It foregoes the right to tax the income and war profits for a record war year. In developing a pay-as-you-go program for the income tax it loses sight of pay-as-you-go in the broader sense, namely, of paying for the war as we go. It leads taxpayers to expect tax relief at a time when the war effort demands tax increases.

WRONG-WAY REDISTRIBUTION OF WAR COSTS

Under the beguiling description of "equality of treatment" it confers a subsidy on the wealthy which the high rates in the upper brackets block us from recovering.

In terms of our actual income—that is, the income which remains at our disposal after paying our income tax—this bill grants the $2,000-income man a gift of less than 4 weeks' actual income. It grants the $5,000-income man a gift of just under 9 weeks' actual income. The man with the $50,000 income gets a little more than 1 year's actual income. The gift bestowed on a $100,000 man is equal to 20 months' actual income, and the gift to a person with a $1,000,000 income equals 6 years' income after taxes. For the average citizen forgiveness is a drop in the bucket. Yet, for a million-dollar man the subsidy is so great that he could enjoy his current level of income without lifting his little finger.

Comparing tax forgiveness with the tax increases imposed to finance the war, we get much the same picture. For all taxpayers with incomes of over $100,000 the Ruml-Carlson plan would wipe out all the war tax increases imposed in the Revenue Acts of 1940, 1941, and 1942. At the $1,000,000 level, this bill would not only wipe out those tax increases but would confer an additional benefit totaling nearly $600,000. I cannot condone such discriminatory enrichment.

The unjust enrichment of the high-income groups will largely go tax free, since their tax rates are capable of very little expansion. For the average citizen whose tax rates can be substantially increased but who gets only a small gain for cancelation, the situation is reversed. His gift is small and is bound to be temporary, while the gift to the upper income groups is large and permanent. In granting a small gift to those subject to the heaviest tax increases and a large gift to those who are not subject to ratable tax increases, the Ruml-Carlson bill results in gross inequity.

CANCELATION TOO GENEROUS TO TAXPAYER

In the course of congressional consideration of the pay-as-you-go issue, I believe that many have lost sight of the basic reason for cancelation, namely, to avoid hardship in shifting from the present system to a pay-as-you-go system. The cancelation now provided by the bill goes far beyond the amount needed to avoid hardship. The House bill went as far as it was necessary to go both in converting to a current collection basis and in forgiving taxes. The Senate changes make it perfectly clear that this bill incorporates forgiveness for forgiveness' sake. It is no longer forgiveness as a means to the end of achieving pay-as-you-go. It is an unwarranted subsidy which increases the assets or the spendings of taxpayers.

ANTIWINDFALL PROVISIONS DO NOT IMPROVE THE BILL

The so-called antiwindfall provisions of this bill do not decrease its inequity. In fact, they do not touch the major windfall which accrues to wealthy taxpayers and they bring in new inequities. By basing forgiveness on the lower of 1942 and 1943 incomes, the bill makes a decline in income the test of war profiteering. It hits the person who has suffered an economic loss in 1943 due to war's dislocations just as hard as it hits the person who has received an economic gain from war in 1942.

The other windfall provision puts a special tax on war incomes which exceed pre-war incomes by more than $10,000. This will hit persons who are legitimately coming into their own just as hard as it will hit persons who are illegitimately profiting from war. These antiwindfalls make no distinction between just and unjust gains. They make a bad bill even worse.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the Ruml-Carlson bill in the first instance, and if the issue were the same today I would vote the same way. The issue now is a parliamentary situation.

The conferees would be bound, except for the fact that the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause, to move between the four corners of the Robertson-Forand bill, passed by the House, and the Senate bill. If you accept the theory they are now permitted to writing anything they please, the proposal to let the conferees act without instruction is a proposal to let them write a new tax bill, which has not been considered in either the Senate or the House.

No one can predict what, if anything, would come out of such a situation. Perhaps a deadlock; delay most certainly. And any delay now threatens the possibility of passing anything that the Treasury can put into operation by July 1.

Now, then, both bills, Senate and House, forgive taxes. Discharge is the word they use. I do not like to discharge tax liability for anyone at a time when general tax-paying ability and revenue needs are the highest in our history. But it is important to get started on a method of collecting taxes where people pay while they have the money to pay. The withholding tax is not ideal; it will not last long. Already employees are figuring their salaries in the amount of "take home money" they get. But the withholding system is the only one we have a chance to get at this time. It is in both bills.

The question, then, comes down to a choice between Senate and House bills. Treasury figures cited here today show that the Senate bill will collect $15,000,000,000, two billion more than the House bill. It will do that by levies on incomes increased by the war. I say that because it establishes a pre-war base and levies at 1942 rates on the excess in the forgiven year. In this vital respect, then, by $2,000,000,000 of additional revenue raised from war incomes, the Senate bill is preferable to the House bill.

Consequently, facing the fact that if anything is to be done it must be done now to make sure the Treasury can make it effective on the 1st of July, and considering the fact that the Senate bill proposes $2,000,000,000 more in revenue, and gets it from war-boosted incomes, the logical thing, it seems to me, is to vote to instruct the conferees for the Senate bill. I shall vote that way.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, twice this House has rejected the committee bill, twice this House has rejected the Carlson bill, the last time by only four votes; once this House has approved the Robertson-Forand bill. The Senate has rejected overwhelmingly the committee bill and the Forand-Robertson bill and has adopted the Carlson bill with some provisions in it that make it an even better bill than the Carlson bill was as it passed the House so far as windfalls or war millionaires are concerned. So it seems to me today we are faced with the question that this House wants above all the proposals that have been presented to it, the Ruml-Carlson plan as modified by the Senate, and that is what the Senate wants and that is what the people want.

The people want to be on a pay-as-you-go basis. They are anxious to get on a pay-as-you-go basis. A few days ago I was talking with a restaurant man in Washington who employs about 11 people. He tells me he has a complete turn-over in employment now every 3 weeks. He said that these men who come in and work for him work at dozens of different places in a year. They make no tax return, they pay no taxes, and there is no way of catching up with them. Unless we increase the pay roll of Federal employees in the Internal Revenue Bureau to the extent of an army we will never get them. He complained that those who paid taxes are paying the bill and he made the statement that if we were on a pay-as-you-go plan he could deduct their taxes from their pay every week end.

The principal objection to the Carlson-Ruml plan from the beginning was the possibility that under it war millionaires could be created. The Carlson-Ruml plan, the last one, largely took care of that. The Senate version of the Carlson-Ruml bill now before us does an even better job than the last Carlson bill. It will be impossible to have war millionaires under the Senate version of the Carlson-Ruml plan.

Under the Senate bill as it now stands we get three things. First, our taxpayers will be immediately current; second, it will bring into the Treasury more money in 1943 than under the present tax program as it has been; and, third, it will prevent doubling up. That is, there will be no doubling up under it, whereas under the committee proposal which we may yet have to face again if it goes back to conference, we will have doubling up for at least a part of 1942 taxes.

The question before us then is, Shall we adopt the Senate amendment and end the controversy today or shall we send it back to conference and go on all summer?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement made by Randolph Paul, general counsel of the Treasury, before the Senate Finance Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, it should be apparent to all that in our effort to make this tax transition there is no perfect plan and there is no simple plan. The bill passed by the House is as simple as any of them, although all of them are complex. Take the anti-windfall provision of the Senate, for instance; the taxpayer in the high group takes as his base period 1938, 1939, and 1940; he takes the highest of those 3 years, adds $10,000 to it, and then subtracts from the lowest of 1942 or 1943.

There is nothing simple about that. You have got to take into consideration 5 years of income taxes, the last year of which has still 7 months to go.

It is a tribute to the fairness and the patriotism of the Republican Members of this House that they have been uneasy about the windfall provision of the Ruml plan. They notched it 5 different times in the House, including the amendment by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] and the Senate notched it again. Six different efforts to eliminate windfalls. They are not yet all out by any means. The two windfalls which Mr. Ruml said should by all means be taken out have not been taken out. He said you should not forgive the capital gains of the man who gambled on war contracts on Wall Street. That is still in the Senate bill. He said there should be a special estate tax for the rich who made large war incomes and then died. That is not taken care of. You cannot take care of those two items unless you send this measure to conference. It is absurd to appoint conferees and give them no chance to improve the bill. The motion to instruct the conferees should be voted down.

It should be a source of gratification to the 313 Members of this House who voted for the bill that was passed by the House and which incidentally had no consideration whatever in the Senate Finance Committee, that the press, on the whole, has been favorable to it. If we accept the Senate bill I do not know whether the President will veto it or not, but that is not our major concern. We ought to do what we think is best and fairest for the country. There is no Member of this House who is more desirous than I to be fair to the rich, but I tell you the passage of the Ruml bill will not be for the best interest of the rich in the long run. I fear an attack upon them if the masses feel they have secured an unfair tax advantage. That attack most likely would be made upon the corporations in which the poor as well as the rich have their savings.

I worked for months last year to get a fair and logical corporate-tax structure that corporations might survive after the war. I do not want to see them the target for attack in the next tax-rate bill. Now, let us consider other windfall provisions of the Senate bill. You cannot ignore this windfall provision. It forgives a man with a $2,000 salary, 7½ percent of income after taxes. It forgives the $100,000 man 178 percent of his net income after taxes. It forgives the millionaire 315 percent over and above taxes. If you vote for that, vote with your eyes open, because sooner or later the people of this country are going to know what that means. The Senate bill redistributes the 1942 tax burden. You have lost an asset of the Government and you can never recover it. The present top rate is 90 percent. To recover the forgiveness of 1942 tax liability you would have to add 28.5 percent for 3 years.

Under the House bill the maximum forgiveness of war taxes, those accumulated from 1940 to 1942, inclusive, was 77 percent. That war tax on the millionaire was $268,000. When you forgive him $854,000 you forgive him three times his war taxes, and you forgive him the equivalent of his net income for 6 years and you cannot get that back. In discussing making taxpayers current the Ruml tears were shed for the wage earner. It is absurd to say you must forgive all taxpayers a full year of wartime taxes in order to do that.

Mr. Speaker, this motion should be voted down.

STATEMENT OF RANDOLPH E. PAUL, GENERAL COUNSEL FOR THE TREASURY, BEFORE THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE ON THE CURRENT PAYMENT OF THE INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX

I. INTRODUCTION

The House of Representatives on May 4, 1943, passed a bill providing for current payment of the individual income tax. While some features of the bill were the subject of extensive controversy, large areas of agreement prevailed throughout the deliberations in the Ways and Means Committee and in the House. The provisions of the three leading bills, the Ways and Means Committee bill, the Ruml-Carlson bill, and the bill adopted by the House—reflect essential agreement on the major issue of current payment. All three bills provide for collection at source from wages and salaries starting July 1 at a rate of 20 percent above exemptions. All three bills adopted the same techniques for collection of other liabilities payable currently, but not collected at source. Only with respect to the transition to the new system was there controversy and this was principally with respect to the amount and distribution of tax cancelation for 1942.

Before this committee I need not dwell on the importance of placing taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go basis and eliminating for the great mass of taxpayers the 1-year lag which now exists in our present system of individual income-tax payment. With rates at wartime levels, taxpayers, especially those in the lower income groups, find it difficult to accumulate in advance the funds needed for quarterly lump-sum payments. They may suffer actual hardship in the case of a drop or failure in income because of the lag in income-tax payments. It is now universally recognized, I believe, that tax payment will be made easier, and that hardship will be avoided if tax liabilities are discharged currently out of pay envelopes instead of waiting until the year following the receipt of income. At the same time, current collection will more adequately protect Treasury revenue, and will guarantee a more prompt and more certain flow of revenue to the Government than does the existing method of collection. By promptly withdrawing purchasing power from the income stream before it can exert an upward pressure upon prices, a pay-as-you-go system will strengthen the Government in its critical fight against inflation.

The advantages stated accrue both to taxpayers and Government. With overhanging income-tax debt eliminated for the great majority of taxpayers, and with taxes budgeted more certainly and smoothly, taxpayers are better prepared to meet the demands that may be made on them by the necessities of war finance. An income tax payment system putting the great majority of taxpayers on a current basis will better prepare the income tax for its role in the enormous job of financing this total war. These points, I believe you will agree, settle beyond dispute the importance of the pending legislation.

2. COLLECTION AT THE SOURCE

The withholding provisions of the three major bills considered by the House are identical. Withholding from wages and salaries at a rate sufficient to cover the Victory tax, the normal tax, and 13 percent of surtax net income is to begin on July 1, 1943. In general, the withholding system now in effect for the Victory tax, modified to take account of personal exemptions, is utilized. The withholding rate is 17 percent on the amount of wages over the income tax withholding exemption and 3 percent on the wages over the Victory tax withholding exemption. Thus withholding is required not on a gross basis but only on the excess of the total wages over exemptions and an allowance for normal deductions.

The reduction of the Victory tax withholding rate from 5 to 3 percent is made to avoid overcollection of the Victory tax liability which, after taking account of credits, more nearly approximates 3 than 5 percent. The 17 percent rate for the income tax is designed to collect approximately the normal tax of 6 percent, plus the minimum surtax rate of 13 percent. The withholding rate is slightly lower than the sum of the normal tax and the first bracket surtax, in order to make partial allowance for deductions. The rates are thus designed to minimize as far as possible overwithholding and the consequent necessity for making refunds.

The amount of each wage or salary payment subject to withholding is determined by subtracting from the gross payment the withholding exemptions allowable. The withholding exemption for the Victory tax is $624. The withholding exemptions for the income tax are the regular personal exemptions of $500 for a single person, $1,200 for a married person, and an additional $350 for each dependent, each increased by 10 percent to allow for average deductions. These exemptions are prorated according to the length of the pay period, that is, weekly, semimonthly, monthly, or other pay periods.

For example, the weekly Victory tax allowance is $12, while the weekly income tax allowance is $11 for a single person, $26 for a married couple, and $8 for each dependent.

To enable the employer to determine the proper amount of tax to be withheld, the employee is required to furnish a signed withholding exemption certificate showing whether he is single or married and the number of his dependents. If his marital and dependency status changes, the employee is required to file an amended certificate to take effect for future pay periods. The employer is entitled to rely on the exemption certificate furnished him by the employee in computing the amount to be withheld from the employee's wages, and if the employee fails to furnish the required certificate, no personal exemption or dependency credit is to be allowed. Thus, the employer is not placed under a duty to ascertain the status of an employee, and the responsibility in this regard falls upon the employee.

The House bill gives employers the option of either directly computing the amounts of tax to be withheld or using wage-bracket tables. If the employer chooses the computation method, he subtracts the Victory tax withholding exemption from the wage payment and applies a rate of 3 percent to the balance, and subtracts the income-tax withholding exemption from the wage payment and applies a rate of 17 percent to the balance; the sum of the two resulting amounts is the amount to be withheld. If the employer uses the tables which the House bill provides for the standard pay-roll periods, he determines the amount to be withheld by reading it from the tables. Knowing the person's marital status and number of dependents, the employer needs only to locate the bracket in which the given wage falls and to read off the corresponding amount to be withheld.

Under the House bill the employer is required to make quarterly returns and pay over the tax withheld from his employees in each quarter on or before the last day of the month following the close of the quarter. He is also required to furnish each employee a written receipt showing the wages paid during the year and the amount withheld. If the employee's services are terminated before the close of the calendar year, the receipt must be furnished on the day on which the last payment of wages is made, except that an extension of 30 days may be granted by the Commissioner. In lieu of the present information return with respect to wages, the employer is required to attach to the last quarterly return for the calendar year copies of the receipts which he gives to his employees so that they may be checked against the returns filed by the individual wage earners.

After the close of the year, wage earners are required to file returns showing their actual income and final liabilities for the year. The tax withheld at source is allowed as a credit against such final liability, and adjustments to such liability are made by additional payments or refunds. For the vast majority of wage earners these adjustments will be minor in amount.

Collection at source applies only to compensation for personal services. However, certain types of employment are excluded from withholding under the bill. The principal types excluded are domestic servants, members of the armed forces, and farm labor.

The House bill will discharge by collection at source substantially the full tax liability for persons whose income consists of wages not exceeding $2,700 if single and $3,500 if married, and correspondingly higher amounts if the employee has dependents. Seventy percent of all taxpayers will have their entire tax liability withheld at source and an additional 10 percent will have part of their liability withheld at source.

Since the provisions of the House bill with respect to withholding were drafted, conferences with representatives of employers have produced several suggestions, tending to simplify the burden on employers which is involved in the mechanics of applying the system of collection at the source. Suggested changes of this nature will be described in a separate statement.

3. CURRENT PAYMENT OF TAX LIABILITIES NOT COLLECTED AT SOURCE

Collection at source will discharge the tax liabilities for most taxpayers. There are two types of cases where collection at source does not discharge the total tax liability. One is the case where incomes are not from wages and salaries. The other case is where incomes extend into brackets with rates higher than those covered by collection at source.

With respect to incomes not subject to collection at source the basic technique is the same for all three bills. This technique involves a declaration by the taxpayer of his estimated tax liability for the current year by March 15. This estimated tax is to be paid at quarterly intervals thereafter, or earlier if the taxpayer chooses. The taxpayer may revise the declaration of the estimated tax each quarter and ratably increase or decrease remaining installments.

In the case of the Ruml-Carlson bill and the Ways and Means Committee bill this technique was also to be applied to the balance of the tax liability on incomes subject to source collection but falling in the higher surtax brackets, and to higher surtaxes on incomes not subject to collection at source. It would thus achieve current collection of the total tax liabilities of all taxpayers, except for necessary year-end adjustments. The House bill, however, provides for current collection only of an estimated basic tax of 20 percent. Any balance of tax liability over this amount is payable in the year following the receipt of income in the same manner as under present law.

Declarations of estimated basic tax are required only of those individuals who have more than $100 of income not subject to withholding and whose total gross income would require them to file income-tax returns at the end of the taxable year. Thus, persons whose entire income consists of wages subject to withholding and only a nominal amount of other income are not required to file declarations.

A special rule, common to all three bills, applies to farmers who fulfill the requirements with respect to gross income. Farmers are defined as individuals whose estimated gross income from farming amounts to at least 80 percent of the total estimated gross income from all sources. In their case the declaration of the estimated tax may be made at any time on or before the 15th of December. Farmers are not required to pay in installments, but they may voluntarily elect to do so.

Under the House bill, to prevent substantial underestimates of the estimated basic tax, a penalty is added to the tax. The penalty is 6 percent of any amount by which 16 percent of the actual net income less wages subject to withholding or the personal exemption, whichever is the greater, exceeds the estimated basic tax paid during the year. In other words, this penalty applies only if the individual underestimates by more than 20 percent the net income on which the estimated basic tax is computed. A special rule applicable to farmers who elect the end of the year filing date provides a tolerance limit of 33⅓ percent of actual net income over wages or personal exemption, whichever is the greater.

Additional penalties are provided to safeguard the current payment system. In the case of a failure to file a declaration of estimated tax within the time prescribed, the penalty is $10 or 10 percent of the tax, whichever is greater. In the case of a failure to pay an installment of the estimated tax within the time prescribed, the penalty is $2.50 or 2½ percent of the tax, whichever is greater, for each installment with respect to which such failure occurs.

This system of current payment of tax not collected at source is to come into operation in the third quarter of 1943 to parallel the new collection-at-source system which begins July 1, 1943. The March and June installments of 1942 tax payable in 1943, insofar as an amount equal to the forgiven basic liability is concerned, will be treated as current payments of estimated basic tax for 1943. When the taxpayer files his return in March 1944 adjustments will be made for overpayment or underpayment of the 1943 liability.

4. EXTENT TO WHICH TAXPAYERS ARE ON A CURRENT BASIS UNDER THE THREE MAJOR BILLS

The current payment features of the House bill place 90 percent of taxpayers on a fully current basis except for minor year-end adjustments. The great majority of the remaining 10 percent of taxpayers are made substantially current. Less than 1 percent of all taxpayers would not be at least 75 percent current, and only about 700,000 taxpayers out of nearly 44,000,000 will have a liability exceeding $90 carried over beyond the close of the current year. The House bill achieves current collection for the taxpayers in the lower brackets to whom it is most essential and falls short of fully current collection for only the 4,000,000 taxpayers who have surtax net incomes in excess of $2,000—that is, in excess of the first surtax bracket. In the case of higher-bracket taxpayers, a very substantial part of the tax is discharged currently because the bill applies current collection to the basic tax on the entire income regardless of the surtax bracket into which it falls.

Under the Ruml-Carlson bill all taxpayers would be fully current almost immediately. Under the Ways and Means Committee bill, all taxpayers would be on a current basis with respect to their taxes on current income before the end of 1943. The 7,000,000 taxpayers who had no liability on 1942 income at 1941 rates and exemptions would be current as to all liabilities, while the remaining taxpayers would be required to pay their reduced 1942 tax concurrently with their taxes on current income during 1944, 1945, and 1946.

5. TREATMENT OF 1942 TAX

Although all three bills before the House provided the same methods of collection at source and current payment, the amount of forgiveness of 1942 taxes and the distribution of the forgiveness were a major subject of controversy. The House bill cancels the 6-percent normal tax and 13 percent of surtax net income on 1942 individual incomes. No problem arises on account of the unforgiven 1942 tax. Since only the basic liability for any year is payable currently and since this corresponds to the amount of 1942 tax forgiven, there can be no doubling up of payment.

The Ruml-Carlson bill cancels the entire tax on 1942 income except for certain offsets intended to prevent windfall gains to some taxpayers. One of these antiwindfall provisions applies where 1943 income is less than 1942 income while the other applies when both 1942 and 1943 incomes are greater than 1940 income, the year 1940 having been substituted for the year 1941 by floor amendment. Under the Ruml-Carlson bill there would in general be no doubling up, since, while the whole tax is payable currently each year, the entire 1942 tax is correspondingly forgiven. An exception is presented in those cases where the second of the above antiwindfall provisions is applicable, since the amount of tax not forgiven under the antiwindfall provisions is payable in 1943, unless an extension of time is granted by the Commissioner in cases of hardship.

The bill reported by the House Ways and Means Committee recomputes the tax on 1942 income at 1941 rates and exemptions and the difference is canceled. Under this bill the unforgiven 1942 tax liabilities require special treatment. Provision is made for collecting them in three annual installments beginning March 15, 1944. To encourage advance payment of the later installments, provision is made for a discount of 6 percent of the reduced 1942 tax if full payment is made by March 15, 1944, and a discount of 2 percent of such tax if the 1944 installment is paid and the balance is paid by March 15, 1945. The Commissioner is authorized to grant an extension of time up to 3 years in those cases where payment of any installment would result in undue hardship.

6. PROVISIONS RELATING TO MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

The House bill contains two provisions relating to members of the armed forces. One provision exempts from income tax the service pay of most members of the armed forces. The second provision abates outstanding income-tax liability for members of the armed forces who die while on active service. The provisions in the House bill are identical with those contained in the Ruml-Carlson bill and in the Ways and Means Committee bill.

Under present law there is provided an exclusion from gross income in the case of personnel below the grade of commissioned officer in the military and naval forces of the United States. The amount excluded under this provision is not to exceed $250 in the case of a single person and $300 in the case of a married person or head of a family and applies only to salary or compensation received for active service in the armed forces during the present war. These exclusions are in addition to the personal exemptions.

The House bill proposes to amend this provision by increasing the exclusion from gross income in the case of military and naval personnel, without distinction as to rank, with respect to the compensation received during any taxable year for active service during the present war. The amount so excluded is not to exceed the excess of $3,500 over the personal exemption claimed by the member of the military or naval forces. If such member of the armed forces is married and living with his spouse on the last day of the taxable year and his spouse is not a member of the military or naval forces, the amount of the exclusion is not to exceed the excess of $3,500 over the personal exemption claimed by both the spouse and the member of the military or naval forces. Thus, under this provision, the amount of service pay which may be excluded from gross income in the case of a married person is the same regardless of whether joint or separate returns are filed and regardless of the property law of any State. The amendment would apply with respect to all compensation received after December 31, 1941, by a member of the armed forces of the United States for active service in such forces, and is thus retroactive to the year 1942.

Under another provision of the House bill, members of the armed forces who die in active service are relieved from income taxes for the taxable year in which falls the date of death. In addition, there is abated all income taxes (including interest and additions to tax) which are unpaid as of the date of death. If the amount of any such liability which was unpaid as of the date of death is collected subsequent to such date, provision is made that the amount so collected shall be credited or refunded as an overpayment. This amendment becomes effective with respect to members of the armed forces dying in active service on or after December 7, 1941.

7. REVENUE EFFECTS UNDER THE THREE MAJOR BILLS

The 1942 tax liabilities under present law are estimated at $9,815,000,000 before giving effect to the special provisions relating to the armed forces and at $9,451,000,000 after giving effect to these special provisions. The House bill would cancel $7,238,000,000. The Ruml-Carlson bill would cancel the entire $9,451,000,000 but would recoup through windfall provisions $1,133,000,000, resulting in a net cancelation of $8,319,000,000 after giving effect to these special provisions. The Ways and Means Committee bill would cancel $4,672,000,000. Thus, of the 1942 liabilities there would remain only $2,214,000,000 under the House bill, $1,133,000,000 under the Ruml-Carlson bill (this entire amount being due to the special windfall provisions) and $4,780,000,000 under the Ways and Means Committee bill.

Under the House bill the tentative estimates of income-tax liabilities due in the fiscal year 1944 would not be appreciably different from the income-tax liabilities due under the present law. The liabilities due in each case would amount to approximately $13,000,000,000. The increase of over a half billion dollars in liabilities due in the fiscal year 1944 under the House bill as a result of subjecting the higher levels of income in 1943 and 1944 to current tax payment insofar as the basic liability is concerned is offset for the most part by the decrease in liabilities resulting from the relief for the armed forces.

Under the Ruml-Carlson bill the liabilities due in the fiscal year 1944 would amount to $15,263,000,000 and under the Ways and Means Committee bill to $15,724,000,000 if no discounts are taken, and $18,623,000,000 if the maximum discounts are taken. The larger collections under the Ways and Means Committee bill and the Ruml-Carlson bill in that particular year are due in part to a doubling up of certain liabilities with respect to 1942 taxes and in part to a more complete dependence of the liabilities due in the fiscal year 1944 upon the higher level of current income than under the House bill, since under the House bill the liabilities with respect to the upper surtax brackets are based upon the preceding year's income.

In the fiscal years 1945 and 1946 the Ways and Means Committee bill will continue to produce larger amounts of revenue than the other two bills to the extent that the 1942 tax is not fully paid in 1944. The revenue under the Ruml-Carlson bill and the House bill will be equal in fiscal year 1945 if 1944 and 1945 incomes are at the same level as 1943 incomes. If the trend of income continues upward the yield under the Ruml-Carlson bill will be somewhat higher than under the House bill since current collection applies to the whole tax instead of to the basic tax, which accounts for about three-fourths of the total. On the other hand, if income trends should turn downward the yield under the Ruml-Carlson bill would, for the same reason, be less than the yield under the House bill.

The estimated income tax liabilities due during 1943 and 1944 and the amount of 1942 taxes canceled under the Ruml-Carlson bill are given in exhibit 5. Corresponding estimates under the House bill and the Ways and Means Committee bill are given in exhibits 6 and 7.

8. DISTRIBUTION OF FORGIVENESS

The three plans differ not only with respect to the aggregate amount of tax forgiven but also with respect to the distribution of forgiveness among the various income brackets. Superficially each of the three bills distributes its forgiveness on a uniform pattern. The Ruml-Carlson bill forgives the whole tax from the lowest income to the highest income. The House bill forgives the normal tax and 13 percent of surtax net income uniformly from top to bottom. The Ways and Means Committee bill shifts the rates and exemptions from the 1942 levels to the 1941 levels for all taxpayers. Thus on its face each bill appears to apply its forgiveness on a uniform basis for all taxpayers.

This apparent uniformity, however, does not mean that in actual operation each of the three bills distributes the benefits of forgiveness in an equitable manner. The relative distribution of forgiveness among different income brackets differs widely under the three bills. The assumption, which many people make, that uniform treatment is afforded when the same percentage of tax is forgiven to all taxpayers fails to take account of several very important considerations.

A usual method of comparing the fairness of tax provisions is to measure the distribution of tax burdens imposed among the various income levels. On this basis of comparison, both the House bill and the Ways and Means Committee bill distribute the remaining 1942 tax burden in the form of progressive tax rate schedule although they differ as to exemptions and the pattern of the rate schedule. The Ruml-Carlson bill, however, leaves no burden at all on 1942 income, except as to the anti-windfall provisions. This pattern of burden is obviously not equitable in a year of wartime income.

A second method of measuring the fairness of the distribution of tax forgiveness is based on the amount of income which a taxpayer has at his disposal to spend or to save—not income before taxes, but income after payment of taxes. The Federal income tax has been in operation for 30 years. During every year of that time the receipt by an individual of a dollar of net income above exemptions has concurrently created a tax liability which must be subtracted to reflect the actual income. It is this actual income after tax and not the income before tax which is the proper standard for measuring the effects of tax forgiveness on persons in different income levels. Forgiveness adds wealth to the taxpayer, or reduces his liabilities, which is in effect the same thing. How do the amounts of the forgiveness under the three bills compare with respect to income remaining after the taxes which are prescribed for 1942 by existing law?

The answer to this question may be seen in the following table showing for the three bills the relation of the amount of the forgiveness to the income after tax:

Net income before personal exemption	Income tax, present law (married person, no dependents)	Income after tax	Amount forgiven under—
			Ruml-Carlson bill	House bill	Ways and Means Committee bill
$2,000	$140	$1,860	$140	$140	$100
$3,000	324	2,676	324	324	192
$5,000	746	4,254	746	691	388
$10,000	2,152	7,848	2,152	1,614	860
$25,000	9,220	15,780	9,220	4,437	2,396
$100,000	64,060	35,940	64,060	18,690	11,357
$1,000,000	854,000	146,000	854,000	189,750	121,126

Net income before personal exemption	Income after tax	Amount forgiven as percent of income after tax under—
		Ruml-Carlson bill	House bill	Ways and Means Committee bill
		Percent	Percent	Percent
$2,000	$1,860	7.5	7.5	5.4
$3,000	2,676	12.1	12.1	7.2
$5,000	4,254	17.5	16.2	9.1
$10,000	7,848	27.4	20.6	11.0
$25,000	15,780	58.4	28.1	15.2
$100,000	35,940	178.2	52.0	31.6
$1,000,000	146,000	584.9	130.0	83.0

From the above table, it is clear that while all three bills are more generous to the higher income groups than to lower income groups, the Ruml-Carlson plan is much more extreme in this effect. This may be perhaps clearer from the following illustrations:

A person with an income before taxes of $2,000 whose actual income after taxes is $1,860, under the Ruml-Carlson bill, would have $140 added to his $1,860 or slightly less than 4 weeks' actual income.

A person with $5,000 income before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $4,254 would have $746 added by the Ruml-Carlson bill or slightly less than 9 weeks' actual income.

The person with $10,000 income before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $7,848 would have $2,152 added, or nearly 14 weeks' actual income.

The person with $50,000 income before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $24,672 would have $25,328 added or a little more than 1 year's actual income.

The person with $100,000 income before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $35,940 would have $64,060 added or about 20 months' actual income.

The person with $1,000,000 before taxes whose actual income after taxes is $146,000 would have $854,000 added or about 6 years' actual income.

Thus, the Ruml-Carlson plan would add actual incomes ranging from 4 weeks for the $2,000 man to 6 years for the $1,000,000 man.

A third measure of the fairness of tax forgiveness is the comparison of the amounts of forgiveness with the amounts of tax increases which have been imposed to finance the defense and war efforts. These increases were contained in the Revenue Acts of 1940, 1941, and 1942. They were intended to impose fair and equitable wartime tax increases according to the judgment of Congress. What portion of these increases would be wiped out by tax forgiveness under the three bills at various levels of income? The answer to this question is seen in the following table for a few income levels:

Net income before personal exemption	Tax increases under acts of 1940, 1941, and 1942 for married person, no dependents	Amount forgiven as percent of tax increases under—
		Ruml plan	House bill	Ways and Means Committee bill
$2,000	$182	76.9	76.9	55.0
$3,000	469	69.1	69.1	40.9
$5,000	991	75.3	69.7	39.2
$10,000	2,740	78.5	58.9	31.4
$25,000	12,460	74.0	35.6	19.2
$100,000	62,833	102.0	29.7	18.1
$1,000,000	267,006	319.8	71.1	45.4

From the above table, it is seen that in terms of taxes imposed for the war effort, the Ruml-Carlson bill would wipe out the whole increase as of January 1, 1943, for taxpayers with incomes of over $100,000, and at the $1,000,000 level would confer additional benefits amounting to nearly $600,000. The other two bills avoid canceling a greater amount than the wartime tax increases, with respect to all taxpayers.

A fourth measure of the fairness of distributing forgiveness relates to the problem of increased taxes to finance the war. In the January 1943 Budget message, the President asked for "not less than $16,000,000,000 of additional funds by taxation, savings, or both." In whatever form additional taxes are imposed, it is inevitable that by and large the increases will fall proportionately most heavily on the lower and middle incomes since it is not feasible to raise the rates on the higher incomes proportionally. The increased taxes will apply to periods subsequent to 1942. If 1942 taxes are to be forgiven for the purpose of getting the great mass of our taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go basis, it would seem obvious justice that insofar as possible those who benefit by the forgiveness should be subject at least to an equal amount of additional burdens. It would be grossly inequitable to forgive taxes to income groups on whom future tax increases cannot be imposed and then to impose heavy tax increases on other income groups.

With respect to the possibility of reimposing the canceled taxes on the same income levels, the following table shows the effective rates of tax increase which would have to be applied to selected net incomes under each plan to recoup over a 3-year period the tax forgiven on those amounts of income:

Net income before personal exemption	Effective rates of income and net Victory tax liability, present law	Effective tax-rate increase necessary to recoup canceled taxes at same income levels over a 3-year period
		Ruml-Carlson bill	House bill	Ways and Means Committee bill
	Percent	Percent	Percent	Percent
$2,000	9.4	2.3	2.3	1.7
$3,000	13.5	3.6	3.6	2.1
$5,000	17.9	5.0	4.6	2.6
$10,000	24.7	7.2	5.4	2.9
$100,000	68.6	21.4	6.2	3.8
$1,000,000	89.9	28.5	6.3	4.0

From the above table it is apparent that the effective rates necessary under the Ruml-Carlson bill necessary to offset the forgiven taxes by rate increases applied over 3 years would exceed 100 percent for the higher income brackets. The bracket rates of tax would have to be even higher.

In the light of these facts, whatever other objections may be brought against the House bill and the Ways and Means Committee bill, these bills cannot properly be criticized as distributing 1942 tax forgiveness less uniformly and less fairly among taxpayers than the Ruml-Carlson bill. On the contrary they are much more equitable in their distribution of forgiveness than the Ruml-Carlson bill, which would result in a substantial redistribution of income in the direction of the higher income levels.

9. SUMMARY

With respect to the collection at the source and the current tax payment provisions, the Treasury believes there is little room for choice between the three major bills. All three provide for the fundamental change in tax payment methods which is necessary in our tax law. While the House bill does not place the higher surtax bracket incomes on a fully current basis, it must be recognized that the taxpayers in these brackets are best able to provide in advance for taxes.

Any choice between the three bills must, therefore, be based primarily upon the treatment provided with respect to the 1942 tax liability. Insofar as the distribution of forgiveness is concerned, the Treasury Department believes that both the Ways and Means Committee bill and the House bill distribute the cancelation of the 1942 tax on a reasonably equitable and fair basis. However, the smaller amount of cancelation under the Ways and Means Committee bill results in a substantial increase in the revenue collections in the next few years at a time when such an increase is vitally necessary. The Treasury therefore believes that the Ways and Means Committee bill possesses a definite advantage over the House bill. With respect to the Ruml-Carlson bill, as has already been indicated, the distribution of forgiveness is thoroughly inequitable and unfair. While this bill would produce some additional revenue in the fiscal year 1944 this aspect is more than offset by the factor of inequitable treatment of the 1942 tax. The Treasury therefore believes that the Ruml-Carlson bill is definitely inferior to both the Ways and Means Committee bill and the House bill.

Finally, I should like to emphasize an aspect of which your committee is fully aware, as indicated by the promptness with which these hearings have been commenced. This is the importance of prompt action in order to permit current collection to start by July 1 of this year. The Bureau of Internal Revenue has already taken preliminary steps to prepare for speedy inauguration of the current collection system should the Congress complete its action by May 15. I think it is vitally important both from the standpoint of the taxpayer and the standpoint of the Government to have collection at source under way by July 1. I therefore hope that the committee will take action on this bill in time to permit accomplishment of this objective.

EXHIBIT 5

Estimated income-tax liabilities due under the Carlson amendment, as amended, to H. R. 2570, as voted on in the House of Representatives May 4, 1943, which would—

1. Remit to all taxpayers the net income-tax liabilities on calendar year 1942 income, as modified in provision (2).

2. Allow any member of the armed forces in active service an exclusion from base pay received after December 31, 1941, equal to the excess of $3,500 over the personal exemption claimed by such member (and by his spouse if such member is married and living with his spouse on the last day of the taxable year, and such spouse is not entitled to the benefit of this allowance).

3. By June 15, 1943, require payment of at least one-half of proposed net income-tax liabilities on income of the calendar year 1942, to be treated as payments toward income-tax liabilities on calendar year 1943 income.

4. Withhold after June 30, 1943, from salaries and wages in excess of the withholding allowance (110 percent of the personal exemption and dependent credit) at a rate of 17 percent; and, in addition, withhold from salaries and wages in excess of an annual rate of $624 at a rate of 3 percent in lieu of the 5-percent Victory tax now withheld on salaries and wages.

5. For those taxpayers whose calendar year 1942 and calendar year 1943 surtax net incomes exceed calendar year 1940 surtax net income by more than $5,000, compute an additional calendar year 1943 tax liability as follows: From the smaller of the surtax net income of the calendar years 1942 and 1943, deduct the sum of $5,000, plus the calendar year 1940 surtax net income. The additional tax is the sum of 6 percent of such difference, plus the surtax computed on such difference at present law rates, and is due by December 15, 1943.

6. For those taxpayers whose present law calendar year 1942 net income-tax liability is both greater than $1,050 and greater than the calendar year 1943 tax liability, add to present law calendar year 1943 net income-tax liabilities the smaller of the excesses of present law calendar year 1942 net income-tax liabilities over (a) $1,050 or (b) present law calendar year 1943 net income-tax liabilities. This additional tax is due by December 15, 1943.

7. Require that total proposed tax liabilities (comprising the proposed net Victory tax and the proposed net income tax but excluding the two additional taxes described in provisions (5) and (6) on incomes of the calendar years 1943 and subsequent years be paid currently. Quarterly payments are required on September 15 and December 15, 1943, to discharge such part of the proposed tax liabilities on income of the calendar year 1943 required to be paid currently as is not withheld during the calendar year 1943 or discharged by payments prior to June 15, 1943. Quarterly payments are required in subsequent years in such amounts that, together with the amounts withheld, tax liabilities will be paid currently.

[1] Total taxable income for a calendar year is assumed to be distributed equally among the four quarters of the year. Calendar year 1944 income has not been forecast, but has been assumed to be the same as forecast for calendar year 1943.

[2] The loss with respect to tax liabilities on income of the calendar year 1944 should be somewhat greater, but has been assumed to be the same as on income of the calendar year 1943. Calendar year 1942 and calendar year 1943 net income tax liabilities are reduced by $363.9 millions and $670.1 millions, respectively. Calendar year 1943 net Victory tax liabilities are reduced by $131.8 millions.

1. Remit the basic tax liabilities on income of the calendar year 1942 (normal tax plus 13 percent of entire surtax net income).[2]

2. Allow any member of the armed forces in active service an exclusion from base pay received after December 31, 1941, equal to the excess of $3,500 over the personal exemption claimed by such member (and by his spouse if such member is married and living with his spouse on the last day of the taxable year and such spouse is not entitled to the benefit of this allowance).

3. By June 15, 1943, require payment of at least one-half of proposed net income-tax liabilities (prior to remission of basic tax liabilities) on income of the calendar year 1942.

4. Withhold after June 30, 1943, from salaries and wages in excess of the withholding allowance (110 percent of the personal exemption and dependent credit) at a rate of 17 percent; and in addition withhold from salaries and wages in excess of an annual rate of $624 at a rate of 3 percent, in lieu of the 5-percent Victory tax now withheld on salaries and wages.

5. In case gross income from sources other than salaries and wages can reasonably be expected to exceed $100 for the current calendar year, require certain current payments to be applied toward basic tax liabilities and net Victory-tax liabilities not withheld at source.[2] Such current payments are equal to 20 percent of the excess of estimated net income over the larger of (a) estimated salaries and wages or (b) personal exemption plus dependent credit.

6. Require that any basic tax liabilities or net Victory-tax liabilities not paid currently be paid by March 15 of the following year.[2]

7. Require payments of "balance tax liabilities" (the excess of total net income-tax liabilities over liabilities for basic tax[2] equal to normal tax plus 13 percent of entire surtax net income) to be collected as under present law; namely, in the year following the calendar year in which the taxable income is received.

Estimated income-tax liabilities[1] due under H. R. 2570 as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, April 24, 1943, which would—

1. Remit to all taxpayers the difference between the net income-tax liabilities on calendar year 1942 incomes as modified in provision (2) and such liabilities computed under a rate schedule applied to calendar year 1942 tax liabilities which approximates the yield derived by using the lower tax rates and the larger personal exemptions and dependent credit of the Revenue Act of 1941.

2. Allow any member of the armed forces in active service an exclusion from base pay received after December 31, 1941, equal to the excess of $3,500 over the personal exemption claimed by such member (and by his spouse if such member is married and living with his spouse on the last day of the taxable year and such spouse is not entitled to the benefit of this allowance).

3. By June 15, 1943, require payment of at least one-half of proposed net income-tax liabilities on income of the calendar year 1942.

4. Withhold after June 30, 1943, from salaries and wages in excess of the withholding allowance (110 percent of the personal exemption and dependent credit) at a rate of 17 percent; and in addition withhold from salaries and wages in excess of an annual rate of $624 at a rate of 3 percent, in lieu of the 5-percent Victory tax now withheld on salaries and wages.

5. Require the unremitted 1942 tax liabilities to be paid over a period of 3 years, one-third being due by March 15 of each of the years 1944, 1945, and 1946.

6. Allow a discount of 6 percent of the unremitted tax if paid in full by March 15, 1944, and a discount of 2 percent if paid in full by March 15, 1945.

7. Require that total proposed tax liabilities (including the net Victory tax) on incomes of the calendar year 1943 and subsequent years be paid currently. Quarterly payments are required on September 15 and December 15, 1943, to discharge such part of the proposed tax liabilities on income of the calendar year 1943 as is not withheld during calendar year 1943 or discharged by payments prior to June 15, 1943. Quarterly payments are required in subsequent years in such amounts that, together with the amounts withheld, tax liabilities will be paid currently.

Treasury Department, Division of Research and Statistics, Mar. 25, 1943.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, if this procedure proposed here today should be adopted, we should immediately amend the Constitution so that bills of this type may originate in the Senate. We have heard a lot in recent years about Members of Congress being rubber stamps, but I do not think there could be a more deplorable instance than for this House to "rubber stamp" Senate legislation of this type.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to face a stupendous task the best we can so when the war is over to discharge the obligations resting upon the Government of the United States with the multiplied billions of dollars we will owe and to maintain an orderly national economy. This proposal means—and it ought to be a warning to those who are responsible for the plan—the first step toward repudiation of the national debt, and it comes, not after the war, but while the war is on. If we are not willing to honor this obligation during the time of conflict and for the year that brought us the most enormous earnings and income in all our history, when will we b ready to pay?

Who knows how long we are to have such earnings and income; what becomes of our efforts to prevent inflation if we release all the billions of 1942 tax money with its vast inflationary pressure? If one of our boys at the battle front criticizes his superior officer he is court martialed. If he deserts, he may be shot. I do not say that anybody in this House is a deserter; I do not say that those represented by the advocates of the motion now before us are deserters but we are asked to withhold the financial support to which the Government is entitled and which is necessary to supply food and equipment for our soldiers who are fighting the war. Our boys are dying and risking their lives for us. If we fail in the discharge of the lesser responsibilities that rest upon us in the great struggle in which the perpetuity of our institutions is involved, we prove ourselves unworthy of the heroic sacrifices that are being made for us. We ought not to do it. It cannot be defended. The patriotic people of this country will not stand for it when they understand it. When they have had more time to consider and to understand what is back of this, they will repudiate it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And as the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], has pointed out in the Senate, is it necessary or desirable to forgive the millionaire $854,000 in order to protect his chauffeur or clerk?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; and we ought not to forgive anybody at this time of national peril——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I have opposed all of the tax measures that have been voted on in this House. I felt and still feel that they were an inadequate expression on our part, on the home front, to be worthy of our boys on 40 fronts around the world. I feared that by indirection we were now making the same errors that we made following the First World War.

On the other hand, the feeling exists, and it is quite general, that many who now enjoy high incomes are escaping their full taxable share of paying for this damnable war. These citizens, of course, have to be made current, and I do not propose to stand further in the way of achieving that; but in accepting the pay-as-you-go feature, I want to protest against the other evils that I feel are inherent in this action. I feel that our struggles with these tax matters merely serve to point out the need for a wide and wise recognition of the mushrooming growth of local, State, and National tax duties and burdens of all of our people. If we are ever to achieve fiscal security we will have to achieve that type of tax legislation which recognizes ability to pay, ease of collection, and which, by its width of assessment, promotes zealous economy. I yield back my time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I should like at the outset to reply to the two arguments made by my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina. I think it is fair to him to say that if his speech were boiled down we would find in it only two arguments. He would have you believe that there is much involved in this bill that is new and strange and different. I am sure that anyone who has studied this bill will agree with me that there is absolutely no new principle involved. Every principle involved is found in the Carlson bill and in other bills that this House has heretofore considered.

The next argument he used was that this is an unusual parliamentary proceeding that we are following in offering this motion. I wish you to know that this is the general and the usual proceeding. The fact of the matter is, it is the only proceeding that we could follow.

Let me proceed to reply to the argument made by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]. He finds himself in a very peculiar position today. The bill that he fathered and fostered in this House was passed by this House. It was passed principally by Republican votes—I dare say that 90 percent of the votes received by the Robertson-Forand bill were cast by Republicans. But still we see him standing up here today advocating the same course as those who refused to vote for his bill and opposing the course advocated for those who voted for his bill. He will find that when this matter goes to the conference that he is so anxious about that there will not be a single conferee among the Democratic conferees who will support his bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The gentleman will be on that committee of conference, will he not?

Mr. JENKINS. I do not know, for that will be a matter for decision by the Speaker. I want to emphasize to the gentleman the position he stands in now. The four conferees on the Democratic side have at all times been unalterably opposed to the Robertson plan but the three on the Republican side have voted for the Robertson plan. It is strange that the gentleman should want to present the argument he did present today.

Let me stress this one fact. Up until today we, the Members of this House, have had our arguments between and among ourselves, and no other individuals were involved. Today, however, another branch of the legislative branch of our Government has come into play. That other branch is endowed with power equal to our branch as far as the passage of legislation is concerned. We, the House, initiated the bill as is our constitutional right and duty to do. We gave it much careful consideration in the House and in the committee. In due course it went to the Senate and today we are considering what the Senate did. Henceforth this bill, as it wends its way is a creature of both branches of Congress.

Let us see what the Senate did while it had this tax matter under consideration. It considered almost every one of the several plans that we considered in the House. But before I consider them, let me mention the remarks of the last speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]. He said there should be no forgiveness, and he was cheered lustily by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]. Again this is strange on the part of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], for his plan gives more forgiveness than any other plan except the pure Ruml plan. Was not that a strange situation? Now, let us see how the various plans were received in the Senate, and what the vote was.

Senator ELLENDER offered the plan that provided that there should be no abatement. That is the plan after Mr. DOUGHTON'S own heart. How many votes did it get? It got 21 votes for and 57 against. This should be conclusive that the people want to pay their taxes currently and should like to have their back taxes abated. Let us consider the makeshift bill offered to the House for consideration by the Democratic Members of the Ways and Means Committee. You will recall that the House defeated that bill overwhelmingly. Senator CONNALLY presented that bill to the Senate. How much luck did he have with it? He got only 29 votes for it while there were 50 votes against it. It was more unpopular in the Senate than in the House.

What happened to Senator GEORGE'S bill in the Senate? His bill provided for 75 percent forgiveness. The vote in the Senate was 32 for it and 50 against it. I cite this with especial emphasis. I want you to remember that the Senator George plan was defeated in the Senate by 50 to 32. Let us go on to the withholding tax alone—a straight-out withholding tax with no other provisions. That fared badly also. It was defeated by 29 for and 48 against. Senator O'DANIEL proposed the plan.

Senator BANKHEAD offered the Robertson plan and it fared worse than the other one. It got only 27 as against 52. I want to call this situation especially to the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND]. Their bill was ignominiously defeated in the Senate.

Let us see how the Carlson plan stood in the Senate. It must not be forgotten that the Carlson bill carried this House every time it had a fair chance free from the whip and lash of the New Deal administration. It then carried the House twice on a teller vote, only to lose by a close margin when the New Deal whip was cracked. In the Senate the straight-out Carlson plan got a vote of 48 to 31. This is a tremendous majority. This is the plan that has carried both Houses. No other plan has carried both Houses. It should therefore be recommended by the conferees.

The modified Carlson plan, with the additions and refinements which the Senate put on it, was the bill that was finally passed by the Senate. It was passed by a larger vote than any of the other bills. The final vote was 49 for and 30 against. Now, my colleagues, we have the situation of the House and Senate both passing a bill largely the same in substance. Therefore, if you are one who wants a pay-as-you-go tax bill, now is your time and chance to get it.

You gain nothing by trying to place the blame on someone else. The responsibility is yours, and now is your chance.

There is no doubt that the large majority of the people of the country are anxious to see Congress pass some kind of a tax bill. The people have been patient with Congress. They have waited for months while we have fiddled around with this tax program. The Ways and Means Committee and the House always had plenty of votes to defeat any measure, but it took many votes before it finally agreed. The House did the same. But the Senate acted quickly and decisively. Now the question is, Are we going to finish up this task by passing Mr. KNUTSON'S resolution, or are we going to reject it and thereby put the bill into conference, from which nobody can reasonably guess what will be the outcome.

Mr. Speaker, this may be a political issue here in this House, but I assure you it is not a political issue with the people. There is no question that a very large majority of the people of the country favor some form of the Carlson-Ruml plan. But the Democratic and New Deal Members of the House have declined to pass it. The Senate is willing. If Mr. KNUTSON'S motion carries, the tax problem will have been settled. If it fails, we are back where we were 6 months ago, and the Democrats and New Dealers must be held responsible. Those who have been demanding the passage of the Carlson-Ruml plan have a right to feel aggrieved, and they should not hold him guiltless who is responsible. Those who yield their conscience and their judgment to the whims of the President should be prepared to admit their inability to make up their own mind. Those who put party before the people cannot be held guiltless.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

A FURLOUGH FOR BIG INCOME TAXPAYERS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the trouble is that there are too many people in America who look on this war as a joy ride. They do not include the soldiers, the small businessmen, or the hard-working farmers of this Nation.

But I did not think that, in addition to this joy ride, the Congress of the United States would grant a furlough of 1 year to the big taxpayers of the Nation, when they might just as well grant that furlough of 1 year to every man in our armed forces.

Not only that, but you might as well grant a furlough of 1 year to the farmers of this country. If this motion is adopted, and this measure becomes a law, it will forgive the big income taxpayers of this Nation almost twice as much as all of the wheat, all of the corn, and all of the cotton produced in America this year will bring. You might just as well give the farmers of this country a furlough for 1 year and pay them for the crops they did not make. Besides, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] pointed out, you are giving some of these big income taxpayers a furlough for 6 years, or giving them back taxes to that amount.

You may say that we could not give the soldiers a furlough, because they have to fight the war. But who is going to finance it? You are endeavoring to give the big taxpayers a furlough of 1 year, and pretending that they will pay it in the future. You do not know where some of them will be next year, or the year after next. When they get this rake-off, they may migrate to one of those countries that have no income taxes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, briefly.

Mr. MAY. Our records and findings in the Military Affairs Committee show that last year is when they made the biggest profits.

Mr. RANKIN. That is correct.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, this proposition did not come from the toiling farmers. They get no benefit from it. It does not come from the industrial laborers. It did not come from the men in our armed forces. It came from those men in the higher income-tax brackets who can pay for this propaganda and can promise big campaign contributions.

If this bill passes and the President does not veto it, I shall be greatly disappointed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing about the motion offered by our Republican friends is the fact that if adopted, it constitutes an abdication on the part of the House of Representatives to the Senate of its constitutional duty and responsibility of initiating tax legislation. We hear our Republican friends talking daily about bureaucracy. We hear them talking about abdication by the Congress, and yet here they are offering a motion today that constitutes, so far as the House of Representatives is concerned, on this constitutional question, an abdication to the Senate of the United States of the responsibility and the duties of the House of Representatives.

One of the Republican speakers made the argument that three of the Democratic conferees on the part of the House will be against the Robertson-Forand plan. Without regard to what their personal views might be, every one of us knows that when the House conferees on both sides go into a conference, Republicans and Democrats, they are going to vote for the House position and do their best to have the House bill accepted. I think that answers clearly the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Various Members have made arguments as to the unjustness of this legislation. I am not going to enter into that argument today. I have referred to it in speeches that I made when this bill was pending in the House on two occasions previously, but I call the attention of the House to a bill that I consider to be a companion bill to the Ruml plan, namely, H. R. 2698, which was dropped into the hopper last Wednesday by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN], a Republican Member of the House of Representatives. It is a bill entitled "To repeal section 403 of the Sixth Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act 1942, as amended, relating to renegotiation of war contracts, and to promote the national war effort." Its author indicates that there was no need of a renegotiation, upon the specious theory that 90 percent of excess profits are supposed to be put into the Treasury by way of income taxes.

Enacting of the pending Ruml plan, forgiving vast sums of income taxes, plus the repeal of the present law providing for the recapture of unjustified and excessive profits on war contracts certainly points to a concerted movement to protect the huge profits made by some persons during this war. The Ruml plan takes care of the individual taxpayer, who has had huge incomes. The Jonkman bill takes care of corporations who have made huge incomes out of the war. It certainly is difficult to understand wherein repeal of the renegotiation law will promote the national war effort, as set out in the bill's title, and neither will such legislation aid small businessmen as some might argue since renegotiations apply only to contracts of $100,000 and over. Already renegotiations has resulted in refund (voluntary return of excessive profits) and reductions arranged by the Price Adjustment Boards of the War, Navy and Maritime Commission in an amount of over two and a half billion dollars ($2,539,000,000). This is only a small part of the billions still to be recaptured by the action of the above-mentioned boards as well as those recently created by the Treasury Department's Procurement Section, and the War Shipping Administration. Almost 10,000 contractors are holding Army-Navy and maritime contracts. Of this number 1,478 have had renegotiation action completed, with 5,647 in process of renegotiation.

The Committee on Military Affairs, under the able leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] has done a great job, and the Naval Affairs Committee, under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has done a great job in exposing these huge war contracts and the tremendous profits made therefrom. The Ruml plan now takes care of individuals who have made immense individual incomes out of war contracts, and it is now proposed by this companion bill, the Jonkman bill, to take care of the corporations. The movement is exposed. Let us send this bill to conference. Let us do the orderly thing, and let the conferees in the manner provided by the rules work out a bill and bring back a fair bill that will put in operation in an effective and reasonable manner, pay-as-you-go legislation that the people of the country want.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks and include certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House for the very few minutes allotted to me I shall appreciate it. We might reflect that just 156 years ago this month a convention met in Philadelphia in Independence Hall. Fifty-five fearless and courageous men decided that they were going to frame a government that would work, and it has worked for more than a century and a half. This is what they said:

By the Constitution of the United States, money bills originate in the House of Representatives. The reason is that as that House are more numerous than the other, and its Members are elected more frequently, the most local and recent information of the circumstances of the people may be found there. But, as the Senate derive their authority ultimately from the same origin with the other House, they have a right to propose and concur in amendments in these as well as in other bills.

That is precisely what has been done in this case. We have heard a great deal about the terrible sin of abatement of taxes. Anything to befog the issue. The issue is that the American people want to become current in their taxes, and they know it will be disastrous to their war effort unless they do become current. What about this so-called sin of abating taxes? The House bill that they want us to take in place of the Senate proposal abates 75 percent of the taxes, and still it does not make the taxpayers current. Why not do the job in the open, manly, American way?

The distinguished chairman said there had been no hearings on this proposition of the Senate. I reply to him that there has been a hearing in every one of 44,000,000 homes from which this revenue must flow. The taxpayers know the provisions in this bill. The vote in the Senate reflects the will of the American people, and they are sovereign.

I say there is presented at this time a very fundamental issue that must not be overlooked. What further did those 55 men say in convention when they organized our Republic under our Constitution?

The power of conferring nobility is a source of influence which the Crown possesses over the House of Commons, as well as over the House of Lords. A coronet and all the proud preeminences and gilded glories which encircle a coronet are objects of ambition, whose tempting charms few—very few, indeed—are capable of resisting. Even the great commoner wishes and sighs to be something more. Will not his views be directed to that power by which alone his wishes can be gratified? Will not his conduct receive a bias from the longing, expecting turn of his mind? When his towering hopes of elevation are suspended on the crown, will he easily run the risk of seeing them dashed to the ground by speaking and voting and acting in opposition to its views and measures?

We are now arrived, in our progress, at another fountain, from which, in Great Britain, the waters of bitterness have plentifully flowed—I mean the fountain of office. We reprehend not the nature of this power, nor the place, where, by the British Constitution, it is deposited. In every government there must be such a power, and it is proper that it should be lodged in the hands of him who is placed at the head of the executive department. What we censure is that this power is not circumscribed by the necessary limitations. It may be—it is—exercised in favor of the members of both houses of Parliament. Offices of trust and profit are scattered, with a lavish hand, among those by whom a return, very dangerous to the liberties of the nation, may be made, and from whom such a return is but too often expected.

That was the evil they were fighting against in that day. It is the same evil of executive influence which hampers free government here and now. We have an opportunity as Americans today to establish the independence of this legislative body. That is what the people want. They want to recapture their powers. They want to write the laws of this Nation through their chosen representatives, and they are asking to be made current in the only way it is possible to do it, which is by the votes of uncoerced representatives.

The fact is this: The American people will pay every dollar of taxes—earn every dollar of taxes—to finance this war. They want the home front sound and they will keep it sound. They will supply the money. We are not supplying it. They are supplying it with their toil on the home front.

Now, what is the situation? You load your soldiers down a little at a time until they can carry a large load and fight effectively. The home front wants the same treatment. In 1940 their tax load was $5,387,000,000; in 1941 it was $7,607,000,000; in 1942 it was $12,799,000,000 plus; in 1943 it was $22,976,000,000; in 1944, $33,081,000,000 plus; plus $16,000,000,000 additional taxes required by the President in his last Budget message and $10,000,000,000 of State and local taxes, which, all told, makes a total tax load for the people to bear within a short period of time amounting to $59,081,000,000. They cannot carry such a load unless you give them a fair opportunity to become current. This motion must be carried in order to give them an opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understand it, a vote "aye" is to pass the resolution and a vote "no" is against it. Is that right?

The SPEAKER. That would be presumed to be true.

Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to instruct the conferees will, when the names are called, vote "aye"; those opposed, "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 202, answered "present" 4, not voting 32, as follows:

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Anderson of California for, with Mr. Fogarty against.

Mr. Smith of Maine for, with Mr. Izac against.

Mr. Rolph for, with Mr. Costello against.

Mr. Boykin for, with Mr. Vinson of Georgia against.

Mr. Magnuson for, with Mrs. Luce against.

Mr. Culkin for, with Mr. Kunkel against.

Mr. Thomas of New Jersey for, with Mr. Dies against.

Mr. Judd for, with Mr. Johnson, J. Leroy against.

Mr. O'Leary for, with Mrs. Norton against.

Mr. Kleberg for, with Mr. Worley against.

Mr. Woodruff of Michigan for, with Mr. McGranery against.

General pairs:

Mr. Bloom with Mr. Hinshaw.

Mr. Cochran with Mr. Welch.

Mr. O'Toole with Mr. Hagen.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recorded as voting "aye."

Mr. COLMER. It is an error, Mr. Speaker; I voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi changes his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY]. Were he present he would have voted "no." I therefore change my vote from "aye" to "present."

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I entered the Chamber as my name was called. I wish to qualify and vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from New York in the Hall listening and failed to hear his name?

Mr. BLOOM. I came in just as my name was called. I did not know what the vote was on.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman say he was in the Hall?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; I said I came in just about when my name was called.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Just about; that does not qualify.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman was not here but rushed in after his name was called.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York state that he was in the Hall listening and failed to hear his name called? Otherwise he does not qualify.

Mr. BLOOM. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, I was here but was talking and did not hear my name called until too late to answer. I think I qualify.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall?

Mr. HAGEN. I was and I wish to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called and failed to hear it?

Mr. HAGEN. I was talking; I did not hear.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must hold, as the Chair held in the case of the gentleman from New York who said his name was called as he came in, that the gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Minnesota said he was in the Hall listening but did not hear his name called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota said he was in the Hall when his name was called but that he was talking. The Chair propounded the question: "Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called and failed to hear it?" And the gentleman did not say he was.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, we are setting the precedent that even though a Member is sitting in the Hall listening for the roll call but does not happen to hear his name he is disqualified.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that the Member must qualify that he was in the Hall listening and failed to hear his name called on the supposition that the Clerk failed to call his name.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman rises to a point of order the Chair will let him state the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There are three things, Mr. Speaker, that are essential in order to qualify a Member to vote after the conclusion of the roll call: First, the gentleman must have been in the Hall; second, he must have been listening; and third, he must not have heard his name called. If he was not in the Hall he does not qualify; if he was not listening he does not qualify; and if he heard his name called and did not answer he does not qualify.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled on two-thirds of that proposition.

Mr. HENDRICKS changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay." I have a live pair with the gentleman from New York, therefore I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay." I have a live pair with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD]. I would like my vote changed to "present."

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Speaker, I entered into an active pair with the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]. If present she would have voted "nay." I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

Mr. BATES of Kentucky changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. DOUGHTON, COOPER, DISNEY, DINGELL, KNUTSON, REED of New York, and JENKINS.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS, 1943

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2714) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiency appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2714, with Mr. PATMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The order of business is, there are 2 hours' general debate, 1 hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], and the other hour to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] on the pending amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is my understanding that at the end of those 2 hours a vote will be taken on the amendment and all amendments thereto?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has correctly stated the proposition.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, there was so much confusion in the chamber we did not hear exactly what the retort was to the inquiry, whether or not the 2 hours would be confined to the amendment offered by the Kerr committee and all amendments thereto, or just to the amendment offered by the Kerr committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is to be taken at the end of 2 hours' debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the committee will recall that in February, during consideration of an appropriation bill, a situation arose on the floor in which the House—almost by concert and with practical unanimity—proposed to summarily arraign, try, condemn, and execute, without benefit of clergy or legal process, certain Federal employees charged with subversive activities.

Those charged were to be given no opportunity to be heard. They were to be tried without notice on hearsay and rumor and by what practically amounted to mob action.

In that crisis, by agreement and direction of the leadership on both sides of the aisle and both ranking members of the committee in charge of the bill, I submitted to the House a resolution providing for the appointment of a subcommittee to investigate the charges, hear testimony, give accused opportunity to be heard, and thereupon, in due time, to bring the result of its deliberation before the House.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously and when I appointed the subcommittee, after consultation with the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], I selected five of the ablest members of that committee whom I consider to be five of the ablest Members of the House, every one of them experienced men who have the confidence of the House; men of exceptional probity, ability, and fairness. The chairman of the committee had had many years' experience as an attorney and had served for many years on the bench and, indicating his impartiality, had voted twice against continuation of the Dies committee, in which committee the charges had originated. That committee has been in session ever since.

It has heard full testimony, has given all those against whom charges were brought an opportunity to have their day in court. The subcommittee has made a report of its findings which has been offered by the Committee on Appropriations and is now available to the Members of the House.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the gentleman wishes to submit a question as to the report, may I suggest that he reserve it for the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], who will now take the floor.

Does the gentleman from New York care to take time before the chairman of the subcommittee is recognized?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman after things came to an impasse in the House last February, the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], H. R. 105 was adopted as a result of which this subcommittee was appointed for the purpose of going into the charges that had been and might be submitted by the Dies Committee against different individuals in the employ of the Government. That the Congress has the absolute power to say that any man shall not be on the pay roll of the Government is beyond question. These people are charged with being unfit to be on the pay roll of the United States. This committee was named by the chairman, after consultation with me, and I say to you that the men selected were the very best we could find for that purpose—of open and judicial mind. In my own opinion they are five of the very ablest, finest, and keenest Members of the House of Representatives.

Before they started the hearings they were told by the chairman and by me that they were expected to go over the evidence, give these people a fair hearing, and render judgment accordingly, which should be sent to the full committee and later to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield myself one additional minute.

Some of these men on the committee started off with a complex in favor of those that were accused, but all of them with an open mind. When they were through they agreed unanimously that these three names that are presented here should go off the pay roll of the United States Government. For my own part I can do nothing but support wholeheartedly and down the line the judgment of that committee, because I know that it is honest, I know that they have leaned over backward in trying to be fair to these people and there is nothing of a prejudicial character about the verdict.

I am going to yield to the members of that committee, on this side, so far as I can, so that the House may have the complete facts of these cases.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As I understand, the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member, have stated they will yield all their time to members of the Kerr committee, all of whom have signed this report, and I assume all of whom support this report. Does that mean that those who are opposed to this amendment will be deprived of every bit of time and will have no opportunity to make a statement in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. My statement was that I would yield first to the members of the subcommittee, as provided under the rules of the House, and after they have been allotted time it is my intention to yield to the gentleman from New York and to other Members of the House who are opposed to the resolution.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, 15 minutes.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I cannot neglect to thank the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the distinguished ranking Member of the minority side for their complimentary remarks concerning the work of this committee.

Pursuant to House Resolution 105, which has been referred to here, five members of the Appropriations Committee were authorized by this House to investigate certain charges that have been made with reference to certain employees of this Government and to report their findings, first to the whole Committee on Appropriations, and then the whole committee to report its findings to the House.

I do not hesitate to say that this committee has been conscientious and diligent in its endeavor to do the duty assigned to it and to do that duty well. It has not been a pleasant duty; in fact, frankly, it has been an unpleasant duty. It involved the consideration of a large amount of evidence, much more than this House thinks. It involved the consideration of the probity of that evidence, the weight of the evidence, and other things which had to be taken into consideration by the committee in respect to this important matter.

We discovered after organization the fact that there had never been declared judicially or by any legislative body what constituted subversive activities in respect to this Government. Subvert means to turn over, and the committee, in order to have something to go by, undertook to write what it thought constituted subversive activities in respect to the overthrow of this Government.

I may say that the committee fully understood the seriousness of this matter. It understands how serious it is to remove a man from his office and understands that a stigma may be placed upon him when that act is done. I think the committee fully understands the implications involved in one branch of the Government in attempting to remove an employee of another branch. Those things we took into consideration and those things we attempted to handle justly and properly in the light of the evidence in this matter.

You must understand that your subcommittee was not employed to remove anybody from office. We were not delegated to remove anybody from office. This House simply requested this committee to examine the facts and the charges made against various people here who had been charged with activity which was subversive of our form of government and which had for its purpose its overthrow and destruction. The Committee on Appropriations is not undertaking to remove anybody from office. The House Committee on Appropriations is simply bringing here to this Congress and giving you the facts as it has found them, saying to you, "Gentlemen, these are the facts. The duty devolves upon you now to say whether or not these men named in the amendment are fitted to be employees of the United States Government."

The wording of resolution 105 was that the subcommittee should investigate the matter referred to it and make a report to this Congress through the whole committee, and submit recommendations. That is what it has undertaken to do. It becomes the duty of the House then to say whether certain employees of the Government by reason of their association—and I read the words of the resolution—"by reason of their present association or membership or past association or membership in or with organizations whose aims or purposes are or have been subversive to the Government of the United States," are fitted for service in this Government.

That is what you have to find, that is what this House has to find, that is what the representatives of the people of this country have to find. This House speaks for the people. You are to determine whether or not the people of this country want certain men who are guilty of association with organizations and who are members of organizations in this country whose purpose and object is subversive to the institutions of this Government and who are willing to associate and organize with those whose purpose it is to overthrow it, to hold positions of responsibility in this Government.

I contend that the proposition before the House is an elementary one. It does not involve the question of impeaching anybody. Under any judicial act of our country, it is simply a question of whether or not the people of this country want men who are not in sympathy with the institutions of this country to run it. You can impeach a public official in this country for high crimes and misdemeanor or for malfeasance or misfeasance in office. The question involved in this determination and in this inquiry does not involve a consideration of that kind at all. I repeat what it is. It involves the question of whether the people of this country want men who are not in sympathy with this form of government and philosophy of life to run the affairs of this Nation and to be employees of it.

The men who founded this Nation of ours placed in the hands of this Congress, placed in the hands of its Representatives, the purse strings of this Nation, reserving the right the Commons had under the old English laws, when they built the great British Empire. The English people were able to get justice and consideration and extend the power and the glory of that great Empire, because the Commons of that great nation held the purse strings, and they were not afraid of the man who held the sword as long as they held the purse strings.

The people of this country have never seen fit to remove the right from this Congress and from its Representatives to hold the purse strings of this Nation. To say that they do not have that right is so elementary from a legal or any other point of view that it does not need any discussion.

This Congress has the right to say to whom the people's money shall be paid. Congress will not be denied and should never be denied that right. The question involved here is one that simply involves that proposition and that statement.

The employees named in the amendment have been reported as being connected with organizations or having been members of organizations or of making statements which appeared to be subversive of our form of government. These organizations have been thoroughly investigated. They have been looked into, not by this subcommittee alone, but by various other committees of this Government, and the evidence has been brought and laid in the lap of our subcommittee. We have thoroughly deciphered it and thoroughly gone over it. If this committee decides that a person is not entitled to hold an office in this Government, and this Congress, the representatives of the people, adopts that decision, then I challenge anyone to deny the statement I make, that there is no power on this earth or in this Government that can take away that right and can keep a man in office when this Congress says that he cannot be kept in office.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman care to yield? I do not want to interrupt the gentleman if he does not want to be interrupted.

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The question was asked yesterday whether there was any precedent for taking people off the pay roll because you did not agree with their political philosophies. There is a direct precedent for it. Some of us may have forgotten it. In 1939 the Communists of the city of New York took charge of the Federal Theater project and the Federal Writers project. After a long and tortuous hearing in the House during which the gentleman from New York and I were burned in effigy in the public square in New York for our political beliefs, this House and the Senate passed and the President signed a bill that took literally thousands of Communists off the Federal pay roll.

Mr. KERR. This very question as to whether the Congress has a right to deny an appropriation or take a man off the pay roll has been decided as many as three times, twice in an opinion of the Supreme Court, and once in an opinion of the Attorney General. Your committee has been diligent and has looked into the law in respect to this matter.

In the case of Hart against United States, which is a case that arose in the Court of Claims and appears at volume 16, page 484 of the Court of Claims Reports, a case which was afterward affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States in the One Hundred and Eighteenth United States Reports, page 62, the Court said, in an opinion by Judge Davis of the Court of Claims:

> The absolute control of the moneys of the United States is in Congress and Congress is responsible for its exercise of this great power to indicate a class of persons who shall not be paid out of general appropriations, but shall come to Congress for relief.

In an opinion found in the Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States, volume 7, page 215, the following appears:

> While the power of appointment to office is essentially an executive function, Congress has the power to prescribe conditions to the complete investiture of an office and qualifications for office and it may control appointments through the control of appropriations and salaries. This control may take effect in the refusal of appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. KERR. The question arose in another case in the United States courts, and I quote an excerpt from the opinion:

> An officer appointed for a definite time, or during good behavior, has not any vested interest or contract right in his office, from which Congress cannot deprive him. Such an officer enjoys a privilege revocable by the sovereignty, at will, and one legislature cannot deprive its successor of the power of revocation (Chenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S. 99).

Mr. Chairman, it looks as if when we approach this matter from a legal standpoint, the proposition that we have brought before this Congress, and that Congress must consider, is elementary.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. For a question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To inquire of the gentleman whether any member of his committee, or the committee, found anything in these men's record as public servants that indicates they are not performing their duty working for the Government in their respective jobs at the present time?

Mr. KERR. I do not think we looked into that. The gentleman can see that if we had gone afield to look into that, how much more time we would have had to take. I stated what we were delegated to do, and this House fully understands it. Nobody asked us to see whether these men were conducting themselves properly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Did the gentleman's committee find whether these men or any one of them is doing anything that, in the committee's judgment, would obstruct the winning of the war or interfering with it at the present time?

Mr. KERR. We did not go into that phase of the question.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. Did the inquiries made by the gentleman's committee disclose how these people for whom the Democrats are constantly being compelled to apologize affixed themselves to the Federal pay roll, how they became a part of this administration?

Mr. KERR. As a matter of fact, I will say that we did not make inquiry into that. We found them on the pay roll, under suspicion.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. No. I call to the attention of the House that there is another question involved in this matter which deserves to be considered, and I think it is fundamental. These employees under investigation have no property rights in their offices. There are some offices in which the holders have a property right, and it may take impeachment to remove them, but these people under investigation have no property rights in these offices. One Congress can take away their rights given them by another. Therefore, you do not have to resort, and Congress does not have to resort, to instituting impeachment proceedings in order to remove from office those who have no property rights in the office, but are simply employees of the Government. We maintain that the head of a department has no constitutional prerogative in its appointments.

Mr. Chairman, I have attempted to cover the law involved in the determination of this matter. Other members of the committee will argue the evidence pertaining to the various cases for you to consider.

I cannot refrain from mentioning a picture I was familiar with when a boy, a long number of years ago. In my grandfather's library there was a large picture of George Washington, and almost every man in this country 100 years ago had in his home a picture of George Washington. I shall never forget that picture. It was a picture of Washington mounted on his white horse at Valley Forge and he was pointing down to one of his generals and giving the following command, "Put none but Americans on guard tonight." That command should inspire every true American to be on guard at this perilous period of our national life.

As a further authority to sustain the position of the subcommittee in the matter I quote from the speech of Hon. John Randolph Tucker, one of the ablest of American Constitutional lawyers, which he made in Congress about 65 years ago, reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress.

He says that—

> The power over the purse of the people is a part of those inherited privileges vested by the people in this House and in the Senate, by means of which the people's representatives in the legislative department may check executive usurpation and constrain a redress of grievances. This money power was the lever by which the Saxon people upheaved the solid centralism of the Norman polity and transferred the monarchy of the Conquest into the noblest type of constitutional government in the Old World. This power over the purse in the hands of the Commons made the sword impotent in the hands of the king. The power was used there—in England— as the medicine of the constitution; the Tudors and the Stuarts demanded supplies for their schemes of ambition in war and peace; the Commons halted on grievances; the crown sent messengers to them to hurry up supplies and adjourn without redress of grievances; but the Commons said, the purse is ours to give or to withhold; to give absolutely or on condition, abandon dangerous power and practices. Let go your hold on our liberties and we will give you money. This weapon for a people's defense, well and wisely wielded, has reformed the British monarchy, purged away its despotic principles, enlarged popular authority, secured personal liberty, and the personal rights of man by the splendid muniments of law and an independent judiciary, and brought the whole government under the influence and control of the will of the people. It was the light of civilization which banished the night of barbarism from the kingdom.

Sir Erskine May, in his Constitutional History of England, volume 1, page 440, says: "One of the most ancient and valued rights of the Commons is that of voting money and granting taxes to the Crown for the public service. From the earliest times they have made this right the means of extorting concessions from the Crown and advancing the liberties of the people. They upheld it with a bold spirit against the most arbitrary kings, and the bill of rights crowned their final triumph over prerogative. They upheld it with equal firmness against the Lords."

The struggle in England to obtain control of the money of the Government was long and obstinate and extended over a period of more than a thousand years. The Commons first obtained the right to sit separate from the House of Lords. They then demanded the privilege of originating the revenue bill, and when they had once gained this power they used it as a defense against any encroachment upon their rights, and as a means of destroying the prerogative of the King wherever it encroached upon the rights of the people. The King came to them and demanded supplies. The Commons said, "We will give you money, but you must redress grievances." The right which the people have today through their general assembly to determine what appropriations shall be made and how, what claims against the state shall be paid and when, is a right derived from this great struggle between the Commons and the King, and is crystallized and preserved in that article of the Constitution to which we have referred—that no money shall be withdrawn from the Treasury, except in consequence of appropriations by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask not to be interrupted until I have finished the presentation of the case I am about to present. I want it clearly understood at the beginning that I am not an attorney. I suppose many Members of the House are aware of that fact.

First, I shall go into just a little bit of the history of the Kerr committee and advise the membership just what might have happened if the Kerr committee had not been brought into existence. About 3 months ago there was what might be called a concerted effort to remove from the pay roll several score employees who had been investigated by the Dies committee. The method of their removal was to be merely an amendment offered to an appropriation bill, including them all, and removing them. Many of us here in the House thought, firstly, that such a procedure was un-American, and, secondly, that every man, no matter who he is, no matter of what he is accused, has a right to a hearing. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in collaboration with my distinguished colleague, the ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] decided upon the procedure which ultimately brought about the Kerr committee. If it had not been for the formation of this committee, I say unhesitatingly this afternoon, that in the frame of mind the House was in 3 months ago, all of these ladies and gentlemen who had been cited by the Dies committee would probably not have been on the pay roll today. I, unfortunately—unfortunately from a personal standpoint—was appointed a member of the Kerr committee under protest. It has been one of the most unpleasant and distasteful tasks I have ever undertaken. I say for the Kerr committee, that I have never sat with four men quite as patriotic, quite as fair-minded, as meticulous as were the members of this committee.

The reports we have brought before you call for removal of three employees from the Federal pay roll. We have heard seven in all. We have made a determination in six cases, removing three. No determination has been made in the seventh.

It is my unpleasant duty this afternoon to take the case of Dr. Robert Morss Lovett, secretary of the Virgin Islands. Dr. Lovett has a very complete file in the hands of the Dies committee, which file we obtained. Dr. Lovett has a very complete file in the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which file we obtained. He has a very complete file with the Interdepartmental Committee, Civil Service Commission, and we have obtained them all. We examined the files very carefully. Dr. Lovett was called before the committee and questioned at some length, and the committee came to the conclusion that Dr. Lovett is not a fit person to remain on the Government pay roll.

I am not going to argue with anyone this afternoon whether this House has a right to remove anyone from the pay roll, or whether it has not. I think it has and I am so voting. I am not accusing Dr. Lovett of any crime, but I am saying this from a layman's standpoint. If in private industry I happened, for the sake of argument, to be president of General Motors Corporation, we will say, and I had a man the type of Dr. Lovett as the superintendent of my Pontiac plant or my Chevrolet plant, and I and my board of directors had laid down a certain design, a certain type of manufacture for this automobile, and I turned it over to Dr. Lovett, superintendent of the plant, and if Dr. Lovett went through the plant and said, "Powers, the president of this plant, and the board of directors, who are about crazy, tell me that this is the design of this automobile. I am telling you workmen this design is rotten. I am telling you workmen we should not have such a design. I just do not like it. If you have to build this design do this to it and do the other thing to it."

That is the way I am looking at this problem. I would not have Dr. Lovett or the other two gentlemen mentioned in this report on my pay roll for 15 minutes.

Again, let me tell you this: We are not accusing Dr. Lovett of anything criminal, but we are saying that because of his past and his present affiliations, his membership in certain organizations, he should not be on the pay roll. Dr. Lovett, in my opinion, was a professional joiner. He joined several score of organizations, and among those organizations were six which came under the scope of the mandate of Public Law 135 and Public Law 644 of the Seventy-seventh Congress. Those six organizations which Dr. Lovett admitted either membership in or association with are: First, the American Peace Mobilization, later known as American People's Mobilization; second, American Youth Congress; third, League of American Writers; fourth, National Committee for People's Rights; fifth, National Federation for Constitutional Liberties; sixth, International Labor Defense.

I am not in favor of stifling free speech and I say that Dr. Lovett has the right to go anywhere and speak in any way he sees fit, but he is not going to do it along the lines he has been doing while he is on the public pay roll, if I have anything to do with it.

Back in 1936 Dr. Lovett was quite active in Norman Thomas' campaign. I want to read you an extract from a speech he made during that campaign, and you can judge for yourself. To quote Dr. Lovett:

> I shall vote for Norman Thomas for President because he is the only man who will take the control of this country away from the capitalists and place that control in the hands of the people. The Socialist Party is a party of poor and working classes. The Communist Party is also a party of the laboring or working classes and their candidate, Earl Browder, stands for the same things as does Norman Thomas, but I believe the Socialist Party has the best approach to the problem that confronts us today * * *. The worker today must either be a Communist or a Socialist, for neither of the older parties offer any hope. President Roosevelt has been in power for 4 years and has done nothing. It is still the same old system under which the workers are taxed to help the capitalists get more money and more power. Vote for Norman Thomas, and through him you will be voting for yourselves.

That is from one of Dr. Lovett's speeches, and it is verbatim.

Back in 1935 the Illinois State Legislature made an investigation of Dr. Lovett, and during that investigation there came to light a letter he had written to one Morris Gordin. I am going to quote that letter:

DEAR GORDIN: I have your book, Utopia in Chains, and am sending it to Dr. Jerome Davis, the best reviewer I can think of for books and the early days of the Russian revolution. I hope it will be very successful. I assure you there was no "reversal of attitude" on my part. I was anxious to have the book published as a human story, not caring in the least whether it reflects on the Russian governments, or the United States Government, or any other—all, in my opinion, being rotten. Houghton, Mifflin will undoubtedly handle the book as a counterrevolutionary document, and obviously I cannot associate myself with such a campaign.

Most sincerely,

ROBERT M. LOVETT.

Then when the Illinois State Legislature finished the investigation they published the following as one of their findings, on June 26, 1935:

Fair consideration of all evidence received by the committee compels the conclusion that Prof. Robert Morss Lovett has pursued an unpatriotic course of conduct for a period of 8 or 10 years. From the testimony and exhibits considered by the committee, he is not loyal to the spirit or letter of the Constitution of Illinois or the United States.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the few moments I have left, let me summarize by saying I believe I have touched the high spots of the Lovett hearing and I feel quite strongly in this matter. I am hopeful the votes for the Kerr amendment will be almost unanimous.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Is it not a fact that Dr. Morss Lovett, when questioned under oath, admitted membership in associations and affiliation with a number of these designated Communist front organizations?

Mr. POWERS. Oh, definitely; he was proud of it, very proud of it.

Mr. TABER. He was vice president of one.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Was Dr. Lovett given a full opportunity to be heard before the committee himself?

Mr. POWERS. He certainly was; he had a full hearing, and before the hearing was over he was asked if there was anything he wanted to say or add in connection with the record, and if he wanted to make a general statement, which he did. He had every opportunity to present his case to the Kerr committee.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.

Mr. BUSBEY. For the RECORD, I should like to state that the report from which the gentleman read of the investigation by the Illinois State Legislature on Dr. Lovett was the report of a committee composed of three men who opposed more vigorously than any other three men in the entire State legislature any investigation of the University of Chicago at that time.

Mr. POWERS. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, let me call this to the attention of the membership of this body: In my very humble opinion, this Government is now being loaded down with people of this type. The people who employ them will not get rid of them; no one can get rid of them unless the Congress itself does the job. I am hopeful they will do the job.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey yields back 1 minute.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] to extend his remarks.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, under our system of representative democracy, the people who are the source of all governmental power, speak through their chosen representatives.

Under our system of representative democracy, the voice of the representative is supposed to be the composite voice of the people he represents; the ballots he casts here on the floor are but the composite ballots of the people back home.

Under our system of representative democracy, if governmental changes are to be made those changes are submitted to the people, and the people after free and open discussion pass judgment upon the changes and by their ballots commission us, their representatives, to vote for or against them.

And, Mr. Chairman, believing with all my heart in our system of representative democracy, I am ever willing to follow the mandate of the people.

But, Mr. Chairman, believing as I do in our system of representative democracy, I am unwilling to sit idly by and let go unchallenged the placing in directive positions those who share views that are inimical to every concept of the Government I love and have sworn to uphold, and who by reason of the offices they hold are in position by devious ways and insidious methods to bring about changes in our system of government that would undermine the very foundation stones upon which this democracy rests.

Here in Congress I see no evidence of a desire to change our system of government. If such a desire existed to any appreciable extent that desire would manifest through the representatives of the people demanding a change. That the Representatives in Congress, practically to a man, are strong believers in and defenders of our representative democracy, is strong and conclusive evidence that the people are satisfied with our system. Further evidence that our people are satisfied is reflected in another and convincing way. While the Dies committee has made mistakes, there is one thing that it has done that atones for all mistakes and that thing is the fact that it has uncovered the subversive influences that are seeking to undermine our Government and arouse our people to the seriousness of the situation. And the strong and practically unanimous sentiment of our people in approving the work of the Dies committee demonstrates to the world that the American people are united in their effort to preserve and hold inviolate the system of government the founding fathers conceived and brought into being.

While I see no evidence of a desire to change our system of government, either among the people or among the representatives of the people, I do see such evidence among some of those holding directive positions in our bureaus and departments.

No one familiar with what has been going on in Government lately will question my statement. If they do, while I could give many concrete examples, it will suffice, I believe, in this discussion to present but one glaring example that came to my attention just a few days ago. I am a member of the committee to investigate the Farm Security Administration. With respect to the traditional American land policy of private ownership in fee simple, what did I find? Now, my colleagues, when you question the wisdom of private ownership of land in fee simple in this country you are questioning one of the fundamental principles upon which our Government rests. And when you find in our bureaus and departments those who are attempting by insidious circumvention to undermine this great American principle the time has arrived for action, immediate and drastic action. While we like to boast that our forefathers came over seeking political and religious freedom, the fact is that probably more came over seeking land freedom than political and religious freedom, knowing that land freedom has, some way, ever carried with it most of the other freedoms. Yes; they came, the great majority of them, because they could own their own lands and upon them erect their homes, in the conscious understanding that howsoever humble those homes might be they would be their castles and would be sacred from the invasion or molestation of any man, however powerful or lordly that man might be—a place so sacred that not even the law could enter without proper warrant—and that here conscience would be the only master of their speech, their politics, their religion.

Here is what the committee found:

The Farm Security Administration succeeded to the activities of the Resettlement Administration. The Resettlement Administration was administered by one Dr. Rex. G. Tugwell, who, according to his own written utterance, entertains these views with respect to the private ownership of land. I quote:

Everyone familiar with American agriculture must know that the most hazardous situation possible to a man of family is to have the fee simple ownership of land. (Excerpt from report by Rex. G. Tugwell to Secretary of the Interior, dated December 1941.)

One Dr. George S. Mitchell is at present, and has been for some time past, Assistant Administrator of Farm Security Administration. Dr. Mitchell's views with respect to the private ownership of land are as follows, and I quote:

According to Dr. George Mitchell, Assistant Administrator of the Farm Security Administration, now visiting in San Juan, this fee-simple ownership of property is the greatest detriment to our national prosperity. Dr. Mitchell believes that long-term leases including sometimes the right to pass on land to heirs, would probably benefit the situation. (Excerpts from Puerto Rico World Journal of May 22, 1941.)

We further found, without congressional authority, but to the contrary in plain violation of the express mandate of Congress as expressed in the Jones-Bankhead Farm Tenant Act, that the Farm Security Administration, in furtherance of these foreign bureaucratic ideas was attempting to get around the traditional American land policy of private ownership in fee simple by making 99-year leases. Think of it, my colleagues, making governmental serfs out of American freemen. Yes, my colleagues, it looks like a deliberate and studied effort is being made by these bureaucrats to undermine our time-honored land system and set up in its place some kind of paternalistic system whereby we would substitute Government ownership for private ownership of land and force the unfortunate occupants to become forever and eternally wards of the Government. Moreover, we found that the Farm Security Administration, without authority from Congress, had set up numerous collective farming projects.

I have only cited the above instance, my colleagues, to show the insidious workings of those who entertain these foreign philosophies and who hold directive positions, in order to bring the seriousness of the situation to your attention. Now, what are the issues? Let me state them simply:

First. Shall governmental changes be brought about by the people through their chosen representatives or by bureaucrats, some of whom entertain strange and foreign philosophies, by insidious usurpation.

Second. Shall only those who love our Government, respect its constitutional powers, and are in sympathy with the democratic concept, hold governmental positions, or shall we throw the bars down and permit the employment of those whose philosophies of government are foreign to the democratic concept and who foster and associate with organizations that would overthrow our Government or substitute in its place another form.

WE ARE TO DECIDE THESE QUESTIONS TODAY

Oh, I know a lot of sophistical tears will be shed in the name of the Constitution, especially in the name of that part of the Constitution known as the Bill of Rights. In answer let me say: No man who attempts to circumvent the constitutional right of the people to formulate and establish governmental policies through their chosen representatives, as some of the bureaucrats have and are attempting to do, should be allowed to escape the consequences of his act by invoking the protection of the very instrument he seeks to destroy.

Congress, the representative of the people, is the policy-making body of our Government, and whenever it becomes known to the Congress that there are those who are attempting to thwart the will of Congress, or that there are those whose concepts of government are foreign to our system holding directive positions and who are likely to attempt to thwart the will of Congress by fostering their beliefs by insidious methods upon an unsuspecting people, it is the duty of Congress to take such action as may be necessary to safeguard its prerogative, even if that action calls for prohibiting appropriated funds from being used to pay the salaries of such persons. If Congress, under the Constitution, acts as the policy-making body for the people, it naturally follows that it is the duty of Congress to see, as far as possible, that the administration of those policies are in safe hands. Ever remember that the representatives of the people are directly answerable to the people, while the only way the people can reach the bureaucrat is through their Representatives. Yes, my colleagues, Congress is the bulwark that stands between the bureaucrat and the people. If we do not stand firm then, perchance, representative government in this country may be lost. If direct constitutional authority of the Congress is asked for then I refer you to sections 1 and 8 of article I of the Constitution.

Just one other thought on the subject: The bureaucrat occupies an entirely different position to the Government than that occupied by the ordinary citizen. The ordinary citizen who entertains strange and un-American philosophies of government can do a lot of talking without doing very much harm, because he is not in position to put his beliefs into practice. Usually the very best treatment to give such men is to let them talk themselves to death. But when we come to the bureaucrat, especially those holding directive positions, we are dealing with men who can put their un-American doctrines and philosophies into practice. Most of these subversive bureaucrats are smart, and, my colleagues, do not for one moment discount their shrewdness. And being smart and shrewd make them all the more dangerous, because they will sugar-coat their pet un-American changes with an American flavor that, until the sugar-coating wears off, will fool the very elect.

Now, my colleagues, if these bureaucrats who hold Government positions want to preach their un-American doctrines and philosophies, let them get out of the Government service, and then, so far as I am concerned, they can exhibit their foreign views from every soap box in America so long as they do not advocate the overthrow of our Government by force. Believing as I do in free speech, I think the best cure for these wild-eyed, misguided souls is to let them freely exhibit their views to real every day Americans. They will find out in a short time, in my opinion, that the only effect of their fulminations is an impairment of their vocal cords.

So much for the first question. As to the second question, let me say that no man who does not love this Government and cherish its institutions should be permitted to be upon the Government pay roll. The only safe way to follow in perpetuating and holding inviolate our democratic system is to see that everyone connected with our Government, from President to water boy, not only believes in but has the love of our Government in his heart. While we ever welcome constructive criticism that has for its end improvement of our system, we should not tolerate men in the service of our Government who indulge in destructive criticism that has for its end the overthrow of our system or the substitution of another form in its place. The words of the Master, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad" are peculiarly applicable, and should be the yardstick by which the fitness of those in Government service should be measured.

Now I ask your indulgence for just a few minutes while I discuss the procedure we have adopted in weeding out these subversive bureaucrats.

The first instance in which the House attempted to rid the Government service of those holding subversive views was in the case of David Lasser back in June 1941. In that case an amendment was offered from the floor to the emergency appropriation bill prohibiting the use of any of the funds carried in the bill to pay the salary of Lasser. The proceeding impressed me as being so manifestly unfair and unconstitutional, due to the fact that Congress had never investigated the case, nor had it given Lasser an opportunity to answer the subversive charges, that although I did not know Lasser at the time and what I had heard about him was unfavorable, I came to his rescue in quite a lengthy speech which appears in the RECORD of June 19, 1941. My effort, along with the efforts of others, resulted in the appropriations committee giving Lasser an opportunity to be heard. Lasser was heard and the appropriations committee after the hearing decided that an injustice had been done, and the prohibition against him was repealed. My attitude in the Lasser case clearly shows that I believe in the constitutional guaranty that the accused should be furnished with a statement of the charges against him and should be given an opportunity to be heard and present his defense. This end was accomplished in the cases now before the House for consideration and determination by the House appointing a special committee of the Committee on Appropriations to examine into the charges preferred against the parties involved. The report of the special committee sets out clearly the procedure followed in arriving at its decisions. The procedure was as follows, and I quote from the report:

The special subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations created pursuant to House Resolution 105, Seventy-eighth Congress "* * * to examine into any and all allegations or charges that certain persons in the employ of the several executive departments and other executive agencies are unfit to continue in such employment by reason of their present association or membership or past association or membership in or with organizations whose aims or purposes are or have been subversive to the Government of the United States" have procured and examined the evidence in the cases of employees of the Federal Communications Commission named by the chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities in a speech on the floor of the House of Representatives, February 1, 1943, and now submit the following report in regard to these employees.

The special subcommittee understands the purpose of House Resolution 105 to be that said committee shall procure the evidence in each individual case from each department or agency of the Government having any such evidence, and from such evidence, supplemented by direct testimony from the employee, arrive at a proper determination of the matter within the provisions of the resolution.

Your committee secured the services of the Honorable Matt H. Allen, of North Carolina, as attorney, and has assembled in the cases above mentioned evidence from the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the United States Civil Service Commission, the Interdepartmental Committee, and the Federal Communications Commission. It is voluminous. After an examination of the available evidence by members of said committee, each employee was invited to appear, and did appear, and explain under oath in detail his answer to the various allegations.

In my opinion, the procedure followed by the special committee gave the accused every right to which they are entitled.

No one can challenge the high standing and patriotism of the members of the special committee. They are all men of ability and unimpeachable integrity. A better, a fairer, a more judicious committee could not have been selected. I am willing to abide by the findings of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say that the thing that disturbs me most in connection with these men of questionable Americanism securing directive positions with our Government is this: Who is responsible? Now, I am not so dumb as to think that it just happened. Someone caused the happenings, and what I am interested in is finding out who that someone is. I hope the scope of the special committee will be broadened and the special committee directed to make investigation into who is responsible for these happenings. We will have an endless job if we have to continue to weed out what someone else is doing. Let us get at the source of this thing and put a curb on the party or parties responsible for placing such people in the Government service.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE] to extend his remarks.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, it is clear that before the House can take action on the proposed amendment to this deficiency appropriation bill to ban salaries for Goodwin Watson, William E. Dodd, Jr., and Robert Morss Lovett, we must consider two questions of major issue.

The first such question is the definition of subversive activities by which the Kerr committee has seen fit to report that these men are unfit for public service.

It seems clear that this Congress cannot in all conscience take action on the basis of legislative definitions which will not stand the test of Supreme Court scrutiny.

Let us then examine the Kerr committee definition from the point of view of how it would withstand such scrutiny. I quote the first part of the definition:

Subversive activity in this country derives from conduct intentionally destructive of or inimical to the Government of the United States—

The question underlying this section would seem to be this: In what way does this alter consideration of any activity which would ordinarily fall within the jurisdiction of the courts of our land as coming within the scope of our statutory handling of sedition and treason? It would seem that this makes no change.

Does this not signify then, that Congress by attempting to legislate such activity to its own jurisdiction may be invading the province of the judicial branch of our Government?

We must, particularly in this time of war, take heed lest by such action we undermine the very foundation of our democracy—our Constitution, which has unmistakably set forth the separation between the executive, legislative, and judicial branches.

I continue with the definition—that which seeks to undermine its institutions, or to distort its functions, or to impede its projects, or to lessen its efforts—

Mr. Chairman, I urge the members of this House to recall the number of times they have used phrases such as "impede its projects," "distort its functions," "lessen its efforts." And in what connection have such phrases been used? Not in the sense of undermining our Constitution or Government. Not at all. They have used these expressions time and time again to characterize their opinion of certain legislative proposals: The establishment of the Office of Price Administration, the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act, the proposal for unemployment compensation and social security, the setting up of the 8-hour work day, the proposal to register trade unions, outlaw the right to strike, and countless others.

At one time or another, by one group or another, all of these have been considered moves to "distort the functions," "lessen the efforts," "impede the projects" of the Government of the United States.

Can we then convict men on such vague, nebulous characterizations of—not their activities—but their utterances and opinions? How many of us, by that same definition, would find ourselves unfit for government service?

The sentence ends—

the ultimate end being to overturn it all.

Mr. Chairman, time and time again the Supreme Court of the United States has indicated that charges of utterances inciting to violence against the United States Government must also show "clear and present danger."

The eminent jurist, Mr. Zechariah Chafee says in his book, Free Speech in the United States, page 81, in discussing Schenck v. United States (249 U. S. 47 (1919)), I quote:

This desire to head off actual injury to the government is, we have seen, the basis of all suppression of discussion, unless it is limited very narrowly. In order to give force to the first amendment, Justice Holmes draws the boundary line very close to the test of incitement at common law and clearly makes the punishment of words for their remote bad tendency impossible.

Mr. Chairman, I again urge that we give grave and serious consideration to branding men "unfit for Government service" because of their opinions and utterances. We dare not lay ourselves open to the charge that our war against the Axis in the name of democracy and freedom will go to naught if Congress itself denies clearly granted constitutional liberties to employees of the Federal Government.

The second question of major issue on which we must ponder is that raised by the report of the Kerr committee on page 3. The report states that the question of responsibility for who shall run the Government, and who shall not be entrusted with official responsibility has been settled, and I quote, "at the bar of public opinion."

Mr. Chairman, can we seriously convict men on the basis of any such judgment? Who shall say that my interpretation of the "bar of public opinion" has any more validity or is a more accurate evaluation than that of my neighbor?

One of the freedoms for which we are engaged in this great struggle is that men shall have the right to lawful trial when they are accused; that they shall not suffer conviction at the arbitrary whim of opinion; that they shall not be branded "traitors" for dangerous thoughts.

Mr. Chairman, Goodwin Watson, William Dodd, and Robert Morss Lovett are branded "unfit for Government service"; not because of their inability to do the work assigned to them, but because they have opinions. Such opinions may differ from yours or mine. But can we convict them of disservice to their country because they believed enough in their opinions to exercise their American right to express them? Surely not.

I hope that the House will take serious cognizance of the possible consequences of the action proposed in this amendment. I hope that we shall once more reaffirm to ourselves and to the world that America is, in truth, fighting a war for freedom and democracy, and that this great Congress of the United States clearly understands its obligation to defend the rights of the individual, whose exercise is under the intent examination of the freedom-loving peoples of the world.

Two interesting decisions of the United States Supreme Court discuss what limitations may be placed on freedom of speech in the United States:

SUPREME COURT ON FREEDOM OF SPEECH

1. Schenck v. United States (249 U. S. 47, 39 S. Ct. Rept. 247):

"The question in every case of the alleged infringement of the constitutional freedom of speech and press is whether the words used are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent; it is a question of proximity and degree."

2. Herndon v. Lowry (301 U. S. 242, 57 S. Ct. 732):

"The power of a State to abridge freedom of speech is the exception rather than the rule; and any limitation upon individual liberty must, to avoid unconstitutionality, have appropriate relation to the safety of the State."

Mr. Chairman, I urge the defeat of the Kerr amendment.

The Federal Communications Commission, which employs Messrs. Dodd and Watson, has issued a considered opinion and analysis of the Kerr committee report, relative to Drs. Watson and Dodd. In order that the accused may have something more directly in their own behalf in the record I include that statement hereinbelow emanating from those who should know them best, their employers:

REPORT BY THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION (COMMISSIONERS CASE, CRAVEN, AND PAYNE, DISSENTING) IN THE MATTER OF GOODWIN WATSON, FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN, AND WILLIAM E. DODD, JR.

The Commission has before it the question of the continued employment of Goodwin Watson, Frederick L. Schuman, and William E. Dodd, Jr. The occasion for the present reconsideration of the qualifications of Watson, Schuman, and Dodd is the Report of the Special Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations Acting Pursuant to House Resolution 105, Seventy-eighth Congress, filed April 21, 1943. This report finds that Watson is "unfit for the present to continue in Government service"; that there is not sufficient evidence concerning Schuman "to support a recommendation of unfitness to service in the employment of the Government at this time"; and that Dodd is "unfit for the present to continue in Government service."

We are keenly aware that, subject to Civil Service and other legally imposed restrictions, the responsibility for determining the qualifications of its own employees for employment and for their continuance in employment rests upon the Commission itself. Under the law, we may not employ or continue in employment any person who has "membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of Government in the United States" (act of Aug. 2, 1939, sec. 9 (a), 53 Stat. 1148); nor can we employ or continue in employment "any person who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence" (Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1943, sec. 4, — Stat. —). In selecting employees the fullest care is exercised by the Commission to see to it not only that they meet the statutory qualifications above mentioned and have the required skill and training but also that they have no loyalty of any kind which would conflict with their loyalty to this country or with the proper performance of their duties as employees of the Commission. Our determination today is arrived at with a full awareness that under the law the primary responsibility is ours.

The records of Watson, Schuman, and Dodd were carefully examined before they were employed. They have been even more carefully investigated since their employment. The report of the subcommittee contains no information or charges which the Commission has not previously considered, and there is nothing in the report which would warrant the Commission in changing the conclusion it has reached that these men are qualified for the work assigned them.

All three men are native-born citizens, admirably qualified for the positions which they hold. Watson, before joining the Commission, had taught for 16 years at Columbia University and was widely recognized as one of the outstanding social psychologists in the country. He has been a student of world affairs. He is an ordained minister of the Methodist Church; has served in various Methodist pulpits and as director of research for the national council of the Young Men's Christian Association. Schuman taught at the University of Chicago, as well as at Harvard University and the University of California; from 1936 until his employment with the Commission he was Woodrow Wilson professor of government at Williams College. Dodd is a graduate of the University of Chicago and has taught at the University of North Carolina and at William and Mary College; he served as secretary to his father, the late Ambassador to Germany, during his ambassadorship, and edited his father's official diary for publication. All three, without question, are eminently qualified, both by training and actual practical experience, for their Commission duties—the analysis of foreign broadcast propaganda.

These men have been on the job and under our observation for a substantial time. No question has at any time been raised concerning the competence, accuracy, or objectivity of their work. Their reports come under the daily scrutiny of their supervisors and of responsible officials of Military Intelligence, Naval Intelligence, Office of Strategic Services, State Department, Office of War Information, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Board of Economic Warfare, Lend-Lease, Department of Justice, etc. It is inconceivable that any bias, distortion, or subversion could escape the attention of these agencies. They have frequently commended the quality of the work performed.

Letters cited below from many eminent citizens whose character is unimpeachable and who are in a position to know the facts show the high respect in which the loyalty, trustworthiness, and competence of these men are held.

Watson, Schuman, and Dodd enjoy the full respect and confidence of their superiors, associates, and subordinates. The removal of any one of them would result in a direct reduction in the efficiency and quality of the essential war activity carried on by the foreign broadcast intelligence service.

All three, by reason of their close contact and exhaustive study of world affairs, perceived earlier than many of their countrymen the rising menace of the Nazis, Fascists, and Japanese. Spurred on by this insight, they sought by speech, by writing, and by cooperation with others working toward similar ends to awaken their countrymen to the peril which became manifest to all Americans at Pearl Harbor. We do not, of course, endorse every word these men have uttered or every action they have taken, but we believe that the right of freedom of speech which the Constitution guarantees to every person embraces even those with whom we disagree.

Nothing contained in the report of the special subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations acting pursuant to House Resolution 105, Seventy-eighth Congress, filed April 21, 1943, has caused us to abandon this belief. Nowhere does the subcommittee report charge that these employees "have membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States"; nor does the subcommittee report find that any of them "advocates, or * * * is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence." Nor does the subcommittee report set forth any other reason in law, in fairness or arising out of the exigencies of the present war for the dismissal of these employees at this time. In practical effect these men have only been farsighted and aggressive in opposing nazism and fascism. Their citizenship and the legality of their conduct have not been brought into question in any court of law. We are confident that the Congress desires to assure the maintenance of our traditional legal processes.

As Commissioners, we are sworn to uphold the Constitution and the laws of the United States. We are obligated to preserve their orderly processes. We cannot in good conscience take a course of action which, however politic and easy, may violate the constitutional guaranties of due process of law and of free speech.

RECORD OF GOODWIN WATSON

We originally employed Goodwin Watson as Chief of the Analysis Section of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service (P–6, $5,600) on November 17 1941. His record showed that he was 42 years old, and a native of Whitewater, Wis.; that for the past 16 years he had been a member of the faculty of Columbia University; and that he was widely considered to be one of the foremost social psychologists of the United States. He had enlisted as apprentice seaman and student of engineering in the Naval Training Corps, United States Navy, in 1918, and had served until honorably discharged. He had pursued graduate studies at the Union Theological Seminary; was an ordained minister of the Methodist Church; and had held pulpits in the Methodist Church in Parkerville, Wis., the Washington Park Community Church in Denver, Colo., and the St. James Methodist Episcopal Church in New York City. Thereafter he was instructor in religious education at the Union Theological Seminary, and principal of its Union School of Religion; and from 1925 to 1931, he was director of research for the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association. He was editor of the yearbook for the Psychological Study of Social Issues and also editor of the Journal of Social Psychology; and he had contributed widely to professional journals on subjects in his field. The post for which Watson was then under consideration involved the analysis of foreign propaganda; and hence we ascertained with particular care his foreign experience, which included study at the Universities of Berlin and Vienna and travel in Europe during periods totaling about 3 years.

Watson did not seek a job with the Commission; but rather, on the basis of the above data, the Commission sought Watson as the man best suited by professional education, training and actual practical experience in propaganda analysis to head its propaganda analysis section. Leaders in his profession unqualifiedly recommended to the Commission that Watson be appointed. The Watson appointment was approved by the Civil Service Commission.

From the begining Watson's work proved eminently satisfactory, as attested by the opinion of his immediate superior, his associates, his subordinates, and representatives of the armed forces and of other Government agencies to which the reports of Watson's section were circulated.

Thus, for example, on July 29, 1942, the War Shipping Administration, Recruitment and Manning Organization, wrote to Watson:

"The kind of material which you have sent over for our scrutiny is just what we are looking for. The examples you have marked seem to fall into four categories. These four, which are: news of survivors, news of ships sunk, news of shipping problems in the United States, and the morale of seamen, fit our problem exactly. I do not know how you can break these down so that your problem will be simplified. But, if it is possible, without too much trouble for you, the Recruitment and Manning Organization would certainly appreciate this service.

"The advantage of this material from our point of view is obvious. It gives us the foreign reaction, sometimes gives us information about approximate location of survivors, and gives us foreign propaganada in regard to United Nations' shipping."

On December 28, 1942, Mr. Nelson A. Rockefeller, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, wrote to the Director of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service:

"As the year draws to a close, I would like to express our appreciation for the fine cooperation which the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the Federal Communications Commission has given to our Radio Division during 1942. The assistance of Dr. Goodwin Watson, Mr. Harold Graves, and Mr. John Gardner has been particularly helpful, and I hope you will convey to them our sincere gratitude."

Under date of July 15, 1942, the Chief of the Army General Staff, Military Intelligence, Southern Section, European Branch, wrote:

"DEAR PROF. WATSON: The Vichy broadcast is exactly the kind of thing we want. Thank you very much for sending it and please be sure to send anything else of the sort."

On September 25, 1942, the Office of Strategic Services, Foreign Nationalities Branch, wrote to Watson:

"I want to thank your division again for its splendid cooperation on all matters of interest to us."

On September 11, 1942, the War Department General Staff, Military Intelligence Division, wrote to Watson:

"I am following up an informal inquiry made through my friend, Mr. Telford Taylor, concerning a recent item in your weekly bulletin dealing with Japanese cabinet changes. Mr. Taylor tells me that the coauthors of this item, which was much admired by this office, edit a weekly summary of limited distribution and, if it is permitted by your regulations, I would request that we be put on your list to receive this publication. If this is possible, the publication should be addressed to Colonel Carter W. Clarke, Chief, Special Service Branch, M. I. S., Room 3309, Munitions Building.

"Mr. Taylor also informed me of weekly luncheons on Wednesday, conducted by the authors of this study, and if it is permissible, I am sure that one or two members of our staff would like to attend. I am certain that Col. Alfred McCormack and I would be glad to avail ourselves of this opportunity."

These letters are typical of the favorable comments evoked by Watson's work from the various agencies to which it goes—State Department, Military Intelligence, Naval Intelligence, Office of War Information, Office of Strategic Services, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Board of Economic Warfare, Lend-Lease Administration, Department of Justice, etc. Equally significant is the total absence of a single complaint from any of these agencies that Watson's work is in any way incompetent, biased, or subject to criticism in any other way. That any subversive matter could possibly have escaped the close scrutiny which these naval and military intelligence and other agencies give to Watson's work is inconceivable.

The Commission has also received many letters testifying to Watson's loyalty, competence, and integrity. For example, Dr. William F. Russell, dean of Teachers College, Columbia University, wrote on January 27, 1942:

"I have been dean of Teachers College for 15 years and during all of that time Professor Watson has worked under my administration. I know him very well.

"I can testify to the professional competence of Goodwin Watson for the work that he is doing for the Federal Communications Commission. I know that he was employed in this work upon the recommendation of the leading psychologists in the United States, who are competent to judge.

"I wish further to testify to the loyalty of Prof. Goodwin Watson to the Government and Constitution of the United States and to the American ideal and way of life.

"I make this statement not because of my personal affection for Professor Watson, nor by guesswork, but rather because my administration in Teachers College has been twice under attack by the Communist organization of New York City. This I definitely know. On each occasion Professor Watson openly supported me and my administration and opposed the position which I knew was taken under influence of Communist headquarters. On many social and educational questions I have not agreed with the position taken by Professor Watson, but I have never found him lacking either in competence or loyalty."

On January 28, 1942, Harold D. Lasswell, the expert witness called by the Department of Justice in sedition proceedings and cited by the Dies committee itself as an authority on subversive activities, wrote:

"That Professor Watson is a thoroughly loyal American, who has at no time been associated with the Communist Party, is a fact. However, Dr. Watson is an outspoken friend of democracy, willing to 'stick his neck out' on behalf of truth as he sees it. Several times, therefore, he has come in the open on behalf of unpopular causes. Sometimes this has meant that his associates were persons whose motives were less high-minded than his own; but no genuine American, accustomed to the rough-and-tumble of political life, expects to avoid strange bedfellows. These activities by Professor Watson testify to his character and integrity as a citizen of our democracy and should be regarded as evidence of his fitness for a responsible position in the service of the Nation."

Letters commending Watson's competence and loyalty were also received from the following:

Dr. George F. Zook, president of the American Council on Education and formerly United States Commissioner of Education; Prof. Mark May, director of the Institute of Human Relations, Yale University; Frederick L. Redefer, secretary of the Progressive Education Association; Prof. Frederick C. McLaughlin, University of Missouri; Mrs. A. W. Clevenger, president, Illinois State Division, American Association of University Women; Dr. Edward W. Jones, Director of Personnel, University of Buffalo; Dr. Arthur Upham Pope, New York; Jay A. Urice, associate general secretary, National Council of the Y. M. C. A.; Prof. Arthur L. Swift, Jr., Union Theological Seminary; Prof. Hadley Cantril, Princeton University; Prof. Floyd Allport, Syracuse University; Prof. Gordon Allport, Harvard University; Prof. John Dollard, Yale University; Prof. Paul R. Farnsworth, Stanford University; Prof. Arthur I. Gates, Columbia University; Prof. James Gibson, Smith College; Prof. J. P. Guilford, University of Southern California; Prof. Donald W. MacKinnon, Yale University; Prof. Douglas McGregor, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Prof. M. A. Merrill, Stanford University; Prof. H. A. Murray, Harvard University; Prof. L. M. Terman, Stanford University; Prof. Edward C. Tolman, University of California; Prof. Franklin Fearing, University of California; Prof. W. C. H. Prentice, University of Vermont; Prof. L. Joseph Stone, Vassar College; Profs. David A. Grant, Harry F. Harlow, Delos D. Wickens, and W. J. Brogden, all of the University of Wisconsin; Prof. L. M. Hanks, Jr., University of Illinois; Prof. J. B. Rhine, University of North Carolina; Prof. Arthur W. Kornhauser, University of Chicago; Prof. A. R. Gilliland, Northwestern University; Prof. S. Stanfield Sargent, Barnard College; Prof. Daniel Leary, University of Buffalo; Prof. Margaret S. Quayle, State Teachers College, Buffalo, N. Y.; Profs. K. W. Oberlin and Mary Henle, University of Delaware; Prof. Irving E. Bender, Dartmouth College; Prof. Robert R. Sears, University of Iowa; Prof. Ray H. Simpson, University of Alabama; Profs. Horace English, Sidney Pressey, Carl Rogers, Harold Edgerton, Francis Robinson, Floyd Dockeray, Robert Williams, Francis Maxfield, Harold Burtt, and Henry Goddard, all of Ohio State University; Prof. T. F. Lentz, University of Washington; Prof. Leo B. Fagan, St. Louis University; Prof. J. F. Dashiell, University of North Carolina.

RECORD OF FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN

Frederick L. Schuman was employed by the Commission on October 21, 1942, as a principal political analyst (P-6, $5,600) in the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service. His record showed that he was 38 years old, and was born in Chicago, Ill. He was graduated from the University of Chicago in 1924, and had received his doctor's degree in political science in 1927. He had been employed by Butler Brothers and by Marshall Field & Co., and subsequently he was instructor and assistant professor in political science and international relations at the University of Chicago. Since 1936 he had been Woodrow Wilson Professor of Government at Williams College, Williamstown, Massachusetts; and he had been visiting lecturer in international relations at Harvard University and at the University of California.

Various letters of recommendation were received concerning Schuman. For example, Maj. Paul Birdsall, of the War Department General Staff, Military Intelligence Division G-2, wrote:

"I regard Dr. Schuman as a brilliant analyst of international relations and almost a pioneer in his diagnosis of the danger to this country and the entire world in the Nazi developments in Europe since about 1934. He combines with his intellectual qualities a loyal and honest character devoted to democratic principle and service of this country. In ability and loyalty I can think of no candidate better qualified for the post in your organization which you describe."

Beardsley Ruml, treasurer of R. H. Macy & Co., Inc., wrote concerning Schuman:

"I have no hesitancy in commending him from the standpoint of loyalty, judgment, and trustworthiness. In fact, as a person to do a penetrating job of analysis, I can think of no one who would be Dr. Schuman's equal."

Harold D. Lasswell, the expert witness called by the Department of Justice in sedition proceedings and cited by the Dies committee itself as an authority on subversive activities, wrote:

"There is no question of Dr. Schuman's thorough loyalty to the ideals of our country. He is a man of the highest personal integrity and is in every way an outstanding citizen and specialist.

"I think you would be very fortunate to secure the assistance of Dr. Schuman in the extremely important and delicate work that you have in hand."

Charles E. Merriam, of the department of political science of the University of Chicago, wrote:

"I am writing to say that I have the very highest regard for Dr. Schuman's loyalty, judgment, and trustworthiness."

Letters of recommendation were also received from J. P. Comer, chairman of the department of political science, Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.; Richard A. Newhall, Williams College; Walter B. Smith, chairman of the department of economics, Williams College; Donald E. Richmond, chairman of the department of mathematics, Williams College; John Hawley Roberts, chairman of the department of English, Williams College; Edgar A. Mowrer, Office of War Information; Tyler Dennett, Pulitzer prize biographer and former president of Williams College; Edgar J. Nathan, Jr., president of the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York; Robert R. R. Brooks, Office of Price Administration; and James P. Baxter, 3d, Deputy Director of the Office of Strategic Services.

Schuman's work is deemed excellent by his superiors, his associates, and his subordinates. As in the case of Watson, no criticism has ever been received from Military Intelligence, Naval Intelligence, or any of the other Government agencies which regularly scrutinize his work.

RECORD OF WILLIAM E. DODD, JR.

On December 1, 1941, we employed William E. Dodd, Jr., as editorial assistant (CAF-7, $2,600) in the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service. Dodd's record showed that he was 36 years old and a native of Virginia; that he was a graduate of the University of Chicago; and that he held a master's degree from Harvard University. He had taught English, American and European history at the University of North Carolina and at William and Mary College. He was especially qualified for reporting on foreign broadcast material by virtue of the fact that he held a doctor of philosophy degree from the University of Berlin; that he had served as secretary to his father, the late American Ambassador to Germany, during the ambassadorship; that he had edited his father's official diary for publication; and that he was versed in both French and German.

As in the cases of Watson and Schuman, it is significant that no criticism has ever been received concerning Dodd's work from any of the intelligence or other agencies which regularly scrutinize his reports.

The quality of the work of the three men under consideration is indicated by a memorandum, dated February 6, 1943, from Robert D. Leigh, Director of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service. Dr. Leigh wrote:

"As Director of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service during the last 7 months, I have been directly responsible for recommending to the Federal Communications Commission the appointment to our staff of Dr. Frederick Schuman, for recommending an increase of salary for Dr. Goodwin Watson as reclassified by the Civil Service Commission, and for recommending assignment of Dr. William E. Dodd, Jr., to our London office. I am glad to assume full responsibility for these recommendations. Each was made after full and careful investigation regarding fitness for the post designated.

"The removal of any one of the three would result in a direct reduction in the efficiency and quality of the modest but essential war activity carried on by the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service. The loss would be felt by the military, diplomatic, and war information agencies we exist to serve.

* * * * *

"I have examined all the evidence in our own files regarding Watson, Schuman, and Dodd, and all that has been yet made available to us by members of the Dies committee. It makes a clear, consistent pattern of people who because of close contact with, and exhaustive study of, the European scene (Dodd from the vantage point of the American Embassy in Berlin, Schuman and Watson from frequent visits to the Continent throughout the twenties and thirties) saw earlier than many of their fellow countrymen the rising menace and warmaking plans of the Nazis, Italians, and Japanese. They strove by speech, by writing, by cooperation with any and every group working toward similar ends to arouse their fellow countrymen to prevent the oncoming struggle by organizing with anti-Fascist nations a strong system of collective security. They advocated boycott of Japanese goods to aid China; they advocated aid to the Spanish Loyalist Government against the German-and-Italian-aided Franco government; they favored Russian anti-Nazi policy and then they roundly condemned Russia when the Russian-German pact of 1939 was signed and Russia subsequently invaded Finland.

"They were actively and aggressively trying to prevent the catastrophe of war by arming us materially and morally against the Nazis and Fascists. This is their record. They spoke at meetings with people of different beliefs—but always for the objectives outlined above. It was no fault or dereliction of theirs, but a historical accident that Communists in the United States during this period of the thirties were equally active against the Nazis and Fascists.

"To me such a record indicates political background and insights which recommend an expert for a position editing or analyzing enemy broadcasts in time of war rather than to disqualify him. I know the work, background, and character of these men well enough to feel that there is almost no likelihood of any additional evidence changing the essential picture, although evidence on any member of our staff is always welcomed.

"The purpose in writing this memorandum is to indicate my judgment as a responsible officer in charge of this Service, that Drs. Watson, Schuman, and Dodd are very well qualified for their posts, that they are using their expert knowledge skillfully, honestly, and faithfully in behalf of the war effort in this sector, and that their removal from the Service would be a direct, serious blow to our essential operations—let alone morale."

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS ACTING PURSUANT TO HOUSE RESOLUTION 105, SEVENTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION, DATED APRIL 21, 1943

We now have before us the report of the above subcommittee. This report finds that Watson is unfit for the present to continue in Government service, that there is not sufficient evidence concerning Schuman to support a recommendation of unfitness to serve in the employment of the Government at this time; and that Dodd is unfit for the present to continue in Government service.

Unfortunately, we have been unable to determine with any precision the grounds for the subcommittee's findings. Our general counsel was directed to attend the hearings before the subcommittee as an observer for the Commission, but permission to attend was refused him by the subcommittee The testimony was in closed session No transcript of the testimony has been made available. Nor do the general comments prefixed to the subcommittee's report aid us further.

The subcommittee states that this Nation has achieved its greatness through the ideals and philosophy of freedom written into its charter and Constitution; that it takes pride in those people who have always been and are now willing to offer their lives to protect these inalienable rights so well defined in our Declaration of Independence. those rights and duties which have made us great and strong and which we will never willingly surrender; that the Constitution of the United States rests upon public opinion; and many other statements of like purport with which we are in the fullest possible agreement.

The subcommittee also supplies a definition of subversive activity:

Subversive activity in this country derives from conduct intentionally destructive of or inimical to the Government of the United States—that which seeks to undermine its institutions, or to distort its functions, or to impede its projects, or to lessen its efforts, the ultimate end being to overturn it all. Such activity may be open and direct as by effort to overthrow, or subtle and indirect as by sabotage.

The general comments contained in the subcommittee's report, however, fail to specify wherein Watson and Dodd have run afoul of this definition, or wherein Schuman has avoided its bans. Was Watson's and Dodd's conduct destructive of the Government of the United States, or was it on the other hand inimical to the Government of the United States? Did they seek to undermine its institutions? Or did they seek to distort its functions? Was their activity open and direct as by effort to overthrow? Or was it on the contrary subtle and indirect as by sabotage?

No answers to these questions are afforded by the subcommittee. The subcommittee report states that Watson has admitted association or affiliation with 12 or more organizations which it lists, but it fails anywhere to define either "association" or "affiliation." The kind of contact which the subcommittee includes under "association" or "affiliation" however, is indicated by the following examples:

International Workers Order

Watson states that he is not now and never has been a member of this organization and that he does not know its officers or activities. He states that he does not remember any activity whatever in connection with the International Workers Order, but that if, as alleged, he agreed to sponsor some contest which they promoted to provide recreation for children, he would certainly have cooperated in any legitimate attempt to provide better play opportunities for underprivileged children. This admission hardly appears to be a ground for the statement that Watson admits association or affiliation with the International Workers Order.

The League of American Writers

Watson states that his only connection with this organization was to contribute an article entitled "Anti-Semitism in American Psychology," to a book designed to promote better race relations. On this basis he is said to have admitted association or affiliation with an organization of which he is not and has never been a member.

American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom

Watson states that he sponsored a meeting held at Carnegie Hall in New York to oppose a measure then being considered by the New York State Legislature to reduce appropriations for public schools; and that as an educator and strong believer in the American public-school system, he was opposed to any reduction in appropriations which would impair the efficiency of the public schools; and that this was his sole interest in the matter and his sole contact with the organization with which he is said to have admitted "association or affiliation."

The subcommittee report states that "a number of these organizations have been designated by the Department of Justice as 'front organizations' and others as 'questionable.'" It does not state which of these organizations have been found to be "front" organizations, which have been found to be "questionable," or which have been found to be neither. Nor does it find that Watson maintained an "association or affiliation" with any of these organizations after the Department of Justice had published any findings. The question thus arises whether Watson, a private citizen without the Department of Justice's facilities for research and investigation, is expected to foresee in advance a determination by the Department of Justice which he could hardly have reached by his own efforts.

The subcommittee points out that the organizations with which it is alleged Watson was or is associated or affiliated "have not been adjudged by the courts or by Congress as subversive," but adds that the "'court of public opinion' of the United States has passed judgment upon them and has found them subversive and un-American." We hold public opinion in high regard, and we believe that the conclusion of public opinion over a period of a century and a half has been that men shall be afforded due process and not convicted upon the basis of rumor or public opinion.

The Constitution establishes legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government, each with its own powers, and guarantees to all persons due process of law. Nowhere does the Constitution sanction trials before a so-called court of public opinion by which the committee has found Watson unfit.

Moreover, there is good reason to believe that public opinion has not in fact passed judgment upon the organizations listed in the subcommittee report and found them subversive or un-American. For example, among the persons who have had "association or affiliation" identical with Watson's association or affiliation with one or more of the 12-named organizations are Henry A. Wallace, Vice President of the United States; Associate Justice Robert H. Jackson, Supreme Court of the United States; the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior; Representative John M. Coffee, State of Washington; Thomas E. Dewey, Governor of the State of New York; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; Lewis E. Lawes, former warden, Sing Sing Penitentiary, and Dorothy Thompson, noted columnist and commentator; all of whom, like Watson, contributed statements on anti-Semitism to the publication of the League of American Writers entitled "We Hold These Truths."

Also, Professor Irving Fisher, Yale University; Professor Harold Urey, Nobel Prize winner; President Emeritus William Allen Neilson, Smith College; Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, foreign secretary, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; and Oliver LaFarge, well-known writer; all of whom, like Watson, filed an open letter on the Dies committee sponsored by the National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights.

Also, the then presidents of the Milwaukee State Teachers College, Atlanta University, the University of Wisconsin, Hobart and William Smith Colleges, University of Minnesota, Colorado State College of Education, Western College, University of Louisville, University of Newark, and the presidents emeritus of Smith College, Northwestern University, and Mt. Holyoke College; all of whom, like Watson, filed a petition to discontinue the Dies committee on behalf of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom.

It should be noted, that in addition to the 12 organizations with which Watson is allegedly associated or affiliated, he is or was actually a member, in good standing, of the following:

American Association for the Advancement of Science.
American Association for Applied Psychology.
American Association of University Professors.
American Civil Liberties Union.
American Education Research Association.
American Farm Bureau Federation.
American Federation of Teachers.
American Orthopsychiatric Association.
American Political Science Association.
American Psychological Association.
American Red Cross.
American Society for Public Administration.

The subcommittee finds that Watson "for several years past has associated himself on many and frequent occasions with men * * * whose aims and purposes were subversive to this Government, and has associated with men who advocated the overthrow of this Government." These men are nowhere named nor is his relation to them stated.

The subcommittee also finds that Watson wrote for several magazines reputedly controlled by subversive interests but fails to indicate that these magazines are in fact so controlled. Watson stands convicted of disloyalty to his country in time of war. It is true that the offense, as phrased by the subcommittee, does not require infliction of the physical punishments imposed for treason; but, without accepting the subcommittee's findings that either he or the organizations listed have been convicted in the "court of public opinion," public opinion is invoked to administer the punishment. To a citizen of even ordinary self-respect and sensitivity such punishment may be as harsh, if not harsher, than the physical punishments imposed by courts of law. We do not believe it is right, fair or in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution to convict on rumor or mere repute.

The subcommittee further finds that in his writings Watson has "made unfavorable comparisons between other governments and our Government," and that he has "criticized our capitalistic and profit system and advocated its overthrow." It cites no specific quotations, nor does it indicate that it has measured his writings by the constitutional yardstick of a free press.

It is not necessary that we should agree with or endorse everything that Watson has written in his more than 200 publications, nor is it likely that he himself retains all of his former views. But, as the courts have held, writings must be "considered as a whole" (Cain v. Universal Pictures Co., 47 F. Supp. 1013, 1017), and not by means of isolated fragments torn from their context (U. S. v. Levine (83 F. (2d) 156)). It does not appear from the subcommittee report that Watson's writings, taken as a whole or in context, transgress in any way the right of free speech guaranteed by the Constitution or indicate any disloyalty to the United States or its form of government.

The subcommittee states that it has not found sufficient evidence for a recommendation against the fitness of Schuman.

With respect to Dodd, the subcommittee finds that he once belonged to the American League for Peace and Democracy but resigned in 1940; that he belongs to the Washington Book Shop; that he once entertained Harry Bridges; and that he lectured under the auspices of or was associated with "a long list of organizations," further unspecified. Among the organizations under whose auspices he lectured or with which he was associated were the following:

Methodist Church, Williamsburg, Va.
International Association of Sales Executives, New York City.
Institute of Public Affairs, Charlottesville, Va.
Loudoun County Junior Board of Trade, Leesburg, Va.
Women of Duke University, under the auspices of the Young Women's Christian Association, Durham, N. C.
Foreign Affairs Forum, Reading, Pa.
Central Bergen Unit in Adult Education, Leonia, N. J.
Book and Authors' Luncheon of the Herald Tribune Forum, New York City.
Lions' Club, New York.

In the light of the foregoing, we find no basis or reason for the dismissal of Watson, Schuman, or Dodd from employment by the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, the issue before the House this afternoon is whether or not certain individuals now on the Federal pay roll, holding responsible key positions in government, are fit and proper persons to hold such positions. They were appointed. They were not elected by the people. They hold office under the President in his executive department of government.

A committee was appointed by the House of Representatives consisting of three Democrats and two Republicans, of which the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, was made chairman to investigate and examine the records and the philosophies and statements of the persons in question.

That committee acting as the agent of this body has reported unanimously that the individuals named are not fit to hold their positions in the Government and their removal from the Federal pay roll is recommended.

This situation, in my judgment, presents a sad commentary on the present administration under our form of government. The great Congress of the United States, elected by the people and directly responsible to the people, finds it necessary to select a committee to examine the records of those holding key positions in the Government whose loyalty to our form of government is doubted, must suspend or defer other legislative duties to the country for 2 hours to pass upon the question presented.

Who is responsible for such a condition? We all know that the President of the United States—and I believe it is fair to say so—cannot personally know the record and background, the utterances, and philosophies of every individual on the Federal pay roll in the 3,000,000 now registered, or even 2,000,000, or 1,000,000, or 500,000, or even 100,000. But I believe the President is responsible in failing to instruct the policy-making officials in his department, appointed by him, to see to it that men and women who have no sympathy with our form of government, who are known to entertain radical and subversive ideologies directly opposite to the free institutions of our Government, should not be appointed to places of trust and responsibility in our Government, or any other place for that matter, at public expense. As a matter of fact, the people who entertain and who are publicly known to be radical in their views and subversive in their activities, whether communism, fascism, or any other "ism" opposed to the American system of government, have been unduly encouraged by officials high in this administration and under the present administration, in their attitude and so-called liberalism and all at Government expense.

When this country was going through its darkest night in an effort to form a government of freedom, which we now enjoy, it was Washington who gave the order that none but Americans should be placed on guard. The country was then at war to achieve its independence. Now the Nation is again at war—a war which threatens the very destiny and fate of the American people; a war to preserve this land of freedom and justice. It is as crucial and critical an hour as the darkest hour at Valley Forge, and there is just as much reason that those who serve the Government now should be as loyal and devoted to the American people and their Government as the devotion and loyalty demanded by Washington when he insisted that "none but Americans be placed on guard."

The people of this Nation are losing faith in those who guide the Nation when a spectacle of the kind presented to the House this afternoon is brought to their attention. The men and women who serve the Nation in this hour should be of such unquestioned loyalty as to make it unnecessary to take the action we are about to take today.

Not only the individuals we are to pass on within a few minutes, but all others whose records should even raise a question as to their devotion to the cause of the United States, should be removed by the administration at once without making it necessary for the Congress of the United States to remove them from the pay roll in order to get rid of them.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] to extend his remarks.

WAS THOMAS JEFFERSON SUBVERSIVE?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, during the hearings of the Treasury appropriation bill, an amendment was offered which provided that none of the funds appropriated should be used to pay the salaries of 39 individuals. After 3 days of debate, this general indictment of 39 people without proper presentation of testimony or proper trial was refused by a majority vote of the House.

The Kerr subcommittee of the Appropriation Committee was authorized by House resolution to thoroughly investigate these accused people and bring back a report to the House. This report has been made and an amendment offered to the current appropriation bill in which three men are indicted as guilty of subversive activities. The committee in its report further states that not having a legal definition of "subversive" they were constrained to set up their own definition of the meaning of this word.

I do not wish at this time to criticize the honesty of the Kerr committee. I believe all the members of the Kerr committee are honest, conscientious Members of the House. Several of them have expressed their regret at their being instructed by the House and appointed by the Speaker to do this job.

I do not know whether these three men are loyal American citizens or not. I do not believe that such a determination is the prerogative of a Member of Congress or a committee thereof. The transcript of the testimony before the committee was withheld, or unavailable, to the general membership until the time of voting. We were asked to vote on a punitive legislative amendment which was directed against three individuals. In my opinion, any legislation passed by Congress should be general in its impact and not directed either for or against an individual. The civil and Federal courts are the proper places to determine the punishment of an individual. I believe this legislative rider on an appropriation bill is an attempt to punish three individuals. I believe that any punishment of individuals is clearly the prerogative of the civil and Federal courts of our Nation.

In this time of war hysteria it is the solemn duty of every representative of the people to defend the civil liberties of our citizens. It is a time when the three branches of government should be maintained inviolate. We have given up many of our civil privileges as a necessity to the war effort, but we should be on guard for the first attack on the Bill of Rights, even if that attack is instituted and authorized by a congressional resolution.

In the speech of one member of the Kerr committee [Mr. KEEFE], certain passages of writings of Goodwin B. Watson were read such as:

> Gradualism has always failed * * * and only the sharp break brings promise of success.

He elaborated at great length and interpreted the meaning of "sharp break" according to his own ideas of what Mr. Watson meant. I respectfully request the gentleman from Wisconsin to compare those writings upon which he condemned Mr. Watson as being subversive, with the following principles which occur in the letters of Thomas Jefferson to James Madison, Mrs. John Adams, and W. S. Smith under date of 1787:

> I hold it that a little rebellion, now and then, is a good thing, and as necessary to the political world as storms are in the physical. (To James Madison, Paris, 1787.)
>
> The spirit of resistance to government is so valuable on certain occasions, that I wish it to be always kept alive. It will often be exercised when wrong, but better so than not to be exercised at all. (To Mrs. John Adams, Paris, 1787.)
> What country can preserve its liberties if its rulers are not warned, from time to time, that the people reserve the spirit of resistance? Let them take arms. The remedy is to set them right as to facts, pardon and pacify them. (To W. S. Smith, Paris, 1787.)

After comparing the above writings with those of Mr. Watson, I wonder if the gentleman from Wisconsin and the other members of the Kerr committee would not agree that these writings of Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights, is not stronger and more revolutionary language than the writings upon which they have condemned Mr. Watson and punished him by separating him from his livelihood.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss the question of procedure, or constitutional questions, except that on the question of procedure I wish to point out that while we may not be sitting here strictly as jurors, we are sitting here as legislators considering an amendment to an appropriation bill. This amendment comes before us as a result of hearings. We have not been furnished with hearings as is done with all legislation, and we have before us nothing but the report of the subcommittee and statements made by the members who constitute that subcommittee. I repeat, we do not have before us the hearings. I do not question the veracity of these gentlemen on the committee; I do, however, question their construction and interpretation of the words and writings of these people whom we are asked to purge from the Government pay roll.

We are adopting a most unusual procedure here in that no Member of this House has before him the hearings on these cases so that he as a legislator can study them and pass upon the merits of the issues involved.

We have a most fantastic situation. We are to vote on an amendment to an appropriation bill, to expel three people from the Federal Government without a single word of the hearings before us. All we have before us is what we are told by the gentlemen who are on the committee. How can any Member do justice to these men without having before us what they said to the committee in their own defense?

Something more fundamental is involved here, however, and that is that the issue which we have before us is as old as the history of our own Nation.

Five minutes do not permit me time enough to review the entire question and its history, but it is the age-old conflict between those few who have concentrated wealth and power in their hands, and the common people who have been opposing the abuses of the concentration of wealth and power. It is the age-old contest between the forces of freedom and tyranny. This same struggle was the heart of the conflict between President Adams and Hamilton on one side and Jefferson on the other. Then as now those who controlled concentrated wealth sought to restrict and limit the democratic processes by oppressive legislation so as to bar from public office and proscribe from the public forum the men and women of that period who challenged, criticized, and fought in the interest of the common people—the few who had concentrated wealth and power in their hands, and who were using it to exploit and impoverish the masses of Americans who had fought for freedom and equality.

Today again we are dealing with the few who control monopoly capital.

During the debate yesterday, through the fog of constitutional and legalistic arguments there emerged one honest, forthright statement, and that was the one made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] who stated what motivates his support of this amendment; and that is that he felt that these three Federal employees in their attitude and in their conduct were challenging the status quo which the gentleman from Illinois has been consistently advocating in this House, a status quo of monopoly capital, the status quo of the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few, the status quo of the Government by the rich and the well born; and that therefore they should be removed from the Government pay roll. It is precisely because these men took that attitude, that they are now being thrown off the pay roll.

What method do we employ for this new suppression? We inveigh against them the charge of subversiveness. Hitler used the Reichstag trial, he used the Communist bogey, the same pattern that we employ here for the present restriction and subsequent destruction of democratic rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, the spokesmen of monopoly capital have always used this device to restrict and destroy democratic rights, so as to strangle that freedom of thought and criticism which is so necessary for the common people to beat down and defeat the evils of concentrated wealth and monopoly capital. The committee uses the term "subversive." Has anyone established that these men have actually done anything toward or advocated the overthrow of the Government by force and violence? No one can do it. Their only crime has been that of associating with organizations that have been militantly anti-Fascist. What is subversive about defense of democratic rights, or defense of labor, or boycott of Japan, or aid to China? That is exactly the nature of the activities of these organizations. It is because of the anti-Fascist character of these organizations that we find this enmity against these Federal employees on the part of many who support this amendment.

The only thing that Dodd, Watson, and Lovett have advocated has been the overthrow of fascism, and this Congress, the Senate, and the President of the United States, and 5,000,000 soldiers, and 130,000,000 Americans today are advocating the overthrow of the Hitler government, the Mussolini government, and the Hirohito government by force and violence. We are making the most tremendous collective effort in history with which to do that. But you use the word "subversive." By that you mean opposition to fascism and to the evils of monopoly capital. Thus you take the position of Hamilton; you take the position of the Tory of yesterday, and the domestic Fascist of today. You take the position of those who have sought to destroy the democratic process and establish fascism just as it occurred in Italy and in Germany.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, we are using this device of charging anti-Fascists with being subversive to take away from the common people their freedom of expression, their freedom to exercise their democratic rights to challenge and criticize the injustice of monopoly capital and to destroy the evils that result from it. In Germany they used the same formula. They used the Communist bogey, they used that vehicle to first destroy the Communists, then destroy the Jews, then destroy labor, then destroy the Social Democrats, then destroy the liberals and so on down the line to the Protestants and the Catholics. Here we are today repeating the same formula. Consciously or unwittingly we are using the same vehicle and traveling the same tragic road. We are using the Communist bogey, we are using the term "subversive" to destroy the Communists, then to destroy the liberals, then labor and all the way down the line, thereby establishing domestic fascism in these free United States. The decision of this committee, I am confident, will be overruled by the American people who are today engaged in this anti-Fascist war. To them their task is clear; the overthrow of fascism all over the world including domestic fascism in these United States. They are resolved that with the extension of democracy all over the world our own democracy must be preserved in these United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the gentleman from New York has stated the issue before the House correctly. In order to oppose with all our might and with all our moral force this ugly specter of fascism in Europe I do not believe we have to embrace one equally as ugly, which is the Communist philosophy and faith.

Let us see what the precise issue before the House is today. The issue is whether or not we as Americans are going to permit people on the Government pay roll whose professed philosophy as evidenced by their writings is that this form of government should be overthrown and that we should have a revolution of violence. Can we not confine ourselves to that precise issue without attempting to become emotional in our discussion? I personally would not be in favor of burning the books published by these men, I am not in favor of putting them in jail for their ideas, but as a representative of the people I think that I certainly have the right to say that we are not going to turn the Government of this country over to the enemies of the country, over to people who say that our form of government is rotten and that the only way it can be cured is by a class revolution.

In my opinion, some of the gentlemen on my own side of the House who have voted along what might be called liberal lines are wasting their sympathy on these men that we intend to dismiss from the pay roll. I do not doubt that some of these employees have been competent servants insofar as the duties of their particular positions go, I think they are probably very intelligent, but I am rapidly coming to the opinion that brilliance of intellect is not sufficient in the Government unless you have that brilliance of intellect harnessed to good, ordinary, common American sense, unless you have this brilliance of intellect tempered by a love and understanding of our institutions. I do not feel that such people are capable of guiding the destinies of this great Republic at the present time in which revolution is in the air, at this time when our very existence is being threatened.

I voted against the Dies committee because I felt that the Dies committee had accused a lot of people of subversive activities who were not guilty of those activities, who were merely liberal; but now we have a committee that has been set up in this House, the Kerr committee, and I agree with those who have praised the personnel of this committee. They are probably some of the finest men in the House. They are not witch hunters, they are not people who are trying to prosecute somebody. They are trying to do a task honestly and fairly, and I thoroughly believe the gentleman from North Carolina [Judge KERR] when he said that it is an unpleasant duty to brand some person and remove him from the pay roll because he is unpatriotic. He knows full well that this stigma will follow the man down through his life. But we are faced with that stern obligation. Are we going to refrain because of the fact that we do not want to do an unpleasant act or one that is harmful to an individual? Are we going to refrain from dismissing from our pay roll and from the seat of our Government those people who are the enemies of our Nation? For my own part I do not intend to refrain from doing my duty and I shall support the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, we have before us for consideration the Kerr amendment, offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, Hon. JOHN H. KERR, Democrat, chairman of the special subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House. This amendment proposes to strike from the pay rolls of the Government Dr. Goodwin D. Watson, of New York City, chief analyst, Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service, United States Federal Communications Commission, whose salary is $6,500; Dr. William E. Dodd, assistant news editor, Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service, United States Federal Communications Commission; and Dr. Robert Morss Lovett, United States Government Secretary of the Virgin Islands, under the Department of Interior, who is receiving $5,800 a year.

One or more committees created by the House of Representatives in making investigations of subversive activities on the part of persons living in this country and those on the pay roll of the United States Government, covering a period of several years, reported that hundreds and hundreds of persons who do not believe in our American way of life and belong to one or more subversive organizations have been and are holding important positions in the United States Government.

This investigation was confirmed by an investigation made by the F. B. I., and many disclosures were made by the Department of Justice, but only a very few, if any, persons who were charged with these subversive activities have been separated from the Government pay roll. Scores of them hold important key positions in the Government today.

The Congress has from time to time warned these various departments, bureaus, and agencies of its wishes that all such persons be discharged, but these warnings have gone unheeded. Finally the House adopted a resolution which authorized the Appropriations Committee of the House to make investigations and to determine how many, if any, of such persons were still on the pay rolls. The Dies and other committees report there are about 3,000 persons belonging to subversive groups on our pay rolls.

The Appropriations Committee of the House appointed a special subcommittee of their number, headed by the Honorable JOHN H. KERR, of North Carolina, to make a special investigation, and Mr. KERR was ably assisted by our colleagues, Mr. GORE, Democrat, of Tennessee; Mr. ANDERSON, Democrat, of New Mexico; Mr. POWERS, Republican, of New Jersey; and Mr. KEEFE, Republican, of Wisconsin. Judge KERR served for many years as a circuit judge in North Carolina. All of the other members of the committee are men of splendid ability, honest, and fair.

They investigated Dr. Watson, Dr. Dodd, and Dr. Lovett, as well as others, and were of the unanimous opinion that these three public officials were connected with a number of front organizations, or subversive groups, and were not suitable persons to be in the employ of the Government.

The amendment before us proposes to strike their names from the pay rolls of the Government. All of them appear to have been "joiners." Dr. Watson admitted associating or affiliating with 12 or more of these organizations. A number of the organizations to which Dr. Watson belonged have been found and designated by the Department of Justice as front organizations and others as questionable.

What we understand by front organizations are organizations with fine American names, such as American League for Peace and Democracy, American Youth Congress, Descendants of American Revolution, National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights, and so forth, but which are, in truth and in fact, merely fronts for the Communist Party or some other subversive group in this country. They are officered or controlled by the Communists or other subversive groups.

Dr. Watson, as pointed out, admitted associating or affiliating with 12 or more of such organizations, and this committee's report points out Dr. Watson associated with various subversive groups who advocated the overthrow of this Government; in fact, one of the great objections to the Communist Party is it has always advocated the overthrow of this Government by force and violence.

Dr. William E. Dodd admitted he associated or affiliated with a number of front organizations; in other words, with organizations affiliated and controlled by the Communist Party. He, too, has associated with persons who have actively affiliated with the Communist front organizations.

Let us keep before us the fact that Dr. Watson is Chief Analyst of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the United States Federal Communications Commission, and that Dr. Dodd is Assistant News Editor of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the United States Federal Communications Commission. Anyone can see at once that these men occupy key positions in our Foreign Intelligence Service. They could do this country immeasurable harm. Memberships in these front and other subversive organizations and their writings and letters clearly indicate they do not believe in the American way of life. Many of these organizations and associations and other subversive groups have been and still are advocating the overthrow of this Government by force and violence.

Dr. Lovett is holding an important position as United States Government Secretary in the Virgin Islands, one of our colonial possessions and outposts.

I am not personally acquainted with any one of these men. I know something of some of their writings and activities, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, and this committee has, after thorough investigation, definitely found and so stated in their written signed report that these men are connected with these front organizations and these subversive groups, and that they are unfit to serve our Government in this critical period.

No one should be on the pay roll and have their support out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this Nation, and be in position to do great harm to this country if they desire, who do not believe in our American way of life, in our Constitution, and American ideals. Such persons should not hold positions in this Government in time of peace, and they certainly should not have such key positions in time of war, and therefore, I shall vote for the Kerr amendment to remove each one of these men from the pay roll.

THE ADMINISTRATION FAILED TO ACT

It is most unfortunate that the Congress must take the time and incur the expenditure of thousands of dollars to investigate and disclose the names of persons in our Government service who do not believe in the American way of life and belong to associations and groups engaged in subversive activities and some of which advocate the overthrow of this Government by force and violence.

The Dies committee, the F. B. I., and other agencies of the Government have disclosed many of these persons holding important and key positions in the Government. In fact, the heads of various departments and bureaus were advised by the Civil Service Commission from time to time that many of these persons were unfit because of their beliefs and associations to hold these important positions of trust in our Government. With this knowledge, many of these persons were employed and hundreds and hundreds of others were retained on the pay roll, and now Congress must step in and do the job that the various departments, bureaus, and agencies in the executive branch of the Government should have done.

In fact, a number of those in high places in our Government have encouraged these front organizations. The First Lady of the land gave special encouragement to the so-called Youth Congress. Many of the officers and members of this front organization were identified with and active in the Communist Party. It was only recently that the First Lady of the land denounced this particular front organization. One of the serious objections to the activities of the Communists and other subversive groups in this country is that their identities, as far as possible, were concealed. They assume some fine, high-sounding, patriotic name and they carry on their subversive activities under the cover of this name. At one time it was found that more than 6,000,000 people in this country belonged to one or more of these front organizations and subversive groups.

We are in a great war. Millions of our fathers and sons are fighting on every land and on every sea to preserve our American way of life and uphold our Constitution and the ideals of the American people. As pointed out by the Kerr committee, we would not think of placing in command of any part of our fighting forces men who belong to these Communists and other subversive organizations and groups to lead our fighting men in this great war. In our opinion, we shall fail in our patriotic duty if we do not remove men, especially like Dr. Watson, holding these important key positions. Congress has time and again emphasized that in the employment of persons in continental United States, only American citizens should be employed, and even in the most humble positions no one should be employed who is a member of these front organizations or belongs to any subversive group.

We have Communist, Fascist, and Nazi fronts and groups. The Communist groups are much greater than any other. We brought on ourselves a lot of trouble when President Roosevelt, in 1933, renewed diplomatic and commercial relations with Russia. We opened the gates wide and told them to come in and they did come in, and they did establish many of these front organizations which for a long time deceived the American people. President Wilson refused to recognize Russia because of the world-wide program of the Russian Communists to overthrow this and any other country that did not believe in or accept communism. President Harding followed the policy laid down by President Wilson, and so did President Coolidge and President Hoover. After President Roosevelt again recognized Russia, communism grew by leaps and bounds in this country. I have no quarrel with Russia's form of government whatever it may be. That is a matter for the people of Russia themselves. I do strenuously object however when they try to foist upon our people their conceptions of government. I have and shall continue to oppose with all of the vigor I have the placing of Communists, Fascists, or Nazis in public office and have them supported by the taxpayers of this country. We have plenty of loyal Americans to hold these positions, and at this particular time no one should hold these offices or be placed on guard except loyal Americans who believe in the American way of life.

If the way of life of the Communists, Fascists, and Nazis is so splendid and fine, may I suggest that Dr. Watson, Dr. Dodd, Dr. Lovett, and others go to those countries where they can sail under their own colors and receive their positions and pay from the people who believe in their philosophy of government.

In adopting the Kerr amendment, we are giving warning to the appointing officials of our Government to scrutinize carefully each appointee so that none but loyal Americans be placed on guard, and if they persist in following the course they have in the past, an amendment should be offered to cut off the salaries of those who are responsible for the appointment of men like Dr. Watson, Dr. Dodd, and Dr. Lovett.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, many here bemoan the fact that a few Members have seen fit to raise the question of the constitutional right of the Congress to pass a law denying the salary of an officer and thus deprive him of his right to hold office. If ever there was a constitutional question involved in any legislation, it is involved in this amendment. One of the cornerstones of our democracy is attacked—the right of free speech and the freedom of the press. If free speech can be denied in this case, it can, by the same token, be denied in any case.

There is no question raised as to the general qualifications of the men involved. They are citizens of the United States, they are competent and capable of filling the positions they now hold. They have not been convicted of any crime. The sole charge against them is that they have expressed opinions—either orally or in writing—which some Members of this Congress think makes it necessary for the Congress to deny them the offices which they now hold. There is no charge whatever that these men are guilty of treason or any other offense described in the statutes of the United States. Their sole offense is that they have expressed opinions that some Members think dangerous to our Government. I do not know these men. I have never seen them. Let us see what they have said or written that warrants this House in forcing them out of office.

The substance of what they said and wrote is that the capitalistic system in the United States is not a good thing. They said this system should be supplanted by some other system. There is no charge here that they have made any overt attempt to destroy any system in vogue in this country. They have simply stated that our present system ought to be replaced. That is their opinion and unless the expression of that opinion is accompanied by an attempt or by a conspiracy to overthrow the Government, they have merely exercised their right of free speech.

In Schenck v. United States (1918, 249 U. S. 47), Justice Holmes, delivering the unanimous decision of the Court, said:

> We admit that in many places and in ordinary times the defendants in saying all that was said in the circular would have been within their constitutional rights. But the character of every act depends upon the circumstances in which it was done. * * * The most stringent protection of free speech would not protect a man in falsely shouting "fire" in a theater and causing a panic. It does not even protect a man from an injunction against uttering words that may have all the effect of force. * * * The question in every case is whether the words are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent. It is a question of proximity and degree.
> When a nation is at war many things that might be said in time of peace are such a hindrance to its effort that their utterance will not be endured so long as men fight and that no court could regard them as protected by any constitutional right.

In time of war many of the privileges we enjoy as citizens are revoked for the general good. But in this case there is no evidence that any of the statements or any of the writing occurred after we declared war. They were peacetime expressions and merely expressions of opinion not accompanied by any act to carry the opinion into execution.

If this Congress can deny the privileges of these citizens for expressing opinions, then anyone can be dealt with in like manner. If any citizen holding a position in this Government should happen to say or write something that a majority of the Congress did not like, then that citizen could be removed from office by a vote of Congress.

In my opinion—and I almost feel like apologizing for expressing this opinion for fear that my salary may be taken away—this Congress does not have the constitutional right to legislate any citizen out of his property, or his salary, which is the same thing, merely because he has expressed an opinion which is not approved by a majority of this Congress.

Heretofore the Supreme Court of the United States has zealously guarded the right of free speech and no opinion can be found to support the intended action of this House. There is little likelihood that the present Supreme Court will fail to protect that right.

Suppose we do pass this amendment and the department paying these men brings action to set this act aside as unconstitutional. Does anyone in this Chamber think the Supreme Court will sustain the action of this House?

If we have anything of value left in this democracy, it is the right of free speech and the liberty of the press. The anomalous situation now presents itself that this Congress is attempting to abridge these rights. Much has been said about the oath we took to support the Constitution. Does not that oath bind us to protect the right of free speech? Is this Congress the first to rise up in its dignity and violate the plain provisions of our Constitution—the Bill of Rights and the laws and decisions of the Nation?

We have no more right to attempt to direct the opinions of a citizen than we have to tell him what form of worship he may follow. We do not want to fall into the position of expressing our own opinions—immune from civil liability—and at the same time deny that right to others.

There is absolutely no authority to be found anywhere—from the Constitution to the latest Supreme Court opinions—to justify the House in passing this amendment.

This is not the first time that the Appropriations Committee has attempted to write the laws of the country, and there is more danger to the Nation in not curbing this practice than there is from any opinion expressed by either or all of the men involved here.

If the day ever comes in this country when citizens cannot express their opinions, it will be the beginning of the end of this Government. Legislation will not stop ideas, and the more we attempt to do it the more certain is our final collapse as a nation. If we want to destroy this Government and make it easy for any other scheme of government to take its place, we are contributing to that end in the passage of this amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take much time talking today because a few weeks ago I offered an amendment to strike these very same men's names from the pay roll of the Government and we discussed that amendment for about 3 days. So I believe I have said about enough.

I want to compliment the Kerr committee for the fine work that it has been doing. I think they have been very fair in securing all the evidence and in judging these men to be unqualified to serve this Government. The fact of the matter is that I believe they have been much more liberal than I probably would have been, because I take this position: Even though you cannot prove these men are Communists, you can still say they are not qualified to serve this Government. If you had a bank and you had a teller in that bank who, you found out, had been keeping company with bank robbers, you would tell him you were through with him, and you would dismiss him, and you would not wait to try to find out whether he was a bank robber or not.

I say that in every instance where these men have associated with Communists or Communist front organizations, they have no right to their position and they have no right to be placed in the position where they can sponsor such doctrines as are supported by the organization with which they were associated.

Yesterday and today and at other times we have heard that these men have not had a fair day in court. So far as I am concerned this is not a court trial. We are simply determining whether the Congress of the United States feels these men are qualified to serve and whether they are entitled to their jobs and as long as this committee continues with the same course it has followed I am going to continue to support it.

The fact of the matter is that we have had a number of heads of departments to attack the Congress because of the fact that we are trying to get rid of Robert Morss Lovett. Secretary Ickes said, in a press release, in defense of Robert Morss Lovett, that he would retain him in that post so long as "I have legal power to do so."

That is all right; we are going to make it illegal for him to do so.

He went on to say:

> Under the Constitution, the Congress has no power to remove an officer of the executive branch and cannot undertake to accuse a judge or to remove an officer on the grounds and through the proceedings used here.

Well, maybe that is what he thinks, but after we have eliminated this man from the pay roll he has the right to go into court and we will find out whether the Congress has the right to eliminate him or not.

He further stated:

> These witch hunts of Congressman DIES will bring, in the years to come, blushes of shame to the faces of all Americans, just as the recollection of the witch hunts of old Salem, or of the last war, does among us today.

He further stated:

> I have read the report of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the report of the Kerr subcommittee and the charges made by Congressman DIES against Dr. Lovett. In all these I have seen no evidence of subversive activity or of sympathy of Dr. Lovett for anything of the sort.

If Mr. Ickes has read all these reports and he does not find any evidence of subversive activity, I suggest to you that Mr. Ickes ought to be removed, because there is evidence, and I do not think anyone could doubt that he has been active in subversive activities.

All I have to say today is this: That I would like to ask the Kerr committee and every Member of this House just to remember one thing, that these men were not elected to office; they were merely appointed by the heads of the departments. The heads of those departments have had called to their attention these men's names and have been told that they are not qualified to serve this Government and they have taken no action, and yet when we attempt to take action the heads of the departments are ready to defend them. I have no doubt but what this House is going to uphold the Kerr committee's recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] a moment ago made one of the finest statements I have heard in the course of the debates on this subject.

The charges were made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] personally that these men, Dr. Lovett, Dr. Watson, and Mr. Dodd, were unfit for public office by virtue of their past associations and their affiliations with subversive organizations, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] offered an amendment to the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill in February seeking to strike them from the pay roll. After tumultuous debate in the House the matter was referred and has been handled as has been outlined by the chairman of the full Appropriations Committee this afternoon. Gentlemen have inadvertently been inaccurate in their statements to the effect the charges were made by the Dies committee. The charges were made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. They were not brought by the committee. The charges were made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] personally, and he stated they were his personal views and were not necessarily those of the committee nor was he speaking for the committee at the time he made the charges.

The sole question involved here is whether or not the charges made that these men are unfit for appointive public office by virtue of their writings, declarations, membership in or past associations and affiliations with known subversive organizations. And, if this question is answered in the affirmative, should they be removed from the Federal pay roll as employees of the Government? Whether in war or in peace, no man or woman should be employed in an administrative capacity in the Government of the United States who does not wholeheartedly believe in the system of government which he or she is undertaking to administer.

You will find that each of the three men who are involved in this proceeding admitted under oath that he had been a member of, had publicly associated himself with, or had been publicly affiliated with numerous organizations which have been denominated subversive and un-American by the Attorney General of the United States, by the interdepartmental committee which he set up, by the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, an agent of this House since 1938, or the special committee set up in the Committee on Appropriations.

The charges have been made, the testimony has been submitted, a fair hearing has been given to each of the accused. The records of the special Appropriations Subcommittee will show in each instance these gentlemen stated they were satisfied they were given a fair trial and an impartial hearing before that group.

That being true and the findings being before us, what is our duty? Shall we embrace some of the strange doctrines that have been promulgated by self-anointed liberals and self-confessed distinguished intellectuals, or shall we follow our consciences and vote to remove these men from the pay roll by withholding funds for their compensation and for their salaries?

Who are these self-anointed liberals and these self-confessed distinguished intellectuals? By what yardstick do they measure their liberalism and their intellectual attainments? Many of these self-anointed liberals would have us embrace communism or some other form of state socialism as an antidote to what they term "domestic fascism." What a strange pronouncement we heard on the floor of the House a moment ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Is there any difference in the world between communism and fascism?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. None whatever, except in degree.

Mr. TABER. It is a question of who is the dictator, that is all.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes.

I want to say of these self-confessed intellectuals, they may have certain peculiar intellectual attainments, but their skulls house a vacuum insofar as common sense and patriotism is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I am exceedingly loath to oppose the pending amendment. I honor and respect the judgment both of our great Committee on Appropriations and also the special subcommittee on whose reports this amendment stands. I am devoted to the men who compose those committees and in many cases I would bow to their superior wisdom. But in a case such as this, wherein the amendment is clearly unconstitutional, in my opinion, I simply cannot follow their leadership, much as I would like to.

The pending amendment is a bill of pains and penalties within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition:

> No bill of attainder * * * shall be passed (art. I, sec. 9).
> A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. If the punishment be less than death, it is a bill of pains and penalties. As the term "bill of attainder" is used in the Federal Constitution, it includes both bills of attainder particularly, and bills of pains and penalties. (Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 18 L. Ed. 356); Drehman v. Stifle (75 U. S. (8 Wall.), 595, 601, 19 L, Ed. 508); Pierce v. Carskadon (83 U. S. (16 Wall.), 234, 239, 21 L. Ed. 276)).

If, then, the amendment now being considered inflicts punishment, it is a bill of pains and penalties, since there has been no judicial trial. This is not to say that the legislative hearings given by the Kerr committee were not judicial in a sense, but this committee was certainly not a court, and nothing short of a trial by a court constitutes a judicial trial.

The only question open for discussion and decision, therefore, is, Would this amendment, if it should become law, inflict punishment?

Throughout the debate of yesterday and today it has been frankly admitted that this admendment is intended to and will, if enacted, effectively exclude Watson, Dodd, and Lovett from the Government service.

That is punishment.

Take the cases of Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 320), and Ex parte Garland (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333, 377). These are State cases, not Federal. But the provisions of the Federal Constitution are almost identical as to State and Federal limitation of power. As to congressional power, the Constitution of the United States reads:

> No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed (art. I, sec. 9).

As to State power, the Constitution of the United States reads:

> No State shall pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts (art. I, sec. 10).

So the Cummings and Garland cases are perfectly in point as authorities in our consideration of the pending amendment, under the above quoted limitation upon congressional power.

In the Cummings case the defendant was a Roman Catholic priest who was indicted and convicted of the crime of teaching and preaching as a priest and minister of that denomination without first having taken the oath prescribed by the constitution of the State of Missouri, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 and to be committed to jail until said fine and costs of suit were paid. This prosecution was under the constitution of Missouri of 1865 which provided that no person shall be permitted to practice as an attorney or counsellor at law nor be competent as a bishop, priest, deacon, minister, elder, or other clergyman of any religious persuasion, sect, or denomination, to teach, preach, or solemnize marriages, unless such person shall have first taken, subscribed, and filed said oath—which oath required a statement that the affiant had never been in armed hostility to the United States or been in sympathy with rebellion or, except under overpowering compulsion, submitted to the authority or been in the service of the so-called Confederate States of America.

The Supreme Court of the United States in its decision in the Cummings case said:

> The disabilities created by the Constitution of Missouri must be regarded as penalties—they constitute punishment. We do not agree with the counsel of Missouri that "to punish one is to deprive him of life, liberty, or property, and that to take from him anything less than these is no punishment at all." The learned counsel does not use these terms—life, liberty, and property—as comprehending every right known to the law. He does not include under liberty freedom from outrage on the feelings as well as restraints on the person. He does not include under property those estates which one may acquire in professions, though they are often the source of the highest emoluments and honors. The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, previously enjoyed, may be punishment, the circumstances attending and the causes of the deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment. Disqualification from the pursuits of a lawful avocation, or from positions of trust, or from the privilege of appearing in the courts, or acting as an executor, administrator, or guardian, may also, and often has been, imposed as punishment (Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 18 L. Ed. 356)).

In the Garland case the defendant was an attorney and counselor at law and was prosecuted under the same section of the Missouri Constitution of 1865 as was the defendant Cummings in his case.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the Garland case said:

> And exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct. The exaction of the oath is the mode provided for ascertaining the parties upon whom the act is intended to operate, and instead of lessening, increases its objectionable character. All enactments of this kind partake of the nature of bills of pains and penalties, and are subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder, under which general designation they are included (Ex parte Garland (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333, 337, 18 L. Ed. 366)).

In the Cummings case the exclusion was from the priesthood. In the Garland case the exclusion was from the practice of law. In the cases now before us the exclusion is from the Government service. The decisions from which the above quotations have been taken are directly in point, and condemn any such enactment as the amendment we are considering, as a bill of pains and penalties subject to the constitutional inhibitions against the passage of bills of attainder.

But the pending amendment not only violates the constitutional mandate against bills of attainder but it also violates the doctrine—implicit throughout the Constitution—of separation of powers, and the explicit creation of a government composed of three separate but coordinate branches, legislative, executive, and judicial.

The power to "fire" an employee of the executive branch of the Government belongs to the Executive exclusively. Meyers v. United States (272 U. S. 52). In the Meyers case the Supreme Court further held:

> The power to remove inferior executive officers, like that to remove superior executive officers, is an incident of the power to appoint them, and is in its nature an executive power. The authority of Congress given by the excepting clause to vest the appointment of such inferior officers in the heads of departments carries with it authority incidentally to invest the heads of departments with power to remove.

The Supreme Court recognized in the case of United States v. Perkins (116 U. S. 483) that Congress, in committing the appointment of such inferior officers to the heads of departments, may prescribe incidental regulations controlling and restricting the latter in the exercise of the power of removal; but the Court never has held, nor reasonably could hold, that the excepting clause enables Congress to draw to itself, or to either branch of it, the power to remove or the right to participate in the exercise of that power. To do this would be to go beyond the words and implications of that clause and to infringe the constitutional principle of the separation of governmental powers.

Further quoting from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Meyers case:

> Assuming then, the power of Congress to regulate removals as incidental to the exercise of its constitutional power to vest appointments of inferior officers in the heads of departments, certainly so long as Congress does not exercise that power, the power of removal must remain where the Constitution places it, with the President, as part of the Executive power.

When Congress abolished the Radio Commission and created in its stead the Federal Communications Commission—United States Code Annotated, title 47, section 154—it authorized the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the seven Commissioners and gave to the Commission the power to appoint the employees of the Commission subordinate to the Commissioners. Congress did not prescribe incidental regulations controlling and restricting the Commissioners in the exercise of the power of appointment or removal.

The exclusive right of the Executive to remove officers within the executive branch of the Government was reiterated in the case of Morgan v. T. V. A. (115 Fed. (2d) 990, certiorari denied, 61 Sup. Ct. Rep. 806).

The doctrine of separation of powers is reemphasized in the case of Humphrey's Executor v. U. S. (295 U. S. 602):

> The fundamental necessity of maintaining each of the three general departments of Government entirely free from the control or coercive influence, direct or indirect, of either of the others, has often been stressed and is hardly open to serious question. So much is implied in the very fact of the separation of the powers of these departments by the Constitution; and in the rule which recognizes their essential coequality. The sound application of a principle that makes one master in his own house precludes him from imposing his control in the house of another who is master there. James Wilson, one of the framers of the Constitution and a former justice of this Court, said that the independence of each department required that its proceedings "should be free from the remotest influence, direct or indirect, of either of the other powers" (Andrews, the Works of James Wilson (1896), vol. 1, p. 367). And Mr. Justice Story in the first volume of his work on the Constitution, fourth edition, section 530, citing No. 48 of the Federalist, said that neither of the departments in reference to each other "ought to possess, directly or indirectly, an overruling influence in the administration of their respective powers" (295 U. S. at pp. 629–630).

The argument on the purse strings premise is blasted by an opinion of former Attorney General Mitchell, as follows:

> Congress holds the purse strings, and it may grant or withhold appropriations as it chooses, and when making an appropriation may direct the purposes to which the appropriation shall be devoted and impose conditions in respect to its use, provided always that the conditions do not require operation of the Government in a way forbidden by the Constitution. Congress may not, by conditions attached to appropriations, provide for a discharge of the functions of government in a manner not authorized by the Constitution. If such a practice were permissible, Congress could subvert the Constitution. It might make appropriations on condition that the executive department abrogate its functions. It might, for example, appropriate money for the War Department on condition that the direction of military operations should be conducted by some person designated by the Congress, thus requiring the President to abdicate his functions as Commander in Chief (37 Op. Atty. Gen. 56, 61 (1933)).

Supporters say with twinkling eyes and a smile, "Yes, but this is not firing; this is merely denying the money to pay his salary. We do not say he cannot work for the Government; we simply say no Government money can be used to pay him."

Specious sophistry. What of the law we passed that no one can work for nothing?

The more serious minded supporters add: "Seriously, though, Congress has the power to abolish the whole outfit, including Watson, so, if we were to do that, we'd be getting him just the same."

The answer to this is also obvious. Granting that Congress might abolish the Federal Communications Commission, and that if that were done, that would get Watson, that is not what is being done. Maybe the Federal Communications Commission should be abolished. Congress has the power, undoubtedly, to abolish it, why not act within our power and do so? I challenge any and all of you who think that should be done, because of the employment of Watson and Dodd, or for any other reason, to do it. But do not forget your oath of office to uphold the Constitution and trample it under contemptuous feet by passing this bill of attainder which intrudes into the inviolable province of the Executive.

Who made it possible to employ Watson and Dodd? Congress did. We granted the Commissioners the power to appoint whomsoever they might please. The only restriction we have ever placed upon this grant of power is the requirement that no one who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of our Government by force or violence, shall be paid. We so wrote the law. Under that single restriction these men were employed. No contention has been made that they, or either of them, come within that condemnation. After they were employed, we, very wisely, changed the criterion. The special subcommittee constituted to investigate and report to the House how Government employees squared with the new criterion has made two reports which show judicial poise and careful analysis. The gentlemen who compose this subcommittee are estimable, careful, honorable. Their reports are entitled to the full faith and credit their judgment and honesty of purpose demand. Those who have the power to hire and fire should give the most respectful and serious consideration to these and any further reports, and only the weightiest evidence contra should cause them to fail to follow the report that they are unfit for the present to continue in Government employ, and discharge all that "cap fits." But ours is not the power to hire or fire, nor have we the right to go out of our own house into theirs and rule.

It is true that the resolution creating the Kerr committee provided:

> Any legislation approved by the committee as a result of this resolution may be incorporated in any general or special appropriation measure emanating from such committee or may be offered as a committee amendment to any such measure notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI.

But, of course, this meant any legislation within the power of Congress to enact; that is, not in conflict with the Constitution.

We can abolish the Federal Communications Commission. We can prescribe incidental regulations to control or limit the appointing powers or the powers of removal we grant, but we cannot violate the Constitution by passing a bill of attainder, such as the pending amendment, nor usurp the power of either separate and coordinate branch of our Government. The power of removal of officers or of employees in the executive branch of our Government is in the Chief Executive. Congress may remove its own but not those of the Executive.

What has been said as to Watson and Dodd applies for the most part and just as cogently to Lovett.

The fact that Congress adopted the method of removal now proposed in the case of David Lasser neither changes the Constitution nor justifies the procedure. One wrong never justifies another.

The claim has been made that thousands of Communists were taken off the Government pay roll when the Federal Theater Project of the W. P. A. was abolished. But that was the abolition of a project, not the mere removal of employees. Congress may abolish any organization it creates or authorizes, and such abolition kills the jobs of the employees of the agency abolished. But that is in accord with the Constitution, not in violation of it.

Just as fiercely as we resent attempts to encroach upon our exclusive province, does the executive branch of our Government have the right to resent this encroachment attempted by us. Why cannot we of each separate, coordinate branch of our Government learn and practice the truth that the only road to the sunlit highlands of happiness and success is cooperation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I will not attempt to get into any argument with the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] who has just left the well of the House. He is a distinguished lawyer, but may I say that sometimes distinguished lawyers disagree, and were it not so, we would not have the lawbooks in the libraries of the country that we now have. All I care to say in reply to the argument made by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama is that so far as I am concerned, and I speak somewhat as a lawyer myself, having gone into this question of bills of attainder, and pains and penalties, I am in complete and utter disagreement with the distinguished gentleman in the conclusion which he has reached. I do not conceive that under any circumstance the amendment now under consideration could be held by any court to be either a bill of attainder to constitute a bill invoking pains and penalties, such as the gentleman has just described. Let us see if we cannot reduce this thing down a little bit. Who are these people that are involved in this amendment?

Are they officers of the United States Government? If they were, there might be some reasonableness to some of the arguments that have been made. These men are in the category of pure and simple employees of the United States Government. For men to contend that the Constitution requires impeachment proceedings to remove an employee is building up an argument that in my judgment has no basis in the law or in fact. Is there any man of standing here who has put out his shingle to practice law any place in the United States who would contend for one moment that this Congress would be required to institute impeachment proceedings in order to dismiss a Federal employee? Why, the gentleman from New York has said in his statement that this is a most unusual procedure. I agree with him. It is a most unusual procedure.

It is certainly an unusual procedure that the Congress of the United States should be compelled to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars for investigations and to spend months of its time in an effort to purge employees from the pay roll that the Congress and the people of the United States deem unfit to be governmental employees. There is a distinction between an employee and an officer. There are constitutional officers in the judiciary, in the legislative, and in the executive branches of Government. There are officers who are placed in office by and as the result of the enactment of legislation by the Congress creating those offices and fixing their tenure of office and fixing their salaries. As to these officials may I say that I would not contend for one moment that this Congress has the right to, in effect, remove them by refusing to appropriate money to pay their salaries. Congress has the undoubted right to abolish functions and agencies but not to in effect remove officials in this manner. But do not make that argument against this procedure where it merely involves a simple employee of the Government. As to that question our committee, as the gentleman from North Carolina, JUDGE KERR, so ably stated in his remarks, has canvassed this situation.

Mr. MURPHY rose.

Mr. KEEFE. I do not care to yield at this time. Those legal aspects have been gone over, and I think it is the mature and considered judgment of the committee—and we have some fairly good lawyers on the committee, and we have good counsel to advise the committee—that we are strictly within the rights of this Congress, and we are pursuing what appears to the committee not only to be our right, but our sovereign duty as Members of Congress.

Now let me talk a moment about Mr. Goodwin Watson. I discussed him a little bit yesterday. I never met Mr. Goodwin Watson until he came before our committee. I had heard about him as a professor of psychology up at Columbia University. Mr. Watson was given every opportunity to tell the committee anything that he wanted to tell them in explanation of his attitudes, his conduct, his association, his affiliations, and his utterances. Let me take first the viewpoint that he expressed back in 1934. This article that he wrote for a magazine, called Common Sense magazine, published in August 1934, contains this foreword. He is not chargeable with it, but this is what the editor of the magazine says, and it appears as a foreword to Mr. Goodwin Watson's article:

> The average citizen thinks that the advocates of swift change by revolution are merely hotheaded to make war on the tragedy that has stalked the footsteps of gradual reformers in Europe, and he is inclined to think that this country is different, and that we move slowly by nature. In this article a well-known professor of psychology says that not only has gradualism always failed in this attempt to uproot the profit system, but from the humanitarian psychological points of view, the methods of reformation are often inadequate. Nature, he points out, by no means always evolves. Nor need a rapid transformation be violent if well planned.

Now, let us see what he said in his article. Understand, I am not critizing Goodwin Watson in the exercise of his right of free speech guaranteed by the Constitution to preach the abolition of capitalism, or to preach the abolition of the profit system, if that is his philosophy of government. The Constitution in the Bill of Rights guarantees him that right of advocacy, if he so desires, but I find nothing in the Constitution that secures and guarantees to him tenure as an employee of the United States Government. This is what he said:

> How is it with the present necessity to replace the broken-down profit system with one designed to produce and distribute all the goods and services the public can use? Shall we work for an all-or-none change, leaving the old order definitely behind us and building the new on a different foundation, or shall we work for gradual modification and improvement of the old, trusting that the net effect of many lesser changes will equal the greater ones?

There he was expressing the plain question that was in his mind. Shall we continue to be motivated by a policy of gradualism or not? I quote further:

> There are four major lines of argument, humanitarian, psychological, economical, and political. Each of them leads to the conclusion that the apparent attractiveness of gradualism is fallacious, that only the sharp break brings promise of success.

What do you mean by sharp break, Goodwin Watson? What is this sharp break you are talking about? I will tell you what it means. It means nothing more or less than the intelligentsia medium of expressing what some people would say revolution—a sharp break.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I cannot yield at this point.

Then he finally ends up his argument and he says:

> Only Soviet Russia has gone up to the left in an oxcart that was nearly wrecked before the trip started, but they report now that the road is getting better. Our machines are more powerful but more delicate than oxcarts. Can't we stand the rough beginning if we prepare the road, the cars, the drivers, and passengers?

What is he talking about? What does he mean to say? I ask you, Members of the Congress—is it not perfectly clear what this man was advocating when he wrote this article in 1934?

Now, let us see what he said when he came back from Europe in 1934 and assisted in organizing this organization entitled "New America." I have it before me. I have its platform, its program, its goals, its guiding principles. I defy anybody to take that document which he subscribed to in 1934 and read it without coming to the conclusion that a man who preached the philosophy expressed in that document ought not to be serving in the position of chief analyst of foreign broadcasts down here in the office of the F. C. C. or in any other governmental position as an employee. Let him submit his advocacy to the people and run for Congress and then he will learn the attitude of our people.

I do not have time to read this whole document. May I say to you that the committee which you appointed has done so. I have gone through it. He admitted fully that he fully believed in the statements contained in this dissertation on the organization of this group called New America in 1934. However, he said that in the latter part of the thirties, "I changed my mind. I no longer believe that philosophy."

When I read section after section out of this statement which was so repugnant to the membership of the committee that I know all of us were very much concerned, I said, in substance, "Dr. Watson, you believed that in 1934 when you approved that article or when you collaborated in writing it, did you not?"

"Yes."

"You say you have now changed your mind. When did you change your mind?"

"Why, I did it in the latter part of the thirties."

"Well, what evidence have we that you have changed your mind?"

He said, "Some talks to some of my classes up at Columbia University."

"Have you ever written an article for any newspaper; have you ever written an article for any magazine; have you ever made any public statement at any place, disavowing that philosophy, a plain, simple, Communist philosophy?"

He said, "No; I did not think it was necessary."

I find no concrete evidence of any change of heart except his bare statement before the committee. Let us look further——

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. My colleagues, the evidence disclosed that he had been taking college professors and students on trips over to Europe and making studies over there. In 1933 and in 1936 and in 1937 they visited the countries of Europe to make studies. The last 2 trips they went under the auspices of what they call the Open Road, which we all know was an organization that was designed and set up to get these people over to Russia. So they went to study Russia. There were 30 of them in the party. They went over there for the purpose of looking over the Communist scene in Russia, and to make a study of it. This was in 1937.

When they came back, Goodwin Watson wrote an article and it is titled "We Study the Soviet Union." It was published in the Social Frontier magazine of February 1937. He tells about the wonders and glories of Soviet Russia. He tells of some of the things they found that were not so wonderful and so glorious. But he finally ends up his article with these words—and I want you to listen carefully. This shows the attitude of the man in 1937:

For each of us there were sights which we approved and others we disapproved.

Understand, this fellow has been claiming that these people who are condemning him just take little isolated sentences out of his works. I am going to read the whole paragraph or two paragraphs so that I will not be charged with the same offense:

For each of us there were sights which we approved and others we disapproved, but how about the balance of judgment on the new civilization as a whole? One became skeptical and remained rather unfavorable toward Soviet life. A half dozen who came prepared to find a bad situation had been transferred into warm admirers of the Communist scene. None who came with high expectations had been disappointed. The sum total would be more than 95 percent favorable, influenced by this brief study. We had not always been comfortable, but we had been aware of a society directed toward the sustenance of major human values.

One question lingered in our minds. Anna Louise Strong had stated it for us. "I wish I knew," she said, "whether it will take longer for the Russians to develop efficiency or for America to develop socialism. Then I'd know where I want to live."

What did he mean by that? Is it not perfectly clear to anybody? Oh, how he tried to flounder around when I cross-examined him upon that statement.

How he tried to claim that he was merely quoting a statement of Anna Louise Strong, but he finally had to admit that any sensible person reading that article could come to but one conclusion, and that was that he was stating the feelings of the entire group of 30 who went there and that it was the consensus of the group that they were concerned as to whether it would take longer for Russia to develop efficiency or for America to develop socialism, and upon that answer depended the question as to where they wanted to live. Is it not perfectly clear that his mind was made up; that unless we developed his brand of socialism, in the event Russia developed efficiency, he would prefer to live there? I say to him and all of his associates of similar mind: Go to Russia and enjoy life there and allow those who believe in our system to perfect and run America.

This fellow that was in that frame of mind in 1937 is down here analyzing foreign broadcasts for you and turning them over to the Army and the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. In 1938 he made a speech promoting world citizenship through social relations. That is the title of it. I have the whole speech; I have read it carefully, but I have not time now to read all of it to you. In this speech he is very critical of the United States Government. He says:

So long as power to control business and government rests with our present small, reactionary ruling class—

Does that sound much like the speech that was made by the gentleman from New York a little while ago? Almost the identical language, almost the identical philosophy. It runs through all these speeches; they all use the same language:

So long as the power to control business and government rests with our present small, reactionary ruling class we must expect enormous discrepancy between ideals of world peace and actions taken far more with a view to profits. Our Government and that of France and England may pretend to be democracies, but they are in truth plutocracies. The foreign policies of plutocracies will seldom advance peace and world cooperation. In the present economic crisis, foreign policies of all capitalistic nations will necessarily be far more concerned to keep plutocrats in power than to build world democracy.

That is the speech he was making in 1938.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. Briefly.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman please explain to the House why it is that the committee reached a decision to withhold from the membership a transcript of the evidence taken by that committee involving the future welfare of these people? Why has that been suppressed?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not know as there has been any suppression of it at all.

Mr. COOLEY. Why has it not been made available?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not know any reason why there should be any suppression. I have it here, and if the gentleman from North Carolina or any Member interested will come down I will show it to him.

Mr. CELLER. Was it printed?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further; I do not intend to have my time taken up on collateral issues.

Mr. COOLEY. That is not a collateral issue at all.

Mr. KEEFE. This House appointed these members of this committee to serve in a semijudicial capacity. The membership expected them to hear the testimony and to make a recommendation to this Congress. We have proceeded absolutely in accordance with the instructions given us in the resolution you passed. May I say to the gentleman and to the House that much of the material furnished by the F. B. I. and Army and Navy Intelligence was regarded as highly confidential and we assured them that if we used it in our examinations it would not be made a public record.

I have given just three or four illustrations of the attitude of this man Watson. I have not time to go through the whole situation, but let me call your attention to the fact that from 1932 right on down through we find Goodwin Watson hobnobbing with the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom, one of the organizations which he himself said membership in by one of his associates, Prof. Franz Boaz, of Columbia University, led him to the belief that Professor Boaz was a "fellow traveler." We find him endorsing and sponsoring the American Congress for Peace and Democracy, another Communist-front organization.

We find him sponsoring what is called the American Investors' Union, Inc., another one of these fringe Communist outfits. We find him sponsoring the aims and objectives of the American League for Peace and Democracy, which is also an organization that has been condemned by the Attorney General and the Interdepartmental Committee. We find him endorsing the principles of the American Student Union, another Communist front organization. We find him affiliated and associated with the American Youth Congress. We find that this gentleman was associated with and one of the sponsors of Pan-American Democracy, another Communist organization; all down through the years, organization after organization, committee after committee. He denied membership in many of them. He admitted membership in three of the organizations. He denied that he had been a member, but he served on sponsoring committees. He, for instance, sponsored a plays-for-children contest put on by the International Workers' Order, a well-known Communist organization. We find him in association and affiliation right up to the time he came on the Federal pay roll with that type of organization. Oh, yes; he belonged to many reputable organizations also.

All I have to say, Mr. Chairman, is this: You can find little faults in connection with this matter if you so desire; you can ask questions why was not this testimony all printed. Perhaps it should have been; in any event, it was not, and for what the committee considered sufficient reasons, but do you think that any member of your committee would come here and willfully suppress any information? Is there any Member of this House who thinks we are suppressing any evidence? Are you not convinced that this committee is giving you the truth and the facts which we found?

Let me tell you something else. We had this man before us. I have tried many lawsuits; I have argued many cases from the printed brief in the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court never has before it the witness to observe his candor or lack of candor.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. They never have before it the witness to observe the fairness or lack of fairness of the witness. But we had these people before us.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is a member of the committee.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman want to ask a question?

Mr. COOLEY. I want to ask a question.

Mr. KEEFE. All right. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOLEY. Of course, the gentleman is a distinguished lawyer. In presenting cases to an appellate court the gentleman well knows that every case carries with it a transcript, which is a statement of facts upon which the conclusions of law are based.

Mr. KEEFE. Let us not get into such an argument as that. The distinguished gentleman who has addressed me has confidence, does he, in the committee which was appointed?

Mr. COOLEY. Almost, but not quite, implicit confidence.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman believe the statements that have been made by the members of that committee on this floor?

Mr. COOLEY. I accept the gentleman's statement and the statement of every member of the committee.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman believe the statements that have been made as to the proof that has been presented thus far? And if so, does the gentleman want to keep that kind of an individual on the pay roll of the Government?

Mr. COOLEY. My answer is this: I am not willing to sit in judgment upon the welfare and the future of these men based upon evidence, all of which has been completely suppressed by this committee, none of which has been made available to the Members of this House until a moment ago, when the gentleman offered me a transcript to read when he knows I am faced with having to vote within 5 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the gentleman, he has had an opportunity to know these facts for years. These men have been charged by the chairman of the Dies committee, and the evidence has all been printed, and if the gentleman wanted the facts, they were available to him. I do not know whether he supported the Dies committee or not.

Mr. COOLEY. I have consistently supported it.

Mr. KEEFE. Why did the gentleman support it?

Mr. COOLEY. Because I believed that the people on the pay roll of the Government who entertained subversive intentions should be investigated and exposed, but I did not understand when this House created the present committee it intended for that committee to conduct a star-chamber session and to try these people and to convict these people, and then to try to get the House to confirm that conviction without having evidence to support it.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the distinguished gentleman that he is just as much in error as any man has ever been on this floor. This committee has convicted no one. This committee has brought a report to you and you are to judge from that report what your attitude may be. If the gentleman is not convinced by the proofs that have been submitted, then why in the name of God did he vote to continue the large appropriation for the Dies committee? Why continue to spend money to gather facts which you do not intend to use? In my humble judgment, the gentleman is searching hard for justification for his present attitude.

Mr. COOLEY. Is this the report to which the gentleman refers?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina just complained because there was no transcript of evidence. However, he voted for the National Labor Relations Act, which distinctly provides that on appeal the appellate court and the Supreme Court must accept the findings of the National Labor Relations Board without any transcript.

Mr. COOLEY. I did not agree to accept the findings of this committee on that proposition.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to join in what the gentleman from North Carolina said. We all have the utmost confidence in this committee.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Personally I feel this testimony should have been taken by a reporter.

Mr. KEEFE. I do not care for any observations.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And the testimony should have been written and submitted to the Members of the House.

Mr. KEEFE. I am one of those who feels this committee is being killed and poisoned by faint praise. I do not care for that sort of praise from the gentleman from Montana or anyone else. May I say to my friend, however, that all of the testimony was under oath and taken by a reporter and I have the transcript before the House today. The reasons for not publishing the same have heretofore been given.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURPHY. When I asked the gentleman to yield before I wanted him to discuss the facts. I hope someone else will give us some more facts about this man Dodd. I want to hear the facts about Dodd.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to my distinguished friend that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] will discuss Dodd. When he does I am sure he will give you facts.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think any Member who was sufficiently interested to approach any of the members of this committee could have done so and could have discussed this matter. I did so in order to try to find out the facts and I found a disposition on the part of the committee to disclose the facts completely when I talked to several of the members.

Mr. KEEFE. If we had published all of these facts and scattered them to the world, we would have been condemned by the same people who are now condemning us for not publishing the facts. They would say that we were blackening the character and reputation of these fine men by publishing this testimony. Any member who really wanted to know the facts has had ample time and opportunity to obtain them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] the remainder of the time on this side.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I recognize this afternoon the difficulty of this amendment. I am not particularly happy over my position here today. I realize that it was not so long ago that a magazine of this country was referring to me as a liberal, and now I find myself referred to as a "witch hunter." That is a designation that I do not like.

I want to say to the Members of this House that my position on this Kerr committee was not sought by me. I can say to you in all candor that I have sat through many of the sessions of that committee against the advice of a physician. I have not enjoyed that. But I felt the mandate from the Speaker and from the chairman of the Appropriations Committee required this, insofar as I could comply.

I desire in my own way to report to the House this afternoon, not as a lawyer, which I am not; not as a member of some intellectual group, which I do not claim to be, but as the son of a Swedish immigrant who enjoyed some of the blessings of this land of ours and as one who wants to keep available to coming generations of Americans the same opportunities that my father found here.

There has been a lot said today as to why the hearings of this committee were not published. Again, in my own way and without the blessing of the committee, I want to make my own explanation to you.

This committee had before it confidential and secret information supplied to it by the Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. If we could have obtained permission to have printed every bit of that testimony, I would have been glad for it all to have been printed, but I submit to you it was not fair nor just nor wise to take only the materials that were presented to us as the explanation of these accused persons and print that and not print the whole story. I want to remind you also, when you talk about our printing something, that the investigation of the Dies committee has been printed and every Member of the House who was interested in the proceedings on un-American activities had the right to read the Dies reports from cover to cover.

I want to suggest further that a Senate committee had a prolonged investigation of Goodwin Watson. My friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] took the trouble to read it. I took the trouble to read it. If Members of this House wanted to find out about Goodwin Watson before the case reaches the "supreme court," as this House has been called, they have had access to those reports.

Do not blame the Kerr committee. Four different groups have investigated most of these people, and if you had wanted the record of what they have been doing, our records could have been made available to you individually. I saw in the Chamber a moment ago the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. He came to me and said that he was not too happy over some of these things, and I recognized that because there is not a finer, more lovable, more conscientious Member of this House than that gentleman. I said to him that there was not a bit of testimony before our committee that he could not take and examine. If the gentleman from California would contradict or deny that statement, I would resign my membership in this House.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman does not mean to say that I would deny the statement.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. No; I said that, by way of supporting what I have said, because I have so much faith in the gentleman, I know that it could not have happened that the gentleman would deny it.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to the fact that at one time he came to a member of the committee, and I plead guilty as being the member of the committee, I believe, and at that time I tried to tell him what we had to face and what we had to consider.

Other Members—many of them—have come to me, and what I have tried to say to them is that there were certain of these persons that I could not believe should be removed from the Federal pay roll, but that there are other cases where the testimony showed they should be removed.

I want to deal with one of those cases, but I want to deal first, if I may, with one or two questions. The question was raised by the very fine gentleman from Alabama, one whom all of us love, as to why we could not have merely referred this to the House. I would have been delighted to do that, but unfortunately the House adopted a resolution which says that any legislation approved by the committee as a result of this resolution may be incorporated in any general or special appropriations measure as an amendment to any such measure. That is why a mere report is not enough.

I, like other members of the committee, feel our job was not done until we had completed the duty which the House had assigned to us. There was no misunderstanding as to what we were to do; it was clearly explained to the House.

When this resolution was before the House on February 9 many people spoke; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], both the majority and minority leaders, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], whom I so greatly admire.

May I read to you what that very splendid constitutional lawyer said on that day, and I am reading now from the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]:

This resolution—

He refers to the resolution under which we bring this proceeding—

This resolution gives us a chance to do legally what Mr. DIES advocates. That is, to base separation from the pay roll upon evidence showing membership in, or association with, subversive organizations.

The adoption of this resolution will change the rule, as we have a perfect right to do. Its passage would relieve us of the high degree of proof now required. Adopt this resolution, and instead of being required to prove advocacy of or membership in an organization that advocates the overthrow of our Government, it will then be required to prove that an employee is unfit to continue in such employment by reason of his present association or membership or past association or membership in or with organizations whose aims or purposes are or have been subversive of the Government of the United States.

If you wish to liberalize the rule so as to assure our Government far greater protection from the employment of the disloyal and the unfit, pass this resolution, and be fair.

I submit to you that on the basis of those instructions we had a right to proceed as we did; moreover, we had a duty to proceed as we did.

One of the gentlemen asked that we may hear something about Mr. Dodd. I am not particularly pleased to make comments on anybody in this RECORD, but I am quite willing to do it upon request. Let me suggest to you first of all that we had some other people before our committee. Mr. Fahy, for example, was one of them. The committee found as to Mr. Fahy:

The committee has received testimonials as to the ability and character of Mr. Fahy from an exceptional variety of persons, and your committee is of the opinion that Mr. Fahy has not been guilty of any subversive activity, but that on the contrary he has and is rendering to the Government a loyal service in the handling of the vexatious economic and supply problems of the Territories of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Does that sound like witch hunting?

We had before us Mr. Goldschmidt, and we found as to him, and I quote:

There is no evidence tending to show any subversive activity on the part of this employee at any time during his entire life, but, on the contrary, evidence shows that this employee is a patriotic, loyal, hard-working American and that he is now and has been rendering to the United States Government a high degree of service, and that he is a young man of the highest integrity and standing among his fellows and friends.

Does that sound like witch hunting? No; we were trying to go through these cases and pick out the people who deserve to be criticized and the people who deserve to be praised. Bear in mind that 38 people are on this Dies list. One of the things this Congress is trying to do is give a certificate of character to those people who we believe do not belong in this list, as well as to point the finger at those that we do believe belong in it.

Now as to Mr. Dodd. On April 21 Mr. Dodd issued a statement in which he claimed to be "shocked at the nature of the duties which this committee takes upon itself," referring to the Kerr committee, and said of this committee, "It in effect sets up a star chamber procedure which places upon a black list members of the Government, and, without any attempt to determine the facts, makes it impossible for such employees to ever hold a Government job."

Let us see what Mr. Dodd told the Kerr committee on the 13th day of April under oath. At the conclusion of a long hearing in which every effort was made to determine the facts, he was asked by the chairman whether he had any further statements that he wanted to make, and he replied in the negative. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] then said:

Do you believe that you have had a fair opportunity to present your views and opinions as to these charges that have been made with reference to you?

Mr. Dodd replied:

Yes, I feel so.

Mr. KEEFE continued:

You have been fairly and reasonably treated by this committee?

Mr. Dodd replied:

Certainly.

Then the gentleman from Wisconsin asked:

And have been given every opportunity to make any statement that you desired to make?

Mr. Dodd replied:

Yes, sir.

Does that sound like a star-chamber proceeding without any effort to determine the facts? The answer is, of course, that the newspaper release reports Mr. Dodd under fire and the testimony I have read is Mr. Dodd under oath.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURPHY. On page 7 of the committee's report it is stated that the particular reason the committee was against Mr. Dodd was "his admitted statement quoted in the World Hails the Twentieth Anniversary of the Soviet Union." What was the statement? What I want to know is the facts.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Let me move on, first.

The testimony of Mr. Dodd given before our committee is that he was an employee of the American League for Peace and Democracy, an organization which the Department of Justice has found to be within the mandate of our public law that was passed by the Seventy-seventh Congress to investigate these very things. There is a man who not only was a member of it but who was its very employee, going around and trying to get other people in trouble as he was himself in trouble. We asked if he was a member of it or was an employee of it and he said, "I was both." He resigned from it in March in order to go to Virginia to run for Congress. He testified before the committee that he did not resign from it because he did not believe in its policies but because he did not want to be identified with it while he ran for public office.

He testified he was a member of the Washington Bookshop, that he knew that organization had been branded by the Attorney General of the United States as a front organization for subversive movements, but he did not think it was subversive. He told us he was still a member of it, in spite of the fact that the Attorney General had designated it as a front organization; that he had spoken before it, and that he seemed well satisfied with his whole connection with it.

He testified before the committee that he had spoken under the auspices of the American Friends of the Soviet Union, that he had spoken under the auspices of Medical Aid for China, an off-shoot of the American League for Peace and Democracy, that he spoke for the American Friends of the Chinese People, and that he gave a cocktail party for Harry Bridges at the time that the Attorney General had deportation proceedings pending against Bridges.

The committee was naturally interested in the fact that Mr. Dodd testified to us that Harry Bridges came to his apartment for a cocktail party and conference in 1940 or 1941 at a time when the Attorney General of the United States was recommending that Bridges be deported; that he knew there were deportation charges against Harry Bridges but they were not discussed that afternoon. He told us that the bills for the party were paid by the Harry Bridges defense committee.

To go on, he told us that he lectured under the auspices of the North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy. He admitted that he permitted his name as a sponsor of the conference on pan-American democracy which was also found by the Attorney General to be within the scope of Public Law 135 and Public Law 644 of the Seventy-seventh Congress. He wrote for Champion magazine which has been listed as under Communist influence.

Now I want to deal just a little with an answer which James Lawrence Fly, Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, filed with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] in the early part of this year. When asked about this Mr. Dodd replied to us that he had a copy of it but was not very familiar with it. Subsequently he told the committee that the statements that Mr. Fly made were made on what he told Mr. Fly, so that he, Dodd, was the real author of the letter.

In Mr. Fly's letter to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] a statement is made that at a meeting in February 1938 which was an Aid to China rally sponsored by the American League for Peace and Democracy, the William E. Dodd whom the Dies committee had charged as being a sponsor on that occasion was not William E. Dodd, Jr., employed by the Federal Communications Committee, but his father. When Mr. Dodd was questioned by the Federal Bureau of Investigation he included in his testimony the same typewritten statement and initialed it, saying that the person who made the speech was not William Dodd, Jr., but his father and yet, under questioning before the Kerr committee as to whether the speaker was young Dodd or his father, he replied "That was undoubtedly me." I maintain that it was wrong for any son to try to hold his position in the Government by throwing on to his dead father the reputation for his own acts.

Again take the Community Council for the Defense of American Democracy. In answer to questions as to this, Mr. Dodd told our committee, and I quote him directly, "I know that Mr. Fly said it was my father." He might have added that he told the F. B. I. it was his father. He might have added that he told Mr. Fly that it was his father, but when he got before our committee under oath and said "I know that Mr. Fly said it was my father" and was asked, "But you do not subscribe to that here?" he replied, "I would not say that I did not speak for it." Then he was asked, "Do you remember your father speaking for it?" and he replied, "I do not know."

Take another one. This was item 17 in the Fly reply to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and in the F. B. I. memorandum. It referred to a booklet called These Americans Say, issued by the Coordinating Committee to Lift the Embargo and carried a statement by Mr. Dodd. Mr. Fly says the statement was made not by William E. Dodd, Jr., but by his father. Mr. Dodd told us that he gave Mr. Fly this information. He told the F. B. I. on February 24, 1943, that it was his father, but when he was before our committee under oath and was asked whether he himself had written it, he replied: "I might very well have written it because I was in favor of lifting the embargo."

Take item 18 in the Fly response to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. It refers to a publication of November 15, 1938, called News You Don't Get. It related that Mr. Dodd had signed the call to a Conference on Pan-American Democracy. The record should show that the Attorney General has listed the Conference on Pan-American Democracy as one of the organizations having possible subversive activities. The letterhead of that organization lists Mr. Dodd as a sponsor of the conference. Mr. Fly told the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] that it was not William E. Dodd, Jr., but his father. Mr. Dodd told that to Mr. Fly. He told that to the F. B. I. but before our committee he testified that he was identified with that organization, that he is now identified with it, and when he was asked specifically whether he or his father signed the publication he replied: "I don't know". The next question was: "You could not say specifically?" His answer was "No". Yet he could state to the F. B. I. that it was his father, and Mr. Fly could state that to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Let us go to item 23 of Mr. Fly's memorandum to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] which Mr. Dodd filed with the F. B. I. That had to do with an article in the Daily Worker of January 24, 1938, reporting that Mr. Dodd attended a party sponsored by the League of Women Shoppers espousing a boycott against Japanese goods. The Fly memorandum says "Mr. Dodd did attend this party, which was a fashion show held in the home of former Governor and Mrs. Pinchot of Pennsylvania." Mr. Dodd supplied Mr. Fly with that information. He testified to it before the F. B. I. and when questioned about it under oath by our committee as to his connection with the League of Women Shoppers, he said, and I quote him directly, "I had no connection with that." "None whatever?" And his answer was "No." So he was told that there was mention of this meeting espousing a boycott on Japanese goods. I asked him, "You did not attend that?" He said, "Not that I recall." I told him it was staged at Governor Pinchot's home. He replied, "That was here in Washington. I know it was my father. I recall now specifically."

I hope you get the significance of that. Mr. Fly was willing to pat Mr. Dodd on the back for his foresight in supporting a boycott against Japanese goods. Mr. Dodd patted himself on the back before the F. B. I. as to his sponsorship of this worthy cause, but when he gets under oath, he has to put the credit back where it belonged, to his deceased father who was not able to defend himself in any other way.

So we went back at him and said, "Now, Mr. Dodd, before going further with the list, I would like to remind you that Mr. Fly's reply to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] said you did attend the meeting at Governor Pinchot's place. Previously you said you furnished him with the information. Now you testified that you did not attend the party." Mr. Dodd asked, "Governor Pinchot's?" and received an affirmative answer. He then said, "I did not attend." He was asked if Mr. Fly was then just guilty of a misstatement, and he replied, "I don't know how he could have stated that. There is a possibility of typographical errors." But it was pointed out to him that he had given the description of the party to Mr. Fly which Mr. Fly had put in his answer to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and Dodd commented by saying, "I am sorry, but I was not there."

Now we come to item 24 in the Fly memorandum to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] which sets forth that the New Masses on April 22, 1941, reported that Mr. Dodd had signed the call to the Fourth Congress of the League of American Writers. This League of American Writers has been listed by the Attorney General as one of the organizations found to be within the scope of Public Law 135 and Public Law 644. There are some good Americans who belong to the organization, so the Fly memorandum says "Mr. Dodd did sign this call." He was asked about this under oath before our committee, and he said, "I did not sign; no." So he was asked, "That was your father?", and he replied, "No; my father was dead then." I said to him, "That was April 22, 1941; you did not sign it?" He replied, "No, sir; I did not."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman 4 minutes more.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York. I submit to this House that a man who is as unstable in his recollection of occurrences of events as this, is a very poor person to have on a public pay roll. It was very convenient to blame his father, who was in his grave, but it was hardly what most of us conceive to be proper respect which a son should bear toward his own flesh and blood.

I suggest that Mr. Fly has not done the cause of the Federal Communications Commission any good by passing on to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] such misleading information over his own signature when by the testimony of Mr. Dodd before our committee, Mr. Fly had never talked to Mr. Dodd and had no personal knowledge whatever of what his answer to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] correctly should have been.

I would like further to refer to an additional item which may have no bearing on his connection with subversive organizations but does give us an index as to how valuable an employee he is to the Federal Government. The Federal Communications Commission, through the administrative officer of its Foreign Broadcasts Monitoring Service, Thompson A. Moore, swore on the 29th of June 1942, that William E. Dodd, Jr., was essential to the war effort and on the basis of that the local draft board of Loudoun County, Leesburg, Va., was asked to defer Mr. Dodd and place him in class B-2 as a necessary war worker. On March 29, 1943, he was reclassified as a result of the appeal taken in his case. Mr. Dodd told us and others who investigated him that he was an assistant wire editor for the Foreign Broadcasting Intelligence Service of the Federal Communications Commission. Under examination before our committee he testified that he was doing editorial work. Let me give you his exact words:

> You take broadcasts, summaries of broadcasts, or text of broadcasts made by various radio stations in the world. They come in on paper; carbon copies come in and you have to edit it. In other words, you put in the "the's" and "and's" and divide it up into paragraphs and give it a slug line. It is newspaper work. It is copy editing.

This, my friends, is essential war work for which he should be deferred from the operations of the Selective Service Act in the opinion of the Federal Communications Commission.

So he was asked what newspaper experience he had had in questions like these: "Did you ever work on a city desk?" "No, sir." "Have you ever been a reporter?" "No, sir." "Have you ever been a copy chopper?" "No, sir." "What particular qualifications did you feel you had to be a news editor?" Here is Dodd's answer:

> I was brought into the Federal Communications Commission in the report section. They put out a mimeograph report summarizing German broadcasts; that is, the main news items that are put out on the Berlin radio. There were four or five of us who sat in a room and simply picked out the items which were new each day and threw away the old items. We were simply doing an editing job in the sense that we were making it readable, putting in the's and and's and paragraphing it. We don't change the meaning. It is not the duty of the editorial report section to ever change the meaning of any reports that come in. We quote them directly as they come in over the radio.

Notice the difference in the affidavit to support claim for occupational deferment which was filed for Mr. Dodd. Question 7a requires the Commission to give an accurate and full description of his duties. Here is the wording which they gave:

> Summarizes and analyzes intelligence, military, economic, and political which may be received through foreign short-wave broadcasts giving factual surveys of their overt content; examines and is charged with digesting and evaluating broadcasts; selects and composes bulletins to be issued at shorter than daily intervals.

Now let us ask how honest Mr. Dodd was when he said he had no newspaper experience. In the files of the Government there is confidential information which shows clearly that Mr. Dodd was the publisher of United States Week, a midwestern version of the Daily Worker, which was taken to Milwaukee, Wis., and I quote now directly from the Government files:

> For the express purpose of exploiting the German isolationism in that section.

One of the editors of the paper was Richard O. Boyer, who is now an editor of New Masses, a Communist Party paper.

Mr. Dodd leased an apartment at 231 East Seventy-sixth Street, New York City. The files of your Government contain information as to meetings steadily held in this apartment. When Mr. Dodd leased the apartment he gave as a reference Richard O. Boyer, this editor of the New Masses, and said that his own business address was U. S. Week, Milwaukee, Wis.

May I close by pointing out that in Soviet Russia today there is a quotation from William E. Dodd, Jr., which he admits that he wrote, which reads:

> Twice I have made flying trips to the Soviet Union, and after each one I have left with the feeling that here is a nation which carries the future of our civilization. Here there is hope, justice, and progress. The heroic struggle which the Soviet Union has made for world peace is just beginning to be realized, and other democratic nations are recognizing that her way is the only way to preserve peace.

Those who believe that the Russian Government represents the only way to preserve peace should naturally sustain Mr. Dodd. Those who believe that the United Nations, of which Britain and America are parts, can contribute to the peace of the world by the preservation of their existing governments, will want to sustain the committee.

I submit this man has no place on the Government pay roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has again expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment by Mr. CASE to the amendment offered by Mr. KERR: Line 12, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That this section shall not operate to deprive any such person of payment for services performed as a member of a jury, or as a member of the armed forces of the United States, nor any benefit, pension, or emolument resulting therefrom."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Strike out all of the Kerr committee amendment as amended and insert "SEC. 304. Only the executive branch of the Government may remove any employee in the executive departments, because under the dictum of Myers v. United States the Supreme Court says, 'Removal of executive officials from office is an Executive function, and that the power to remove, like the power to appoint, is part of the Executive power—a conclusion which is confirmed by the Presidential obligation to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.'"

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill, and not in order under rule XXI.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard?

Mr. CELLER. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desire to be heard further?

Mr. TABER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that it is not germane and the point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PATMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2714 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question will be ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Kerr amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called Taber amendment, and also on the amendment respecting subversive activities.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Insert, page 2, after line 25, the following: "Provided, That no part of the funds continued available by this paragraph shall be allotted to or expended for the National Resources Planning Board or the Farm Security Administration or for any of the functions of either said Board or said Administration."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 155, noes 101.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KERR: On page 36, after line 23, insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 304. No part of any appropriation, allocation, or fund (1) which is made available under or pursuant to this act, or (2) which is now, or which is hereafter made, available under or pursuant to any other act, to any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States, shall be used to pay any part of the salary, or other compensation for the personal services, of Goodwin B. Watson, William E. Dodd, Jr., and Robert Morss Lovett: Provided, That this section shall not operate to deprive any such person of payment for leaves of absence or salary, or of any refund or reimbursement, which have accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act: Provided further, That this section shall not operate to deprive any such person of payment for services performed as a member of a jury or as a member of the armed forces of the United States, nor any benefit, pension, or emolument resulting therefrom."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 318, nays 62, answered "present" 1, not voting 51, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Auchincloss for, with Mr. Herter against.

Mr. Miller of Missouri for, with Mr. Cullen against.

Mr. Vinson of Georgia for, with Mrs. Norton against.

Mr. Thomas of New Jersey for, with Mrs. Luce against.

General pairs:

Mr. Fogarty with Mr. Anderson of California.

Mr. Izac with Mrs. Smith of Maine.

Mr. Costello with Mr. Rolph.

Mr. Cochran with Mr. Welch.

Mr. O'Toole with Mr. Woodruff of Michigan.

Mr. Bulwinkle with Mr. Goodwin.

Mr. Clark with Mr. Arnold.

Mr. McGranery with Mr. Maas.

Mr. Dies with Mr. Guyer.

Mr. Boykin with Mr. Judd.

Mr. Worley with Mr. Culkin.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk to the committee may be authorized to correct section numbers in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill just passed may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole at the point I made them and include therein quotations from authorities and certain citations of authorities and other matters.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from the Chicago Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. VOORHIS of California was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with the remarks I made on the bill just passed there may be appended a statement of the Federal Communications Commission. That statement exceeds the quota and I have an estimate from the Public Printer that it will amount to $180. I renew my request notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon Friday, after the conclusion of the legislative business on the Speaker's desk and any other special orders, I may proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DILWEG] is recognized for 20 minutes.

SPORTS IN WAR

Mr. DILWEG. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose today to call your attention to the part sports are playing in our American victory drive—to bring you up to date, perhaps, on how sports must serve all of us as we prosecute the most heroic task ever assigned to the American people.

The point I will make is that sports on the American scene—instead of being curtailed for the duration—should be encouraged on a wider scale, with all of us engaging in some kind of physical activity.

I could preface my remarks by reminding you that we are fighting to preserve the American way of life—and insist that it is the American way of life that will lead us to eventual and complete victory. Sports, I contend, are so much a part of our American way of doing things that to abandon them now—or even curtail them—would work a serious set-back in our drive to victory.

Sports are the backbone of American physical fitness.

All of us today need exercise more than ever before. We are convinced that we must have physical strength and endurance to meet the physical chores assigned to us each day—but more than that, we must have additional strength and endurance to cope with any emergency that will require extra physical endeavor.

The leaders of the armed forces subscribe to this theory of physical development. Our soldiers, sailors, marines, and coast guardsmen must have more than 100 percent physical fitness. They must be 110 to 125 percent physically fit to be ready to carry on beyond the requirements of physical perfection, as we have understood the term in the past.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILWEG. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman now speaking has more right to speak on American athletics than almost anybody in America. For years he played on the Green Bay Packers as end and was All-American professional end for 3 years.

Mr. DILWEG. I thank the gentleman.

We on the civilian front must also be more than 100 percent physically capable, so that we will be ready to meet any emergency.

Now—and I can cite a wealth of authority for this statement—the only way that we can attain a high level of physical strength and endurance is through hard physical work—strenuous exercise that will build muscle structure which will carry the physical load assigned to us—and at the same time give us the agility to better perform our tasks.

It may sound ridiculous on the face of it to say that a man doing what we call hard manual labor today needs exercise after he completes his day's work.

But that happens to be the case, because there is hardly such a thing today as hard work. There is tedious work, of course, but machines have so usurped the drudgery of heavy lifting and other strenuous jobs that even the hardest-working laborer today gets only exercise that develops certain parts of his body, at best.

Total fitness depends upon a totally fit human physical structure. Every part of the body—the hands, the arms, the shoulders, the back, the legs, the feet—must be able to function at prescribed daily tasks without undue fatigue—and have a little left to carry the physical burden of emergency assignments.

Exercise is the answer.

Now, exercise can be work or play.

If we accept it as work, few of us will get all the exercise we need.

If we make our exercise play, it comes in enjoyable doses.

That is where sports come in. Sports are the American way of getting exercise and making it fun.

It follows, then, that America must play harder and oftener right now than ever before.

We must impress upon the American people that it is patriotic to play—since through play we get exercise—and through exercise we attain that physical endurance so necessary in every individual today.

This play serves a dual role. In addition to affording us physical expression, it serves, too, as a change of pace—a release through relaxation — that makes us better fit emotionally, if not mentally, to meet the challenge of our daily tasks and accept new tasks with enthusiasm.

And here is a point I would like to interject. Providing the body is physically sound—that is, if the heart and other organs are not aggravated by disease—an individual cannot overexercise, according to the latest authentic physiological opinions.

Those of us, for example, who have played golf in the past, should play more golf today. We should play harder at golf to utilize the game for its contributions to physical fitness. If we do not play golf, we should find some other physical hobby—some sport, some game—that we will play for enjoyment and from which we will derive physical work.

This theory of physical fitness may be something new to most of us, but it has been practiced by physical trainers for many years. A boxer, using extra heavy gloves, will punch a heavy bag and do grueling road work to develop his wind, his strength, and his endurance to take something extra physically into the ring with him. Track athletes run distances longer than their competitive requirements for the same reason. A baseball player will swing two or three bats before he goes up to hit, knowing that the extra weight will make the single bat he uses at the plate seem much lighter. Football players, engaging in the roughest of all American games, will run laps around the goal posts after formal practice to get that something extra physically.

We in civilian life must profit by the experience of the men in our armed forces and our athletes, who are supermen physically. All of us must take up some physical sport, whether it is golfing, swimming, bowling, handball, wrestling, walking, tennis, softball, horseshoe pitching, or any of scores of games, determining beforehand the condition of our heart and other organs, and choosing a physical hobby, a sport, that befits our age.

We must play hard at that sport every day to reap the full benefits of physical fitness.

My remarks, so far, have been for the adults of this Nation, the folks who have taken the easy way out for a number of years when physical exertion could be sidestepped.

You do not have to tell the American youngster, the lads of elementary school, high school, and college age, to take up sports. Our American youngsters play, and play hard, at games, from which, if the elements of fun, competitive fight, individual expression, and teamwork were removed, would be regarded as the hardest kind of work.

These youngsters must have these games more today than ever before, since participation in these sports gives our American boys plus values that make them the best soldiers and sailors in the world. If you are inclined to doubt this point, ask any of our military leaders on the battle fronts.

Take the American game of football, for example. It is warfare on a friendly scale. The very nature of the game requires physical perfection, physical power that allows the boy to put out just that much more when the chips are down.

And what does the boy get in addition? He develops a will to win that brooks no defeat. He is exposed to strategy which impresses upon him the value of discipline and teamwork and allows him to think for himself in emergency situations which are not covered in the book. He is taught leadership; he learns to take orders; he is urged on by an inspiration to excel individually, to become the best, a champion.

And what is more important, perhaps, that American kids playing football learn to "take it," to "dish it out," as they say on the sports fields, and then come back for more.

Those are the qualities we want in our American fighting men today, and we are getting them through American sports. It is a matter of record that during the last war, when a German officer was killed, the German enlisted man was confused, bewildered, for the lack of leadership. Nothing in his experience taught him to take the initiative—to assume leadership.

On the other hand, if an American officer were killed, there was always someone ready to step out of the ranks and assume intelligent command. Maybe he was a youngster who captained a high-school football team. Maybe he directed the strategy of play on a college basketball floor. Maybe he was a lad who managed a sandlot baseball team.

At any rate, much of the self-reliance of our fighting men in the last war was attributed to their competitive experiences on the sports fields of America.

Therefore, I insist that these American sports which give our youngsters plus values that make them better fighting men must be encouraged on the American scene for the duration. Football, basketball, track and field, baseball, soccer, boxing, wrestling—all other competitive sports—provide the basic training for our American youngsters who are facing call by the armed forces.

And, let me remind you, sport is not asking any favors. College and high-school programs have continued since Pearl Harbor under handicaps resulting from needed war restrictions. Nevertheless, these sports programs have carried on in a vast majority of cases—even though the star college football player is called up by his draft board and even after the high-school star becomes of draft age.

I am confident that we in Washington want them to continue; that we will do all in our power, as it is compatible with the prosecution of a victorious war, to keep those American games that make our youngsters better fighting men.

Part of our job is to impress upon the general public the value of these sports—and more particularly to charge school and college administrations with their responsibility in keeping these games going, even in the face of certain needed restrictions.

Even in peacetime, these sports were working for American victory. They built into our boys qualities that make them superior fighting men today. And, in addition, college football, for example, bought and paid for and developed facilities and leadership that are being used by units of the armed forces today. Hundreds of athletic leaders are now instilling into fighting men the same plus values they gave our boys on the athletic fields. Scores of college athletic plants—gymnasia, field houses, athletic fields, and even academic buildings, paid for in part out of football revenues—are being used to train members of the armed forces.

When I say these sports must remain on the American scene, they must remain not only for their contributions in developing the kind of men we want, they must also remain as spectator sports, for their indispensable contribution to our national morale.

What a concession it would be to the Axis if we were to abolish spectator sports from the American scene. How Germany and Japan—which have kept their sports—would cheer if we abandoned spectator sports. How the Axis propagandists would gloat if they could report that the morale was so low in America—that the Nation was so jittery—that we gave up one of the most popular elements in our American way.

The spectacle of college football games in the fall and major league baseball in the spring, summer, and early fall, are most important parts of our American way. They serve to dramatize American sporting endeavor in general. They give us a chance to glory in the exploits of champions. The same is true of basketball, hockey, horse racing, professional football, golf tournaments, bowling congresses, boxing shows, and other events where the rank and file of sports-conscious America gather to watch stars perform.

College football, major league baseball, bouts between boxing champions, traditional horse races, and other outstanding events belong to the American Nation. High-school sports, minor league baseball, local tournaments in other sports, belong to the community or to a specific section of the country.

Well do I know what football means to my home community in Green Bay and other towns of my district. Football in my section belongs to the corner druggist, the garage mechanic, the butcher, the baker, and even the candlestick maker, if we have any up our way. Football, as well as other sports in my community are the rallying grounds for a wholesome community consciousness, where the war worker, the business executive, the housewife, the school teacher, and others come to relax, to cheer their favorites, to give vent to their emotions, as they jeer the opposition and ballyrag the officials.

Where can you get a better example of a community rallying around a spectator sport than in Brooklyn, where the exploits of the "Beloved Bums" on the baseball diamond are the personal concern of every fan in the most rabid baseball community in America?

Major league baseball, I contend, is an essential industry. So is college football and other spectator sports.

Our chief concern now—our only concern, in fact—is winning this war. To do so we must utilize every ounce of manpower, to direct our manpower resources into channels that will work best for American victory.

I repeat, no sport has asked for favors. If a major league baseball player is eligible for the draft, he goes. There are no "ifs" or "buts." The selective-service board, however, has seen fit to defer scores of baseball men for the same reasons that they have deferred men in other business pursuits.

The question now comes up, What are we going to do with baseball players deferred by selective service? They are specialists in one field of endeavor. Few, if any, are trained to skilled work in war industry. Few, if any, can do work that the bartender, the orchestra leader, the grocery clerk, the barber, could not do just as well.

Believing these statements to be true, I contend that 500 men playing major league baseball—and with draft deferments—can do more good for this country in time of war than the same 500 men could if the national pastime were abandoned and these baseball artists were given menial jobs in some other essential industries.

What does baseball do for America? Well, first of all, it provides an opportunity for hundreds of thousands of war workers to relax in the fresh air and sunshine—and to continue to enjoy something that has been a significant part of American life for almost 100 years.

But more important than that, it provides refreshing newspaper reading for millions of war workers who buy the late afternoon papers at the end of a day's work to get the latest sports results, and who buy the morning paper on the way to work for more recreational reading.

Baseball news is a refreshing balance against the worrisome news that we are fighting a war. War news is "must" reading—it is work. Sports news is refreshment—it is fun.

What holds true for baseball, holds true for all other spectator sports—for colleges and prep football, college and prep basketball, professional football, fights, hockey, horse racing—any sport that commands news attention and accounts of which are read avidly by the American people.

These, I believe, are sound, logical arguments for the maintenance of spectator sports on the American scene, but the strongest argument of all, perhaps, is that men in our fighting forces—men in the fox holes, men who have achieved glorious victory in Africa, men who are battling the Japs to a standstill in the Pacific, awaiting only the day when they will launch the victory offensive, and men who are poised for the victorious invasion of Europe—want spectator sports to continue on the home front and hungrily await news of sports results.

In substantiation of this latter contention, let me read an excerpt from a letter I have just received from England:

Fred Corcoran, of the Red Cross Division, has reported that the "favorite topic of conversation of American soldiers in England is sports."

Now, in conclusion, let me repeat that sports are contributing to American victory. They must remain on the American scene. They must be encouraged rather than curtailed.

Sports are the American way for achieving that physical fitness through exercise, which is a must requirement of everyone of us on the home front today.

Sports, American competitive games, are giving our youngsters basic training—plus values—that make them the greatest fighting men in the world.

Spectator sports are a national tonic, a change of pace, a relief from the more serious aspects of total war.

The sports way is the American way. Let us keep our sports on the American scene for their contributions to American victory.

And let all of us remember that it is patriotic to be fit, patriotic to play and play hard for the physical strength and endurance that will allow us to take our daily physical tasks in stride, with enough in reserve to accept additional physical burdens, when and if necessary.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILWEG. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I should like to congratulate the gentleman on a very thoughtful and comprehensive and informative statement on the sports situation in wartime. Let me add for the benefit of my colleagues that no one can do this more properly than the gentleman who has just addressed us. He is a famous athlete in his own right. He practices what he preaches in that he has preserved to his older years the fine physical fitness which characterized him in his youth. He has also preserved the fine sense of sportsmanhip that he learned on the football field.

Mr. DILWEG. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILWEG. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. I think the gentleman is probably making the best argument that could be made on this subject in that he himself is proving his point by his attitude in Congress. I have noticed the gentleman on the floor of the House at almost every session; I have noticed the physical vigor which he has and which is being applied to his work as Congressman, the fine intelligence which I think most often goes with fine physical fitness.

Let me say also that the district which sent him here is making a real contribution to the work of Congress and to the health of Congress because the gentleman from Wisconsin is a constant attendant at the gymnasium. He is an inspiration to some of us older men who go there to take exercise, and I believe in addition to making his contribution from many other standpoints for the good of the country and his district that he is making a distinct and outstanding contribution to the health of Congress and thereby to the work that Congress does.

Mr. DILWEG. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky. I might add that he did not mention who wins the games down there.

Mr. O'NEAL. I have reason for not mentioning it.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILWEG. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I wish to add my compliment to those extended by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio and the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky and to say that it is with pleasure that I have listened to this address on the subject on which he has spoken.

Mr. DILWEG. I thank the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILWEG. I yield.

Mr. McMURRAY. I should like to add a word to what the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Montana have just said. We in Wisconsin who know LA VERN DILWEG know that he is an outstanding example of all that is best in sports and sportsmanship, and we are mighty proud of him.

Mr. DILWEG. I thank the gentleman very much.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I waived the special order I had for today. I ask unanimous consent that on Wednseday, May 26, I may address the House for 20 minutes after the business on the Speaker's desk has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAAS, for 18 days, on account of official business on behalf of the Naval Affairs Committee.

To Mrs. LUCE (at the request of Mr. MONKIEWICZ), for 4 days, on account of business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our fathers' God, author of liberty, across the struggling years, again and again hast Thou used human voices as the silver trumpets of Thy purposes and decrees. As here this day in this shrine of each patriot's devotion is heard the clarion tones of a great captain of his time, the pillar of a people's hope, we give Thee hearty thanks that Thou hast raised him up for such a time as this. We remember with gratitude that in dark days of crisis and alarm the words of this mighty man of valor—winged words which girdled the earth—dispelled panic and despair; that his phrases have kept men on their feet; that it has been given to him to utter words gushing from the deepest springs of our common language, words of faith, fortitude, memory, hope, pride, humility, terrible as an army with banners, as they have voiced the righteous wrath of outraged peoples and pronounced the sure doom of those who have defiled and blasphemed the holy of holies in the temple of human freedom.

As partners in this crusade to make men free, may Thy blessing rest upon Britain and America, and upon all the global strategy now being planned by the leaders of the two Commonwealths. We thank Thee for our shared ideals of decency, honor, and chivalry, for the roots of our Christian culture reaching deep into the rich soil of the storied island which is the garden whence came the seeds of our own freedom. Through our shared blood and sweat and tears bring us the common victory for the inalienable rights of all men everywhere. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, May 17, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 649) to grant the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska relating to the waters of the Republican River Basin, to make provisions concerning the exercise of Federal jurisdiction as to those waters, to promote flood control in the basin, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 629) to authorize the conveyance of certain public lands in the State of Minnesota to such State for use for park, recreational, or wildlife-refuge purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNYDER, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, Mr. KERR, Mr. MAHON, Mr. POWERS, and Mr. ENGEL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2570) to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. COOPER, Mr. DISNEY, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. REED of New York, and Mr. JENKINS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to adjust titles to lands acquired by the United States which are subject to his administration, custody, or control;

H. R. 128. An act to authorize a per capita payment of $10 to the members of the Santa Clara Pueblo of New Mexico from funds on deposit to their credit in the Treasury of the United States;

H. R. 329. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to incur obligations for the benefit of natives of Alaska in advance of the enactment of legislation making appropriations therefor;

H. R. 1004. An act to relieve newspapers and periodical publications which have voluntarily suspended publication for the duration of the war from payment of second-class application fees upon resumption of publication;

H. R. 1258. An act to name certain locks in the St. Marys River at the falls, Michigan;

H. R. 1396. An act making certain regulations with reference to fertilizers or seeds that may be distributed by agencies of the United States;

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communications, which were referred as indicated:

ESTIMATES AND SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. Doc. No. 44)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia, amounting to $11,628.29, fiscal year 1942 and prior fiscal years, and supplemental estimates of appropriations, fiscal year 1943, amounting to $976,603.41 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT (S. Doc. No. 45)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1943, amounting to $400,000 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following petitions, etc., which were referred as indicated:

A concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Missouri; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"House Concurrent Resolution 10

"Whereas the conscience of the civilized world has been outraged by the continued persecution and extermination of many peoples in the conquered countries of Europe; and

"Whereas at the conclusion of this war a great number of the oppressed and downtrodden people of Europe will find themselves homeless, despoiled, and desperately in need of a refuge to reconstruct their shattered lives; and

"Whereas the Jewish people of Europe are victims of Nazi oppression and attempted extermination, not only in occupied Europe but also within Nazi Germany; and

"Whereas pursuant to the treaties of peace terminating the First World War a mandate was issued and approved by 52 nations, including the United States, for a Jewish national home in Palestine; and

"Whereas this policy was concurred in by a joint resolution adopted unanimously by both Houses of the Congress of the United States on June 30, 1922, and approved by the President on September 21, 1922: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second General Assembly of Missouri (the senate concurring therein) express its most profound sympathy toward the victims of Nazi religious persecution and racial hatred; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge the fullest cooperation of the United States in punishing those responsible for this horrible crime against humanity and to alleviate suffering through an international rescue agency; and be it further

"Resolved, That we favor the continued development of a Jewish national home in Palestine for the absorption of as many Jews as may be required by the urgent need of the Jewish people and the development there of a Jewish commonwealth as an integral part of the new democratic world order in accordance with the principles for which the United Nations are now fighting; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the President of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"Approved May 12, 1943, at 11:46 a. m.

"FORREST C. DONNELL,
"Governor."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Texas; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"House Concurrent Resolution 85

"Whereas the persecution and attempted extermination of the Jews in occupied Europe by Nazi Germany have outraged the conscience of the civilized world; and

"Whereas on the basis of authentic information in the hands of the United States Department of State, at least 2,000,000 Jews have been ruthlessly annihilated, and the remainder of the Jewish communities in Europe stand in immediate danger of similar extermination unless prompt action is taken by the United Nations to provide havens of refuge for them; and

"Whereas tens of thousands of Jews are stranded in European ports desperately seeking rescue; and

"Whereas the Balfour Declaration of November 2, 1917, guaranteeing the establishment of a Jewish National Homeland in Palestine was approved by 52 nations, including the United States, and incorporated into the treaties of peace terminating the First World War; and

"Whereas this policy was concurred in by a joint resolution adopted by both Houses of the Congress of the United States on June 30, 1922, and approved by the President on September 21, 1922, and implemented by the Anglo-American treaty of December 3, 1924: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we express our most profound sympathy toward the victims of Nazi religious persecution and racial hatred; and be it further

"Resolved, That the United Nations be urged to take steps to find even temporary havens of refuge, through an international rescue agency, for those homeless and hounded Jews who can be rescued immediately; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge that all barriers on Jewish immigration into Palestine be now removed so that those Jews who can find escape from Axis-dominated Europe have permanent haven in the land of Israel in their urgent need; and we view with favor the absorption of all Jews into Palestine after the war who need or desire to go there, not only as an act of justice to the Jewish people, but as an integral part of a new democratic world order in which every people shall have the right to self-government and self-determination in accordance with the principles for which we now fight; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to the British Embassy in Washington for transmission to the proper authorities in London.

"Approved April 8, 1943.

"COOKE R. STEVENSON,
"Governor."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Immigration:

"House Concurrent Resolution 42

"Whereas Peter Henry Buck, for many years an honored resident of Honolulu, T. H., a British subject, part white and part Polynesian, is in every way qualified for American citizenship except that he is ineligible for naturalization under presently existing law; and

"Whereas said Peter Henry Buck is thoroughly imbued with the principles of democracy, is attached to the Constitution of the United States, and is desirous and ambitious to become a citizen of the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be earnestly and respectfully requested to enact a law naturalizing the said Peter Henry Buck, and conferring American citizenship upon him; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Delegate in Congress for Hawaii."

Two concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 20

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended, to permit the commission to grant certain licenses

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-second Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby requested to amend section 207 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended, by adding thereto a new paragraph to be designated (c), which shall read as follows:

"'(c) The commission is also authorized to grant licenses to churches, hospitals, public schools, and stores (the latter to be owned by lessees or by organizations formed and controlled by said lessees) for lots within the district in which agricultural lands are leased under the provisions of this section'; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii."

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 14

"Concurrent resolution declaring that the Territory of Hawaii shall be made a State, and requesting and urging the Congress of the United States of America to pass an enabling act authorizing the people of the Territory of Hawaii to form a constitution and State government to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States

"Whereas the Territory of Hawaii is an integral part of the United States of America and for a long period of years has demonstrated its ability to govern itself; and

"Whereas no less an authority than the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, has given public recognition of the qualities of Hawaii's citizens, saying in an interview to the press in Washington that the administration has full confidence in the ability of the citizens of Hawaii to regulate their civil affairs in closest harmony with military requirements and continue to bear proudly the responsibilities of their geographical location; and

"Whereas the population and wealth of the Territory exceeds that of several of the States of the Union; and

"Whereas the people of the Territory of Hawaii contribute in income taxes to the Federal Government a larger amount than many of the States of the Union; and

"Whereas the people of the Territory desire to participate in the Government of the United States freely, fully, and loyally as a sovereign State: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the people of the Territory of Hawaii desire that said Territory shall become a State and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;

"That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, requested and urged to pass an act enabling the people of the Territory of Hawaii to form a constitution and State government to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States."

A resolution of the Board of Supervisors for the County of Hawaii, T. H., endorsing the senate concurrent resolution adopted by the Senate of the Twenty-second Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, requesting the Congress to modify the naturalization laws so as to provide machinery whereby Filipinos may become citizens of the United States by naturalization; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

REPORT OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE—INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, for the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], from the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably, with amendments, House bill 1762, making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 247) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, also for the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in this connection, in accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to House bill H. R. 1762, the independent offices appropriation bill, which has just been reported, certain amendments, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments above referred to by Mr. McKELLAR are as follows:

On page 32, in line 24, after the figures, insert the following: ": Provided, That the salary of the Assistant Comptroller General shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum effective on the date of enactment of this act, so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

And on page 42, in line 25, before the period, insert ": Provided further, That the Administrator may, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transfer to this authorization or to an authorization of a constituent unit from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units or the Office of the Administrator of the National Housing Agency such additional sums as represent a consolidation in the Office of the Administrator or in a constituent unit of any of the administrative functions of the National Housing Agency; but no such transfer of funds shall be made unless the consolidation will result in a reduction in manpower and a savings in administrative expenses, which savings shall not be used for administrative expenses but instead shall be returned to or remain in the funds from which administrative expenses are drawn under this authorization."

Mr. McKELLAR (for Mr. GLASS) also submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 1762, the independent offices appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of amendments referred to, see the foregoing notice and amendments.)

REPORTS ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

FEDERAL GRANTS IN AID OF TRAINING OF NURSES—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, House bill 2664 to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes, came over from the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on Commerce. As indicated, this is the nurses' training bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative FRANCES P. BOLTON.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] introduced a companion bill in the Senate, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Hearings have been held on the Senate bill, and the committee has acted upon it. I have talked with the Senator from North Carolina, who is the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and he asked me to request that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 2664, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the change of reference will be made as requested by the Senator from Utah.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. MALONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.
